TO THE RIGHT HONO.
 RABLE SIR FRANCIS WALSINGHAM Knight, Principall Secretarie to her Maiestie, Chancellor of the Duchie of Lancaster, and one of her Maiesties most hon ourable Priuie Councill.

RIGHT Honorable, I do remember that being a youth, and one of her Maiesties scholars at Westminster that fruitfull nurserie, it was my happe to visit the chamber of M. Richard Hakluyt my cofin, a Gentleman of the Middle Temple, well knowen vnto you, at a time when I found lying open vpon his boord certeine bookes of Cosmographie, with an vniuersall Mappe: he seing me somewhat curious in the view therof, began to instruct my ignorance, by shewing me the diuision of the earth into three parts after the olde account, and then according to the latter, & better distribution, into more: he pointed with his wand to all the knowen Seas, Gulfs, Bayes, Straights, Capes, Riuers, Empires, Kingdomes, Dukedomes, and Territories of ech part, with declaration also of their speciall commodities, & particular wants, which by the benefit of traffike, & entercourse of merchants, are plentifully supplied. From the Mappe he brought me to the Bible, and turning to the 107 Psalme, directed mee to the 23 & 24 verses, where I read, that they which go downe to the sea in ships, and occupy by the great waters, they see the works of the Lord, and his woonders in the deepe, &c. Which words of the Prophet together with my cousins discourse (things of high and rare delight to my yong nature) tooke in me so deepe an impression, that I constantly resolued, if euer I were preferred to the Vniuersity, where better time, and more conuenient place might be ministred for these studies, I would by Gods assistance prosecute that knowledge and kinde of literature, the doores whereof (after a sort) were so happily opened before me.

According to which my resolution, when, not long after, I was remoued to Christ-church in Oxford, my exercises of duty first performed, I fell to my intended course, and by degrees read ouer whatsoever printed or written discoueries and voyages I found extant either in the Greeke, Latine, Italian, Spanish, Portugall, French, or English languages, and in my publike lectures was the first, that produced and shewed both the olde imperfectly composed, and the new lately reformed Mappes, Globes, Spheares, and other instruments of this Art for demonstration in the common schooles, to the singular pleasure, and generall contentment of my auditory. In continuance of time, and by reason principally of my insight in this study, I grew familiarly acquainted with the chiefeft Captaines at sea, the greatest Merchants, and the best Mariners of our nation: by which meanes hauing gotten somewhat more then common knowledge, I passed at length the narrow seas into France with sir Edward Stafford, her Maiesties carefull and discreet Ligier, where during my five yeeres aboat with him in his dangerous and chargeable residencie in her Highnes seruice, I both heard in speech, and read in books other nations miraculously extolled for their discoueries and notable enterprises by sea, but the English of all others for their sluggish security, and continuall neglect of the like attempts especially pecially in so long and happy a time of peace, either ignominiously reported, or exceedingly condemned: which singular opportunity, if some other people our neighbors had bene blessed with, their protestations are often and vehement, they would farre otherwise haue vsed. And that the truth and euidence hecrof may better appeare, these are the very words of Popiliniere in his booke called L'Admiral de France, and printed at Paris. Fol. 73. pag. 1. 2. The occasion of his speeche is the commendation of the Rhodians, who being (as we are) Islanders, were excellent in nauigation, whereupon he woondereth much that the English should not surpass in that qualitie, in this sort: Ce qui m'a fait autrefois rechercher les occasions, qui empeschent, que les Anglois, qui ont d'esprit de moyens, & valent assez, pour s'acquies un grand honneur parmi tous les Chrestiens, ne se font plus valoir sur l'element qui leur est, & doit estre plus naturel qu'à autres peuples: qui leur doiuent ceder en la structure, accomodement & police de nauires: comme i'ay veu en plusieurs endroits parmi eux. Thus both hearing, and reading the obloquie of our nation, and finding few or none of our owne men able to replie heerin: and further, not seeing any man to haue care to recōmend to the world, the industrious labors, and painefull trauels of our countrey men: for stopping the mouthes of the reprochers, my selfe being the last winter returned from France with the honorable the Lady Sheffield, for her passing good behauior highly esteemed in all the French court, determined notwithstanding all difficulties, to vndertake the burden of that worke wherin all others pretended either ignorance, or lacke of leasure, or want of sufficient argument, whereas (to speake truely) the huge toile, and the small profit to insue, were the chiefe causes of the refusal. I call the worke a burden, in consideration that these voyages lay so disperfed, scattered, and hidden in seuerall hucksters hands, that I now woonder at my selfe, to see how I was able to endure the delayes, curiosity, and backwardnesse of many from whom I was to receiue my originals: so that I haue iust cause to make that complaint of the maliciousnes of diuers in our time, which Plinie made of the men of his age: At nos elaborata ijs abscondere atq; supprimere cupimus, & fraudare vitam etiam alienis bonis, &c.

cap. 1. Naturalis

To harpe no longer vpon this string, & to speake a word of that iust commendation which our nation doe indeed deserue: it can not be denied, but as in all former ages, they haue bene men full of actiuity, stirrers abroad, and searchers of the remote parts of the world, so in this most famous and peerlesse gouernement of her most excellent Maiesty, her subiects through the speciall assistance, and blessing of God, in searching the most opposite corners and quarters of the world, and to speake plainly, in compassing the vaste globe of the earth more then once, haue excelled all the nations and people of the earth. For, which of the kings of this land before her Maiesty, had theyr banners euer seene in the Caspian sea? which of them hath euer dealt with the Emperour of Persia, as her Maiesty hath done, and obtained for her merchants large & louing priuileges? who euer saw before this regiment, an English Ligier in the stately porch of the Grand Signor at Constantinople? who euer found English Consuls & Agents at Tripolis in Syria, at Aleppo, at Babylon, at Balsara, and which is more, who euer heard of Englishman at Goa before now? what English shippes did heerebefore euer anker in the mighty riuer of Plate? passe and repasse the vnpassable (in former opinion) straight of Magellan, range along the coast of Chili, Peru, and all the backside of Noua Hispania, further then any Christian euer passed, trauers the mighty bredth of the South sea, land vpon the Luzones in despight of the enemy, enter into alliance, amity, and traffike with the princes of the Moluccas, & the Isle of Iaua, double the famous Cape of Bona Speranza, arriue at the Isle of Santa Helena, & last of al returne home most richly ladē with the commodities modities of China, as the subjects of this now flourishing monarchy have done?

Lucius Florus in the very end of his historic de gestis Romanorum recordeth as a wonderfull miracle, that the Seres, (which I take to be the people of Cathay, or China) sent Ambassadors to Rome, to intreate friendship, as moued with the fame of the maiesty of the Roman Empire. And haue not we as good cause to admire, that the Kings of the Moluccas, and Iana maior, haue desired the fauour of her maiestic, and the commerce & traffike of her people? Is it not as strange that the borne naturalls of Japan, and the Philippinaes are here to be seene, agreeing with our climate, speaking our language, and informing vs of the state of their Easterne habitations? For mine owne part, I take it as a pledge of Gods further fauour both vnto vs and them: to them especially, vnto whose doores I doubt not in time shalbe by vs caried the incomparable treasure of the trueth of Christianity, and of the Gospell, vvhile vve vlc and exercise common trade with their marchants. I must confesse to haue read in the excellent history intituled Origines of Ianmes Goropius, a testimonie of king Henrie the viij. a prince of noble memory, vvhose intention vvas once, if death had not preuented him, to haue done some singular thing in this case: vvhose vvords speaking of his dealing to that end with himselfe, he being a stranger, & his history rare, I thought good in this place verbatim to record: Ante viginti & plus eo annos ab Henrico <sup>124 n<sup>o</sup> Goropij</sup> Kncuetto Equite Anglo nomine Regis Henrici arram accepti, qua conuenerat, Regio <sup>Recens originu</sup> sumptu me totam Asiam, quoad Turcorum & Persarum Regum commendationes, & <sup>lib. 5 pag. 494.</sup> legationes admitterentur, peragraturum. Ab his enim duobus Asiae principibus facile se impetraturum sperabat, vt non solum tunc mihi per ipsorum fines liceret ire, sed vt commendatione etiam ipsorum ad confinia quoque daretur penetrare. Sumptus quidem non exiguus erat futurus, sed tanta erat principi cognoscendi auiditas, vt nullis pecunijs ad hoc iter necessarijs se diceret parsurum. O Dignum Regia Maestate animum, O me felicem, si Deus non ante & Kneuetum & Regem abskulisset, quam reuersus ab hac peregrinatione fuissim, &c. But as the purpose of Dauid the king to builde a house and temple to God was accepted, although Salomon performed it: so I make no question, but that the zeale in this matter of the aforesaid most renowned prince may seeme no lesse worthy (in his kinde) of acceptance, although referred for the person of our Salomon her gracious Maiesty, whome I feare not to pronounce to haue receiued the same Heroicall spirit, and most honorable disposition, as an inheritance from her famous father.

Now whereas I haue alwayes noted your wisdome to haue had a speciall care of the honor of her Maiesty, the good reputation of our country, & the aduancing of nauigation, the very walles of this our Island, as the oracle is reported to haue spoken of the sea forces of Athens: and whereas I acknowledge in all dutifull sort how honorably both by your letter and speech I haue bene animated in this and other my trauels, I see my selfe bound to make presentment of this worke to your selfe, as the fruits of your owne encouragements, & the manifestation both of my vnfaired seruice to my prince and country, and of my particular duty to your honour: which I haue done with the lesse suspicion either of not satisfying the world, or of not answering your owne expectation, in that according to your order, it hath passed the sight, and partly also the censure of the learned phisitian M. Doctor James, a man many wayes very notably qualified.

And thus beseeching God, the giuer of all true honor & wisdome to increase both these blessings in you, with continuance of health, strength, happinesse, and whatsoeuer good thing els your selfe can wish, I humbly take my leaue. London the 17 of Nouember.

Your honors most humble alwayes to be commanded RICHARD HAKLVT.

Richard Hakluyt to the fauourable Reader.

Have thought it very requisite for thy further instruction and direction in this historie (Good Reader) to acquaint thee brieflie with the Methode and order which I have used in the whole course thereof: and by the way also to les thee understand by whose friendly aide in this my travell I have bene furthered: acknowledging that ancient speech to be no lesse true then ingenious, that the offence is great, Non agnoscere per quos profeceris, not to speake of them by whom a man in his inducours is assisted.

Concerning my proceeding therefore in this present worke, it hath bene this. Whatsoever testimonie I have found in any author of authoritie appertaining to my argument, either stranger or naturall, I have recorded the same word for word, with his particular name and page of booke: here it is extant. If the same were not reduced into our common language, I have first expressed it in the same termes wherein it is originally written, whether it were a Latine, Italian, Spanish or Portugall discourse, or whatsoever else, and thereunto in the next roome have annexed the signification and translation of the wordes in English. And to the ende that those men which were the paynefull and personall travellers might reape that good opinion and iust commendation which they have deserved, and further, that every man might answer for himselfe, iustifie his reports, and stand accountable for his owne doings, I have referred every voyage to his Author, which both in person hath performed, and in writing hath left the same: for I am not ignorant of Ptolomies assertion, that Peregrinationis historia, and not those wearie volumes bearing the titles of vniuersall Cosmographie which some men that I could name have published as their owne, being in deed most vntully and vnprouisable ramassed and burlted together, is that which must bring vs to the certayne and full discouerie of the world.

Moreover, I meddle in this worke with the Navigations onely of our owne nation: And albeit I alleage in a few places (as the matter and occasion required) some strangers as witnesses of the things done, yet are they none but such as either saythfully remember, or sufficiently confirme the travels of our owne people: of whom (to speake truth) I have receiued more light in some respects, then all our owne Historians: could afford me in this case, Bale, Foixe, and Eden onely excepted.

And it is a thing which shall principally be considered, that I stand not upon any action performed neere home, nor in any part of Europe commonly frequented by our shipping, as for example: Not upon that victorious exploit not long since atchieued in our narrow Seas agaynst that monstrous Spanish army vnder the valiant and prouident conduct of the right honourable the lord Charles Howard high Admirall of England: Nor upon the good seruices of our two wortheie Generalls in their late Portugall expedition: Not upon the two most fortunate attempts of our famous Chieftaine Sir Frauncis Drake, the one in the Baie of Cales vpon a great part of the enemies chiefeest shippes, the other neere the Islands vpon the great Carrack of the East India, the first (though peradventure not the last) of that imployment, that euer discharged Molucca spices in English portes: these (albeit singular and happy voyages of our renowned countrymen) I omit, as things distinct and without the compasse of my prescribed limites, being neither of remote length and spaciousnesse, neither of search and discouerie of strange coastes, the chiefe subiect of this my labour.

Thus much in breuities shall serue thee for the generall order. Particularlie I haue disposed and digested the whole worke into 3. partes, or as it were Classics, not without my reasons. In the first I haue martialled all our voyages of any moment that haue bene performed to the South and Southeast parts of the world, by which I chiefly meane that part of Asia which is neere it, and of the rest hit hermost towards vs: For I find that the oldest travels as well of the ancient Britains as of the English, were ordinarie to Iudea which is in Asia, termed by them the Holy land, principally for deuotions sake according to the time, although I read in Ioseph Bengorion a very authenticall Hebrew author, a testimonie of the passing of 26000. Britains valiant souldiours, to the siege and fearefull sacking of Ierusalem vnder the conduct of Vespasian and Titus the Romane Emperour, a thing in deed of all the rest most ancient. But of latter dayes I see our men haue pierced further into the East, haue passed downe the mightie river Euphrates, haue sayled from Bassara through the Persian gulf to the Citie of Ormuz, and from thence to Chaul and Goa in the East India, which passages written by the parties themselves are herein to be read. To these I haue added the Navigations of the English made for the parts of Africa, and either within or without the streights of Gibraltar: within, to Constantinople in Romania, to Alexandria, and Cayro in Egypt, to Tunes, to Goletta, to Malta, to Alger, and to Tripolis in Barbary: without, to Santa Cruz, to Asafi, to the citie of Marocco, to the River of Senega, to the Isles of Cape

To the Reader.

Cape Verde, to Guinea, to Benyn, and round abouts the dreadfull Cape of Bona Speranza, as farre as Goa.

The north, and Northeasterne voyages of our nation I haue produced in the second place, because our accessse to these quarters of the world is later and not so ancient as the former: and yet some of our trauailes that way be of more antiquitie by many hundred yeeres, then those that haue bene made to the westerne coastes of America. Under this title thou shalt first finde the old northerne Navigations of our Britissh Kings, as of Arthur, of Malgo, of Edgar Pacificus the Saxon Monarch, with that also of Nicholous de Linna under the north pole: next to them in consequence, the discoveries of the bay of Saint Nicholas of Colgoiene of Pechora, of the Isles of Vaigats, of Nona Zembla, and of the Sea eastwards towards the riuer of Ob: after this, the opening by sea of the great Dukedome and Empire of Russia, with the notable and strange iourney of Master Ienkinson to Boghar in Baltia, whereunto thou maist adde sixe of our voyages: eleuen hundred verstes up against the streame of Dwina to the towne of Vologda: thence one hundred, and four score verstes by land to Teraflaw standing vpon the mighty riuer of Volga: there hence about two thousand and sine hundred verstes downe the streame to the ancient marit Towne of Astracan, and so to the manifold mouthes of Volga, and from thence also by ship ouer the Caspian sea into Media, and further then that also with Camels vnto Georgia, Armenia, Hyrcania, Gilan, and the cheefest Cities of the Empire of Persia: wherein the Companie of Moscouie Marchants to the perpetuall honor of their Citie, and societie, haue performed more then any one, yea then all the nations of Europe besides: which thing is also acknowledged by the most learned Cosmographers, and Historiographers of Christendome, with whose honorable testimonies of the action, not many for number, but sufficient for authoritie I haue concluded this second part.

Touching the westerne Navigations, and trauailes of ours, they succede naturallie in the third and last roome, forasmuch as in order and course these coastes, and quarters came last of all to our knowledge and experience. Herein thou shalt reade the attempt by Sea of the sonne of one of the Princes of Northwales, in sayling and searching towards the west more then 400. yeeres since: the offer made by Christopher Columbus that renowned Genoway: to the most sage Prince of noble memorie King Henrie the 7. with his prompt and cheerefull acceptation thereof, and the occasion wherempon it became fruitlesse, and at that time of no great effect to this kingdome: then follows the letters Patentes of the foresaid noble Prince giuen to Iohn Cabot a Venetian and his 3. sonne, to discover & conquer in his name, and vnder his Banners vnknooen Regions: who with that royall incouragement & contribution of the king himselfe, and some assistance in charges of English Marchants departed with 5. sailes from the Port of Brisfoll accompanied with 300. Englishmen, and first of any Christians found out that mightie and large tract of lande and Sea, from the circle Arcticke as farre as Florida, as appeareth in the discouerie thereof. The triumphant raigne of King Henry the 8. yielded some prosecution of this discouerie: for the 3. voyages performed, and the 4. intended for all Asia by his Maiesties selfe, do approue and confirme the same. Then in proceesse of yeeres ariseth the first English trade to Brasill, the first passing of some of our nation in the ordinarie Spanish fleetes to the west Indies, and the huge Citie of Mexico in Noua Hispania. Then immediatly ensue 3. voyages made by M. Iohn Hawkins now Knight, then Esquire, to Hispaniola, and the gulfe of Mexico: vpon which depende sixe verie excellent discoueries of our men, whereof some for 15. or 16. whole yeeres inhabited in New Spaine, and ranged the whole Countrie, wherein are disclosed the cheefest secretes of the west India, which may in time turne to our no smal aduantage. The next leaues thou turnest, do yeelde thee the first valiant enterprise of Sir Francis Drake vpon Nombre de Dios, the mules laden with treasure which he surprisid, and the house called the Cruzes, which his fire consumed: and therewith is ioyned an action more venterous then happie of Iohn Oxnam of Plummoth written, and confessed by a Spanyard, which with his companie passed ouer the streight Istme of Darien, and building certaine pinnacles on the west shoare, was the first Englishman that entered the South sea. To passe ouer Master Frobisher and his actions, which I haue also newly though briefly printed, and as it were reuind, what soeuer Master Iohn Davis hath performed in continuing that discouery, which Master Frobisher began for the north west passage, I haue faithfully at large communicated it with thee, that so the great good hope, & singular probabilities & almost certaintie thereof, which by his industry haue risen may be knowne generally of all men, that some may yet still prosecute so noble an action. Sir Humfrey Gilbert, that conragious Knight, and very expert in the mysteries of Navigation amongst the rest is not forgotten: his learned reasones & arguments for the prooffe of the passage before named, together with his last more commendable resolution then fortunate successe, are here both to be read. The continuance of the historie, produceth the beginnings, and proceedings of the two English Colonies planted in Virginia as the charges of sir Walter Raleigh, whose entrance vpon those newe inhabitations had bene happie, if it had ben as seruiously followed, as it was cheerefully undertaken. I could not omit in this parte

Robert Fabian

the two voyages made not long since to the South-west, whereof I thinke the Spanyard hath had some knowledge, and felt some blowes: the one of Master Edward Fenton, and his consort Master Luke Warde: the other of Master Robert Withrington, and his hardie consort Master Christopher Lister as farre as 44. degrees of southerly latitude, set out at the direction and charge of the right honorable the Earle of Cumberland, both which in divers respects may yelde both profite and pleasure to the reader, being carefully perused.

For the conclusion of all, the memorable voyage of Master Thomas Candish into the South sea, and from thence about the globe of the earth doth satisfie mee, and I doubt not but will fully content thee: which as in time it is later then that of Sir Frauncis Drake so in relation of the Philippinae, Iapan, China, and the Isle of S. Helena it is more particular, and exact: and therefore the want of the first made by Sir Frauncis Drake will be the lesse: wherein I must confesse to have taken more then ordinarie paines, meaning to have inserted it in this worke: but being of late (contrary to my expectation) seriously delt withall, not to anticipate or prevent another mans paines and charge in drawing all the services of that worthie Knight into one volume, I have yeelded unto those my freindes which pressed me in the matter, referring the further knowledge of his proceedanges, to those intended discourses.

Now for the other part of my promise, I must craue thy further patience frendly reader, and some longer suspence from the worke it selfe, in acquainting thee with those vertuous gentlemen, and others which partly for their private affection to my selfe, but chiefly for their devotion to the furtherance of this my travaile, have yeelded me their severall good assistances: for I accompt him unworthy of future favours, that is not thankfull for former benefites. In respect of a generall incouragement in this laborious travaile, it were grosse ingratitude in mee to forget, and wilfull maliciousnes not to confesse that man, whose onely name doth carrie with it sufficient estimation and love, and that is Master Edward Dier, of whom I will speake thus much in few wordes, that both my selfe and my intentions herein by his frendly meanes have bene made knowne to those, who in sundrie particulars have much steeded me. More specially in my first part, Master Richard Staper Marchant of London, hath furnished me with divers thinges touching the trade of Turkie, and other places in the East. Master William Burrough, Clarke of her Maiesties navie, and Master Anthonie Ienkinson, both gentlemen of great experience, and observations in the north Regions, have much pleased me in the second part. In the third and last besides myne owne extreme travaile in the histories of the Spanyards my cheefest light hath bene received from Sir Iohn Hawkins, Sir Walter Raleigh, and my kinsman Master Richard Hakluyt of the middle Temple.

And whereas in the course of this history often mention is made of many beastes, birds, fishes, serpents, plants, fruits, herbes, rootes, apparell, armour, boates, and such other rare and strange curiosities, which wise men take great pleasure to reade of, but much more contentment to see: herein I my selfe to my singuler delight have bene as it were ravished in beholding all the premisses gathered together with no small cost, and preferred with no little diligence, in the excellent Cabinets of my very worshipfull and learned friends M. Richard Garthe, one of the Clarke of the Pettie Bags, and M. William Cope Gentleman Usser to the right Honourable and most prudent Counsellor (the Seneca of our common wealth,) the Lord Burleigh, high Treasurer of England.

Nowe, because peradventure it would bee expected as necessarie, that the descriptions of so many parts of the world would farre more easily be conceived of the Readers, by adding Geographicall, and Hydrographicall tables therunto, thou art by the way to be admonished that I have contented my selfe with inserting into the worke one of the best generall mapes of the world onely, untill the coming out of a very large and most exact terrestriall Globe, collected and reformed according to the newest, secretest, and latest discoveries, both Spanissh, Portugall, and English, composed by M. Emmerie Mollineux of Lambeth, a rare Gentleman in his profession, being therein for divers yeeres, greatly supported by the pnce and liberalitie of the worshipfull marchant M. William Sanderson.

This being the summe of those things which I thought good to admonish thee of (good Reader) it remaineth that thou take the profite and pleasure of the worke: which I wish so bee as great to thee, as my paines and labour have bene in bringing these rare fruits unto this ripeness, and in reducing these loose papers into this order. Farewell.

The excellent newe Globe of
M. Mollineux.

THE trauaile of Helena.

ELENA Flauia Augusta, serenissimi

Coeli Britannici Regis Hares, & vnica filia; Magni Cōstantini Cæsaris mater, incomparabili decore, sine, religione, bonitate, ac magnificentiâ piâ, Eusebio eti-am teste, per totum resplenduit orbem: Inter omnes ætatis suæ feminas, nulla inueniebatur eâ in liberali-bus artibus doctior, nulla in instrumentis musicis pe-ritior, aut in linguis nationum copiosior. Innatam habebat ingenij claritudinem, oris facundiam, ac morum ornatissimam compositionem: Hebraicæ, Græcæ, & Latine erudita. Caruerat pater alia sobole (inquit Vi-rumnius) quæ Regni folio potiretur. Illam propterea his instrui fecit per optimos præceptores, vt eò commodius Regni tractaret negotiis. Vnde ob incredibi-lem eius pulchritudinem, atque alias eximias animi & corporis dotes, Constantius Cæsar Casar illam duxit in vxorem, atque ex eâ filium in Britannia genuit Constantinum Magnum. Sed eo tandem Eboraci defuncto, cum Annâ illâ Euangelicâ, in sanctâ viduitate perdurauit ad vititimum vitæ diem, tota Christianæ Religioni dedita. Sunt enim Authores, qui narrent per istam, cessante persecutione, pacem Ecclesijs datam: Ad tantam cœlestis Philosophiæ cognitionem eam ferunt post agnitionem Euangelium pertenuisse, vt olim multos ediderit libros, & carmina quædam Græca, quæ hucusque à Pontico superesse perhibentur. Visionibus admonita Hie-rosolymam petiit, & omnia saluatoris loca perlustrauit. Romæ tandem octogenaria feliciter in Christo quieuit. i. j. Calendas Septembris, filio adhuc superstite, Anno salutis humanæ 337.
 Regnante apud Britannos Ostauius. Huius corpus non minimâ nunc curâ venetijs seruiatur.

¶ The same in English.

HELENA Flauia Augusta, the heire and onely daughter of Coelus sometime the most excellent King of Britaine, the mother of the Emperour Constantine the great, by reason of her singular beautie, faith, religion, goodness & goodly patience (according to the testimonie of Eusebius) was famous in all the world. Amongst all the women of her time, there was none either in the liberal Arts more learned, or in instruments of musick more skilfull, or in diuers languages of nations more abundant then herselfe. She had a naturall quicknes or excellencie of wit, eloquence of speech, and a most notable grace in all her behauiour. She was teene in the Hebrew, Greeke and Latine tongues.

Her father (as Virumnius reporteth) had no other child to succede in the kingdome after him but her, and therefore caused her to be instructed in these things by the best teachers, that thereby she might the better in time gouerne the Realme: so that by reason of her passing beautie, and other her excellent gifts of body and minde, Constantius Chlorus the Emperour married her and had by her a sonne called Constantine the great, while hee remained in Britaine. Who at length decreasing at Pophe, this Helena (no other wise then Anna of whom mention is made in the newe Testament) continued a vertuous, and holy widow to the ende of her life.

There are some writers which doe affirme, that persecution ceased, and yeace was graunted to the Christian Churches by her good meanes.

After the light and knowledge of the Gospell, he grew so skilfull in diuinitie, that hee wrote and composed diuers booke, and certaine Greeke verses also, which (as Ponticus reporteth) are yet extant. Being warned by some billions hee went to Ierusalem, and visited all the places there, which Christ had frequented. Shee liued to the age of fourescore yeeres, and then dyed at Rome the 14. day of August, in the yeere of our redemption 337. Octavius being then King of Britaine, and her sonne Constantine the Emperour then also liuing, and her body is to this day very carefully preserved at Venice.

The life and travels of Constantine the great, Empe- rour and King of Britaine.

Laius Constantinus cognomento Magnus post Genitorem Constantium Britannorum Rex, ac Romanorum Caesar Augustus, ex Britannica matre in Britannia natus, & in Britannia creatus Imperator, patriam natalem magnificæ suæ gloriæ participem fecit. Profligatus Alemanis, Hispanis, & Francis, eorumque Regibus pro spectaculo bestijs obiectis, Galliam subiectam tenuit: Tres Helensæ matris auunculos Britannos, Leolinum, Traherum, & Marium, quos cæcæ semper fidentiores habuerat in suis fortunis, Italiam à Maxentij tyrannide feliciter liberatis, in Senatorij ordinem Romæ promouit. Innumera in eo (vt Eutropius habet) claruere tam animi, quam corporis virtutes, dum appetentissimus esset gloriæ militaris, successu semper in bellis prospero. Inter literas tam Græcas quàm Latinas, à Christianissimâ matre Helena Christi fidem edoctus, eos honorabat præcipuè, qui in Philosophiâ Christiana vitam reclinasent. Vnde ab Oceani sinibus nempè Britannis incipiens, ope fretus diuina, Religionis curam in medijs superstitionum tenebris cepit, ab Occiduis ad Indos, innumeras ad æternam spem vitæ erigens gentes. Animum diuinis exercendo studijs, noctes trahebat infomes, & quæstia scribendi diuerticula per otium frequentabat: Imperium oratione, ac Sanctis operationibus continendum ratus, Egregius Christianæ disciplinæ præco, filios ac proceres docuit, pietatem diuinitijs omnibus, atque adeo ipsi anteferre totius mundi Monarchiæ. ther Helena hauing instructed him in the faith of Christ, although hee much of all men that were learned in the Greeke and Latine tongues, yet he peried speciall honoy to those that spent their time in the studie of Diuinitie, which he called Christian Philosophie: so that beginning at the furthest part of the Ocean sea, which then was taken to be his owne natie soyle of Britaine, and crusting in the assistance of God, when the darkenes of superstition was most thicke, then hee vnderooke a care of Religion, stirring vp innumerable nations from the West as far as India it selfe, to the hope of eternall life.

Hee passed many nightes without sleepe, hauing his minde occupied in diuine studie: and whensoeuer his leasure from greater affaires did permit him, his vacant times should be spent in the vse of writing & other good exercises, alluring himselfe that his kingdoms & Empire wote to be continued & strengthened to him by prayer and holy workes: and oftentimes taking vpon him as it were y person of a notable preacher of Christian discipline, he would teach his children and nobilitie, that godlines was to be preferred before riches, yea, before y Monarchie of all y world.

He ouerthrew the false gods of the Heathens, and by many lawes often remiued, he abrogated the worshipping of Images in all the countreys of Greece, Egypt, Persia, Asia, and the whole Romane Empire, commanding Christ onely by his Edicts to be worshipped, the sacre Gospell to be preached, the Ministers thereof to be honoured and relieued, and the temples of Idoles euer where to be destroyed.

Whithersoouer he went hee caused the booke of the Gospell of Christ to be still carried before him, that thereby it might appeare to be a forme of faith to all men, and to apperteyne generally to all nations.

He was the first that appointed an Imperiall Diademe, or Crowne to the Kings of Britaine.
He was most beneficiall to all Churches, bestowing vpon them lands and fields, and vpon the poore, sicke persons, widowes and orphans, coine and wood, being as careful of them as if hee had bene their naturall father.

He vsed learned men most familiarly, as Eusebius, Lactantius and others, and they are wis-nesses that this was his vsuall prayer to God, O Lord we know thee to be the onely God, we are sure that thou art the onely King, and we call vpon thee as our helper: though thee we haue gotten the victorie, and by thee we haue ouerthowen the enemy.

Sextus Aurelius reporteth, that it was his greatest delighe to imbrace the studie of learning, to fauour good Arts, to reade, write and meditate, and that he composed many bookes, and Epistles both in the Greeke and Latine tongues.

He died at Nicomedia, being then 66. yeres of age, in the 32 yere of his reigne, and in the 339.
yere after the Incarnation of Christ, and was buried at Constantinople, Octavius being then King of Britaine: whose life Eusebius bishop of Cæsarea hath written in Greeke in 4. bookes, which afterwards were translated into the Latine tongue by Iohn Portes a French man.

Pelagius, boꝛne in that part of Britaine which is called Wales, was head of gouernour of the famous Colledge of Bangor, not farre from Chester, wherein liued a Societie of 2100. Diuines, of Students of Christian philosophie, applying themselues to the practise of the Christian people, and liuing by the labours of their owne handes, according to Pauls doctrine. He was a man excellently learned, and skilfull both in the Greeke and Latine tongues, and as it were another Tertullian, after his long and great trauailes for the good of the Christian Common weale, seeing himselfe abused, and iniuriously dealt withall by some of the Clergie of that time, he tooke the matter so grieuouly, that at the last he relapsed from the faith.

Whereupon he left Wales, and went into France, and hauing gone through France, he went thence into Egypt, Syria, & other Countreies of the East, and being made Priest by a certaine Pönke of those partes, he there hatshed his heresse, which according to his name was called the heresse of the Pelagians: which was, that man was boꝛne without sinne, and might be saued by the power of his owne wil without grace, that so the miserable man might take away sayth and baptisme. With this and the like dyegges of false doctrine, he returned againe into Wales, and there by the meanes of the two false Prelates Julian and Celestine, who fauoured his heresse, hee infected the whole Countrey with it. But before his fall and Apostasie from the faith, he exercised himselfe in the best studies, as Gennadius, Beda, Honorius, and other authours doe reioyce him, and wrote many bookes seruing not a little to Chyistian vtilitie: but being once fallen into his heresse, he wrote many more erroneous bookes, then he did before honest, and sincere: whereupon at the last his owne Countreymen banished him, as Walden testified in his Epistle to Pope Martin the sixt. He floꝛished in the yeere after the Incarnation, 390. Maximus being then King of Britane.

This Robert Ketenenfis, was called an Englishman by synname, as he was by birth: who after some time spent in the foundations of humanitie, and in the elements of good Artes in the Uniuersities of England, determined to trauaile to the partes beyond sea: and so trauayled through France, Italie, Dalmatia, and Greece, and came at last into Asia, where hee liued in great danger of his life among the cruell Sarracens, but yet learned perfectly the Arabian tongue. Afterwards hee returned by sea into Spaine, and there about the riuier Iberus, gaue him self wholly to the studie of Astrologie, with one Hermannus a Dalmatian, who had accompanied him in his long voyage. Hee florished in the yeere 1143 Steuen being then King of England, and was buried at Papilona.

The worthy voyage of Richard the first, King of England into Asia, for the recovery of Ierusalem out of the handes of the Saracens, drawn out of the booke of Actes and Monuments of the Church of England, written by M. Iohn Foxe.

King Richard the first of that name, for his great valoure and courage surnamed Coeur de Lion, the sone of Henry the second, after the death of his father remembering the rebellions that he had vniuersally raised against him, sought for absolution of his trespass, and in part of satisfaction for the same, agreed with Phillip the French King to take his voyage with him for the recouerie of Christs patrimonie, which they called the Holy land: whereupon the said King Richard immediately after his Coronation, to prepare himselfe the better towarde his iourney, used diuers meanes to take by lommies of moneý, and exacted a tenth of the whole Realme, the Christians to make sheekestone and ten thousand poundes, and the Iewes which then dwelt in the Realme threescore thousand.

Hauing thus gotten sufficient money for the expence, hee sent certain Charles and Barons to Phillip the French king in the time of his Parliament at S. Denis, to put him in minde of his promise made for the recouerie of Christs holy patrimonie out of the Saracens handes: To whom he sent word againe in the moneth of December, that he had bound himselfe by sollemne othe, depending vpon the Euangelists, that he the yeere next following, about the time of Easter, had certainly prepared to aduente himselfe toward that iourney, requiring him like wise not to faile, but to be ready at the terme aboue limited, appointing also the place where both the Kings shoulde meete together.

In the yere therefore 1190 King Richard hauing committed the gouernment of this Realme in his absence to the bishop of Elye then Chancelour of England, aduanced forward his iourney, and came to Turon to meete with Phillip the French king, and after that went to Vizelace, where

That either of them should defend and maintaine the honour of the other, and beare true fidelitie vnto him, of life, members & worldly honour, and that neither of them should faile one the other in their affaires: but the French king should ayde the King of England, in defending his land and dominions, as he would himselfe defend his owne Citie of Paris if it were besieged: and that Richard King of England likewise should ayde the French king in defending his land and Dominions, no otherwise then he would defend his owne Citie of Roan if it were besieged, &c.

The othe of fidelitie betwixt King Richard, and the French king.

Concerning the lawes and ordinaunces appointed by King Richarde for his Hauite, the forme thereof was this.

1. That whoso killed any person on shipboard, should be tyed with him that was slaine, and throughten into the sea.
2. And if he killed him on the land, he shoulde in like maner be tyed with the partie slaine, and be buried with him in the earth.
3. He that shalbe committed by lawfull witness to dyt out his knife or weapen to the intent to strike any man, or that hath striken any to the dytting of blood, shall loose his hand.
4. Also he that striketh any person with his hand without effusion of blood, shalbe plunged three times in the sea.
5. Irem, who so speaketh any opprobrious or contumelious wordes in reuiling or cursing one another, for so oftentimes as he hath reuiled, shall pay so many ounces of siluer.
6. Irem, a chiefe or felon that hath stolen being lawfully rebuited, shall haue his head shorne, and boyling pitch potwed upon his head, and feathers of downe treaded vpon the same, whereby he may be knowen, and so at the first landing place they shall come to, there to be cast by.

The discipline and orders of the King.

These things thus ordered, King Richard sending his Hauite by the Spardish seas, and by the Straights of Gibraltar, betweene Spaine and Africa, to meete him at Marsilia, hee himselfe went as is said to Vizeliace to the French king, which two kings from thence went to Lions, where the bridge ouer the flood Rhodanus for yress of people brake, and many both men and women were drowned: by occasion whereof the two kings for the combrance of their traines, were constrained to diuener themselves for time of their iourney, appointing both to meete together in Sicily: and so Philipp the French king toke his way to Genua, and king Richard to Marsilia, where he remained 8. dayes, appointing there his Hauite to meete him. From thence crossing ouer to Genua where the French king was, passed forward by the coastes of Italy, and entered into Tiber not farre from Rome.

King Richard staying in Marsilia 8. dayes for his Hauite which came not, hee there biter 20. Gallies, and 10. great barkes to shype over his men, and so came to Naples, and so partly by horse and wagon, & partly by the sea, passing to Falernum, came to Calabria, where after that he had heard that his ships were arrived at Messana in Sicily, he made the more speed, and so the 23. of September entred Messana with such a noyle of Trumpets and Schalmes, with such a rouse and shewe, that it was to the great wonderment and terrour both of the Frenchmen, and of all other that did heare and behold the sight.

To the said towne of Messana the French king was come before the 16. of the same moneth of September, and had taken by the Wallace of Tancredus king of Sicily for his lodging: to whom king Richard after his arrivall estranges rejoyced, and when the two kings had communed together, immediatly the French king tooke shipping and entred the seas, thinking to saile towardes the land of Jerusalem: but after he was out of the haven, the winde rising contrary against him, returned him backe againe to Messana. Then king Richard (whose lodging was prepared in the suburbs without the Citie) after he had rejoyced againe and talked with the French king, and as so had sent to Tancredus king of Sicily for deliuerance of Loane his suster (who had bene sometimes Queene of Sicily, and had obtained her to be sent unto him, the last day of September passed ouer the flood del Fare, and there getting a strong hold called de la Baguare, or le Bamare, and there placing his suster with a sufficient garrison, he returned againe to Messana.

The 2. of October king Richard tooke another strong hold called Monasterium Griffonum, situated in the midst of the riuer del Fare, betweene Messana & Calabria, from whence the Donks being expelled, he reposed there all his store and provision of victuals, which came from England or other places.

The Citizens of Messana seeing that the king of England had wonne the castle and Island de la Baguare, and also the Monasterie of the Griffons, and doubting least the king would extende his his power further to invade their Citie, & get if he could the whole Ile of Sicily, began to stirre against the Kings armie, and to shut the Englishmen out of the gates, and kept their walles against them. The Englishmen seeing that, made to the gates, and by force would have broken them open, inso much that the King riding amongst them with his suite, and breaking diuers of their heads, could not assuage their fierrenes, such was the rage of the Englishmen against the citizens of Messana. The King seeing the furie of his people to be such, that he could not stay them,ooke boate, and went to the pallace of King Tancred, to talke of the matter with the French King, in which meane time the matter was so taken up by the wise handling of the awicidents of the citie, that both parts laying downe their armour, went home in peate.

The fourth day of the saide moneth of October, came to King Richard the Archbishop of Messana with two other Archbishops also with the French King, and sundry other Cardes, Barons, and Bishops, to intreate of peace, who as they were together consulting, and had almost concluded vpon the peate, the citizens of Messana issuing out of the towne, some went by vpon y<sup>e</sup> mountaines, some with open force inuaded y<sup>e</sup> mansion or lodging of Hugh Brune an English Capitaine. The noise whereof comming to the eares of the King, he suddenly breaking off talke with the French King and the rest, departed from them, and comming to his men, commaunded them forthwith to aerie themselves. Who then with certaine of his souldiers making vp to the toppe of the mountaine (which seemed to passe their power to climbe) there put the Citizens to flight, chasing them to wone the mountaines, vnto the very gates of the citie, whom also certaine of the Kings seruants pursued into the citie, of whome siue valiant souldiers & xvj. of the Kings seruants were slaine, the French King looking vpon, and not once willing to rescue them, contrary to his othe, and league before made with the King of England: for the French King with his men being there present, to be in the midst of them safely, and without any harme to and fro, and might well haue taken the Kings partie, more then he, if it had so liked him.

This being knowen to the English both howe their fellows were slaine, and the Frenchmen permitted in the citie, and that they were excluded and the gates barred against them, being also stopped from buying of victuall, & other things, they vpon great indignation gathered themselves in armes, half open the gates, and scaled the wals, and so winning the citie, set by their flags with the English armes vpon the wals: which when the French King did see, he was mightily offended, requiring the King of England that the Armes of France might also be set vp, & towne with his: but King Richard to that would in no case agree, notwithstanding to satisfie his minde, he was contented to take downe his Armes, and to commit the custodie of the citie to the Hospitallaries and Templaries of Ierusalem, till the time that Tancred king of Sicily and he should agree together vpon conditions.

These things being done the fift and sixt day of October, it followed then vpon the eight day of the same, that peace was concluded among the kings. In which peace, first King Richard, & Philip the French king renewed againe their othe and league before made, concerning their mutuall aide and societie, during the time of that peregrination.

Secondly, peace also was concluded betweene King Richard and Tancred King of Sicily as foresaid, with conditions, that the daughter of Tancrede in case King Richard should die without issue, should be married to Arthur Duke of Britaine the kings nephew & next heire to his crowne, whereof a soymall charte was drawen, and letters sent thereof to Pope Clement being dated the ninth of Nouember.

From this time vntill February the next yeere, these two kings kept still at Messana, either for lacke of winde and weather, or for the repairing of their shippes. And in the aforesayde February, in the yeere 1191. King Richard sent ouer his gallies to Naples, there to meete his mother Elinore, and Berengaria the daughter of Zandius King of Nauarre, whome he was purposed to marry, who by that time were come to Brundisum, vnder the conduct of Philip Carle of Flanders, and so proceeding vnto Naples, they founde the kings shippes wherein they sayled to Messana.

In this meane space, King Richard shewed himselfe exceeding bounteous and liberall to all men: to the French king first he gaue diuers shippes, vpon others likewise he bestowed riche rewards, and of his treasure and goods, he distributed largely to his souldiers and seruants about him, of whome it was reported, that he distributed more in one moneth, then any of his predecessors did in a whole yeere: by reason whereof he purchased great loue and fauour, which not onely rebounded to the advancement of his fame, but also to his singular life and profite, as the sequel afterwarth sheweth.

and went to Cathneia, a Citie where Tancredus king of Sicily then lay, where he was honorably received, and there remained with king Tancredus three dayes and three nightes. On the fourth day when he should depart, the aforesaid Tancredus offered him many rich presentes in gold and silver, and precious stones, whereof king Richard would receiue nothing, but one little ring for a token of his good will: for the which king Richard gaue againe vnto him a riche sword. At length when king Richard should take his leaue, king Tancredus would not let him to depart, but needes would giue him 4. great shippes, and 15. gallies, and furthermore he himselfe would needes accompanie him the space of two dayes iourney, to a place called Tauernium.

Then the next morning when they should take their leaue, Tancredus declared vnto him the message, which the French King a little before had sent vnto him by the Duke of Burgundie, the contents whereof was this: That the King of England was a false Traytour, and would never keepe the peace that was betwene them: and if the said Tancredus would warre against him, or secretly by might would invade him, he with all his power would assist him, to the destruction of him and all his armie. To whom Richard the King protested againe, that he was no tray-tour, nor neuer was: and as touching the peace begunne betwixt them, the same should neuer be broken through him: neither could he beleuee that the French King being his good lord, and his woyne Companioner in that voyage, would utter any such wordes by him. Which when Tancredus heard, he bringeth forth the letters of the French King, sent to him by the Duke of Burgundie, affirming moreouer, that if the Duke of Burgundie would denie the bringing of the said letters, he was ready to crye it with him by any of his Dukes. King Richard receauing the letters, and musing not a little vpon the same, returneth againe to Messana. The same day that King Richard departed, the French king came to Tauernium to speake with Tancred, and there abode with him that night, and on the morrowe returned to Messana againe.

From that time King Richard moued in stomacke against King Phillip, neuer thewed any gentle countenance of peace & amitie, as he before was wont: whereat the French king greatly marueling, and enquiring earnestly what should be the cause thereof, word was sent him againe by Phillip Carle of Flanders from King Richard, what wordes he had sent to the king of Sicily, and for testimonie thereof the letters were shewed, which he wrote by the Duke of Burgundie to the King of Sicily: which when the French King vnderstood, first he helde his peace as guilty in his conscience, not knowing well what to answer. At length turning his tale to another matter, he began to quarrell with King Richard, pretending as though he sought causes to breake with him, and to maligne him: and therefore he forged (said he) these lies vpon him, and all because he by that meanes would auoide to marrie with Alise his sister, according as he had promised. Adding moreouer that if he would so doe, and would not marrie the said Alise his sister according to his othe, he would be an enemy to him, and to his, while he liued.

To this King Richard said againe, that he could by no meanes marry that woman, for so much as his father had carnall copulation with her, and also had by her a sonne: for prooue whereof he had there presently to bring forth diuers & sundry witnesses to the Kings face, to testifie with him.

In conclusion, though counsell and persuasion of diuers about the French King, agreement at last was made, so that King Phillip did acquite King Richard from this bond of marrying his sister, and King Richard againe should be bound to pay to him euery yeere for the space of five yeeres, two thousand markes, with certaine other conditions besides, not greatly materiall for this place. And thus peace being betwene them concluded the 28. day of the saide moneth of March, the French King launching out of the Hauen of Messana, the 22. day after in the Easter weeke, came with his armie to the siege of Achon.

After the departure of the French King from Messana, King Richard with his armie yet remaining behind, arrived Queene Alinor the Kings mother, bringing with her Bernegera the king of Nauars daughter, to be espoused to King Richard: which being done, King Richard in April following, about the 20. day of the said moneth, departed from the Hauen of Messana with 150. great shippes, and 53. great gallies well manned and appointed,ooke his iourney toward Achon: who being vpon the Seas on good Friday about the 9. houre, toke a mightie Southwinde with a tempest, which dispersed and scattered all his shippes, some to one place, and some to another. The King with a fewe shippes was driuen to the Ile of Creta, and there before the Hauen of Rhodes cast anchor. The shippes that carried the Kings sister, Queene of Sicily, and Bernegera the king of Nauars daughter, with 2. shippes were driuen to the Ile of Cyprus.

The king making great mone for the shippes of his sister, and Bernegera his wife that should be, not knowing where they were become, after the tempest was ouerblowen, sent forth his Gallies diligently to seeke the rest of his shippes dispersed, but especiall the shippe wherein his sister was, and the mayden whom he should marrie, who at length were found safe and merite at the poite of Lymfzem in the Ile of Cyprus, notwithstanding the two other shippes, which were in their companie before in the same hauen, were drowned with diuers of the Kings seruantes and men of woorth, among whom was M. Roger, called Malus Carulus, the Kings Vicechancere, who was found with the Kings seale hanging about his necke.

The king of Cyprus, was then Isakius (called also the Emperour of the Gryffons) who tooke and imprisoned all Englishmen, which by shipwracke were cast vpon his land, also inueigled into his hands the goods and priyses of them which were found drowned about his coastes, neither would suffer the shippes wherein the two Ladies were to enter within the poite.

The rydings of this being brought to King Richard, he in great wrath gathering his gallies and shippes together, dooeth the land of Cyprus, where he first in gentle wise signifieth to king Isakius, how he with his Englishmen, comming as strangers to the suppoitation of the holy land, were by distresse of weather dyuen vpon his bounds, and therefore with all humble petition besought him in Gods behalfe, and for reuerence of the holy Crosse, to let goe such prisoners of his as he had in captiuitie, & to restore againe þ goods of them that were drowned, which he detayned in his hands, to be employed for the behoofe of their soules. And this the king once, twice, and thysse desired of the Emperour: but he proudly answering againe, sent the king woode, that he neither would let the captiues goe, nor render the goods of them which were drowned.

When king Richard heard this, how light the Emperour Isakius made of his so humble and honest petition, and howe that nothing coulde be gotten without violent force, estoones giueth commandement throughout all his hoste to put themselves in armour and followe him, to reuenge the iniuries receiued of that proude and cruell king of Cyprus, willing them to put their trust in God, and not to misdoubt but that the Lorde would stand with them, and giue them the victorie. The Emperour in the meane time with his people stood warding the Sea coastes, where the Englishmen should arriue, with swoydes, billes, and launces, and such other weapons as they had, setting booydes, stooles, and chertles before them as a wall: few of them were harnessed, and for the most part all buxperit and vnkillfull in the feates of warre.

When king Richard with his souldiers issuing out of their shippes, first set his bowe men before, who with their shot made a way for others to followe. The Englishmen thus winning the land vpon them, so ferrely pressed vpon the Gryffons, that after long fighting and many blowes, at last the Emperour was put to flight, whom king Richard valiantly pursued, and slue many, and whers he tooke aliuie, and had gone neere also to take the Emperour, had not the night come on and parted the battell. And thus king Richard with much spoile, and great victorie, returning to the Poite Towne of Lymfzem, which the Townes men had left for feare, found there great abundance of corne, wine, oyle and victuals.

The day after the victorie gotten, Ioanna the Kings sister, and Bernegera the mayden, entered the Poite and Towne of Lymfzem, with 50. great shippes, and 14. galliots: so that all the whole Hauie there meeting together, were 254. tall shippes, and about thre score galliots. When Isakius the Emperour, seeing no way for him to escape by Sea, the same night pitched his tents five miles off from the English army, swearing that the thirde day after, he would surely giue battell to king Richard: but he preuenting him before, suddenly the same morning before the day of battell should be, leaureth vpon the tents of the Gryffons early in the morning, they being vnawares and a sleepe, and made of them a great slaughter, insomuch that the Emperour was faine to runne away naked, leauing his tents and pautions to the Englishmen, full of horses and riche treasure, also with the Imperiall stander, the lower part whereof with a costly streamer was couered, and wought all with gold.

King Richard returning with victorie and triumphe to his sister, and Bernegera shortly after in the month of May next following, and the 12. day of the said month, married the said Bernegera daughter of Rancon, king of Nauarre, in the yle of Cyprus at Lymfzem.

The king of Cyprus seeing himselfe ouermatched, was dyuen at length to peeble himselfe with conditions to giue king Richard 20000. markes in gold for amends of such spoiles as he had gotten of them that were drowned, also to restore all the captiues againe to the King: and furthermore, he in his owne person to attende vpon the King to the land of Ierusalem in Gods seruice and his, with 400. horsemen, and 500. footemen: in pledge whereof he would giue to his hands his castles, and his onely daugher, and would hold his kingdome of him.

This done, and the Emperour swearing fidelitie to king Richard before Guido king of Ierusalem, and the prince of Antioche (who were come thither to king Richard a litle before) peace was taken, and Isakius committed to the warde of certaine keepers. Notwithstanding shortly af ter he breaking from his keepers, was againe at defiance with the King: whereupon king Richard beset the Island of Cyprus round about with shippes and galkies, did in such sort preuaile, that the Subiects of the land were constrained to yeelde themselves to the King, and at last the daughter of the Emperour, and the Emperour himselfe, whom king Richard caused to be kept in fetters of gold and silver, and to be sent to the citie of Tripolis.

These things thus done, and all set in order touching the possession of the Ile of Cyprus, the keeping whereof he committed to Radulph sonne of Godfrey Lord Chamberlaine, being then the first day of June upon the sixt of the saide moneth, king Richard departed from the Ile of Cyprus, with his shippes and gallies toward the siege of Achon; and on the next morrowe came to Tyrus, where by procurement of the French King he was restrained by the Citizens to enter. The next day after, which was the sixt day of June, crossing the seas, he met with a great barke fraught with souldiers and men of warre to the number of a thousand and five hundred, which pretending to be Frenchmen, and setting foorth their flagges with the French Armes, were in deede Sarracens, secretly sent with wilde fire and certaine barrells of vnknown serpents to the defense of the towne of Achon, which king Richard at length perceiuing, et soones set upon them and so vanquished them; of whome the most were drowned and some taken a liue: which being once known in the citie of Achon, as it was a great discomfort to them, so it was a great helpe to the Christians for winning the citie.

The next day after which was the seuenth of June, King Richard came to Achon, which at that time had bene long besieged by the Christians. After whose coming it was not long, but the Pagans within the citie, seeing their wals to be undermined and towers ouerthrowen, were driuen by compulsion to escape with life and limme, so surrender the citie to the two kings.

Another great helpe to the Christians in winning the citie, was this. In the said city of Achon there was a heretic Christian among the Sarracens, who in time of the siege thereof, vsed at sundry times to call ouer the wals into the campe of the Christians, certaine bills written in Hebrew, Greeke, and Latine, wherein he disclosed to the Christians from time to time, the doings and counsels of the enemies, aduerting them how and what way they should worke, and what to beware, and alwaies his letters began thus. In nomine Patris, & Filij, & Spiritus sancti, Amen. By reason whereof the Christians were much advantaged in their proceedings; but this was a great heauines vnto them, that neither he would utter his name, nor when the citie was got den they euer vnderstand who he was.

To make of a long siege a short narration. Upon the twelfth day of July the yere aforesaid, the Princes and Captaines of the Pagans, upon agreement resorted to the caue of the Templaries to commune with the two kings touching peace, and giuing vp of their citie: the forme of which peace was thus.

- 1 That the Kings should haue the citie of Achon freely and fully deliuered vnto them, with all which was therein.
- 2 That 500. captiues of the Christians should be resorted to them, which were in Achon.
- 3 That the holy crosse should be to them rendred, and a thousand Christian captiues with two hundred horsemen, whosoever they themselves would chose out of all them which were in the power of the Saladine.
- 4 That they would giue vnto the Kings two hundred thousand Byzants, so that they themselves should remaine as pledges in the Kings hands, for the performance hereof, that if in foorth dates the aforesaid couenantes were not accomplished, they should abide the Kings mercie touching life and limme.

These couenantes being agreed vpon, the Kings sent their souldiers and seruantes into the citie, to take a hundredth of the richest and best of the citie, to close them vp in towres vnder strong keeping, and the residue they committed to be kept in houses and in streets, ministering vnto them according to their necessities: to whome not withstanding this they permitted, that so many of them as would be baptized and receiue the faith of Christ, should be free to goe whither they would: whereupon many there were of the Pagans, which for feare of death pretended to be baptized, but afterward so soone as they could, reuolued againe to the Saladine: for the which it was afterward commanded by the Kings, that none of them should be baptized against their wills.

The thirteenth day of the saide moneth of July, King Philip of France, and King Richard, after they had obtained the possession of Achon, deuided betwene them all things therein contained as well the people as golde and silver, with all other furniture whatsoeuer was remaining in the citie: who in deuiding the spoyle, were so good caruers to themselves that the Knights and Barons had but litle to their share, whereupon they began to beue themselves somewhat discontented ed, which being knowne of the Kings they sent them and were that their wills should be satisfied. The twentieth day of July, King Richard speaking with the French King, desired him that they two with their Armies, would binde themselves by othe to remaine there still in the land of Jerusalem the space of 3. yeeres, for the winning and recovering againe of these countreys: but hee said he would sweare no such othe, and so the next day after King Richard with his wife and sister entred into the Citie of Achon, and there placed himselfe in the Kings pallace: The French king remaining in the houses of the Templaires, where he continued all the end of that moneth.

About the beginning of the month of August, Philip the French king after that hee and King Richard had made agreement betweene Guido and Conradus the Marques, about the kingdome of Jerusalem, went from Achon to Tyrus, notwithstanding King Richard and all the Princes of the Christian armie with great increase desired him to tarry, shewing what a shame it were for him to come so farre, and now to leaue undone that for which he came, and on the 3. day of August departed from Tyrus, leauiing the halfe part of the Citie of Achon, in the hands of the aforesaid Conradus Marques.

After his departure the Saracens refused to keepe their covenants made, who neither would restore the holy Crosse nor the money, nor their captiues, sending word to King Richard, that if he beheaded the pledges left with him at Achon, they would choppe off the heads of such captiues of the Christians, as were in their handes.

Shortly after this the Saladine sending great gifts to King Richard, requested the time limited for beheading of the captiues to be proroged, but the king refused to take his gifts, and to graunt his request, whereupon the Saladine caused all the Christian captiues within his possession forthwith to be beheaded, which was the 28. of August: which albeit King Richard understood, yet would not be present the time before limited for the execution of his prisoners, being the 20. day of August: vpon which day hee caused the prisoners of the Saracens openly in the sight of the Saladines armie to looke their heads: the number of whom came to two thousand and five hundred, save only that certaine of the principall of them hee reserued for purposes and considerations, especially to make exchange for the holy Crosse, and certaine other of the Christian captiues.

After this King Richard purposed to besiege the Citie of Ioppe, where by the way betwene Achon and Ioppe, nere to a towne called Ashur, Saladine with a great multitude of his Saracens came fiercely against the kings rearward, but through Gods mercifull grace in the same battail, the kings warriors acquitted themselves so well, that the Saladine was put to flight, whome the Christians pursued the space of 3. miles, and lost that same day many of his Nobles & Captaines, in such sort (as it was thought) that the Saladine was not put to such confusion 40. yeeres before, and the one Christian Captaine called James Auemus in that conflict was overthrowen.

From thence King Richard proceeding further went to Ioppe, and then to Ascalon, where hee found first the Citie forsaken of the Saracens, who durst not abide the kings coming: Ascalon, the Saladine thew to wone to the ground, & like wise forsooke the whole lande of Syria, though all which land the King had free passage without resistance: neither durst the Saracene Prince encounter after that with K. Richard. Of all which his attendances the said K. Richard sent his letters of certificate as well into England, as also to the Abbot of Clara valle in France, well hoping by the Gods willing should be able to make his repaire againe to them by Easter next.

Many other famous acts were done in this voyage by these two Kings, and moe should haue bene, had not they falling into discorde displeured themselves, by reason whereof Philip the French king returned home againe within short space: who being returned againe firstoues invaded the Countrey of Normandie, exciting also John the brother of King Richard, to take on him the kingdome of England in his brothers absence: who then made league vpon the same with the French king, and did homage vnto him, which was about the fourth yeere of King Richard. Who then being in Syria, and hearing thereof, made peace with the Turkes for thre yeeres: and not long after, King Richard the next spring following returned also, who in his returne diuised by distresse of weather, about the parts of Histria, in a towne called Synaca, was there taken by Lymphold, Duke of the same countrey, and so solde to the Emperour for sixtie thousand Markes: who for no small ioy thereof, wroteth to Philip the French king, these letters here following.

King Richard being thus traiterously taken, and sold to the Emperour by the Duke of Aufstridge for 60000 markes, was there kept in custodie a yeere and 3. moneths.

In some stories it is affirmed, that King Richard returning out of Asia, came to Italy with prosperous wind, where he desired of the Pope to be absolved of an othe made against his will and could not obtaine it: and so setting out from thence towards England, passing by the Courtrey of Conradus the Marques, whose death (he being slaine a litle before) was falsely imputed by the French King to the King of Englande, there traiterously was taken (as is aforesaid) by Limpoldus duke of Aufstridge.

Albeit in another storie I finde the matter more credibly set forth: which saith thus, That king Richard slew the brother of this Limpoldus, playing with him at Chesse in the French Kings Court: and Limpoldus taking his vantage, was more cruel against him and deliuered him (as is said) to the Emperour. In whose custodie he was deteyned during the tyme aboue mentioned, a yeere & 3. moneths. During which tyme of the Kings emburance, the French King in the meane season stirred warre in Romandie: and Earle John the Kings brother, made warre and invaded England, but the Barons and bishops of the land mightily withstood him.

At length it was so agreed and concluded with the Emperour, that King Richard should be released for a hundredth and foure thousand pound: of which money part should remaine to the Duke of Aufstridge, the rest should be the Emperours. The summe of which money was here gathered and made in England of Chalices, Crozles, Spines, candlesticks and other Church plate, also with publike contribution of Priests, Abbots, and other subiects of the Realme: wherof part was presently paid, and for the residue remaining, hostages and pledges were taken, which was about the fift yeere of his reigne: and then it was obtayned of the Pope, that Priests might celebrate with Chalices of latten and tinne.

At what time this aforesaid money was paid, and the hostages giuen for the ranfome of the King, I haue an olde historie which saith, that the aforesaid Duke of Aufstridge was sorely after plagued by God, with sundry plagues.

The last judgement of God upon the Duke of Austria.

- 1. First, with the burning of his chiefe Townes.
  - 2. With downing of some thousand of his men in a floud happening no man can tell how.
  - 3. By turning all the eares of his come felde into wormes.
  - 4. By taking away almost all the Nobles of his land by death.
  - 5. By breaking his owne legges falling from his horse, which legges hee was compelled to cut off with his owne hands, and afterwards died of the same: who then at his death is reported to forgive King Richard 50000. markes, and sent home the hostages that were with him. And further a certaine booke intituled Eulogium, declareth that the said Limpoldus duke of Aufstridge fell in displeasure with the bishop of Rome and died excommunicate the next yeere after, Anno 1196.
- But thus as you haue heard, Richard the King was ranfomed & deliuered from the countous captiuitie of the Emperour, and returning home made an ende of his voyage for Asia, which was both honourable to himselfe and to all Christian States, but to the Sarracens the enemies of Christianitie, terrible and dishonourable.

This Historie of King Richards voyage to Ierusalem, is very excellently and largely written in Latine by Guilielmus Neobrogenis our owne countryeman.

He was first of all a Scholemaster: after wards he became an Archdeacon, very famous for his learning & wisdom in all his doings. He was also a Cistercian Monk and Abbot of Foorde Monasterie, and the chiefe of all those that were of his order: he grewe after this to be bishop of Worcester, and at last after the death of King Richard he was promoted and made Archebishop of Canterburie, and Primas of all England. In the discharge of which place hee being very vigilant, shewed himselfe a worthy Pastor, so wing the seeve of Gods word in euery place as farre forth as the iniquitie of that time permitted. In his time King Richard with all indeuour prepared a flecte and all things necessarie for waging of warre against the Infidels at Ierusalem, taking with him the Standard and Ensignes of the kingdome. This Baldwinus estoones followed the King into Syria and Palestine, as one desirous to be partaker of his trauailes, paines, and perils in so holy a voyage. Richardus Canonicus ad Trinitatis sanum Londini Regularis, ab ipsa pueritia, bonarum artium literas impense amauit, excoluit, ac didicit. Richard fynamed Canonicus an obseruant Fryer of Trinitie Church in London, was in great loue with the studies of good Arts andooke paines in them and learned them. And at last by his continuall endeuour and long exercise therein, he grew to be such an Orator and Poet, as few were in that age liuing, by reason wherof he grew in fauour with Richard then King of England, and vnderooke that long voyage with him into Palestina & Syria against the Turkes, from whence being returned againe into England, hee faithfully described both in Verse and prose all such things as he had seene in the Cities, fields and tents of the souldiers, where he was present, and omitted not to note the behauiour, forme, and proportion of body in the foresaid King, giuing to his notable worke this most apt name for the title, The Iournall of King Richard. Hubert Walter bishop of Sarisburie a vertuous man, and famous for his good wit and pietie, was one of the chiefest of them that followed King Richard into Syria going against the Sarracens. As he returned from Palestina & came in his tourney into Sicilia, he there heard of the ill fortune of the King being fallen into his enemies handes, and thereupon leauing his tourney home wards, he went presently and in all haste to the place wher the King was captiued, whom the King immediatly vpon his comming sent into England, that by the authoritie of the Council, a tribute might be collected for his redemption: which this Hubert performed with great diligence, and deliuered the King. After this hee was made Archbishop of Cantuarie, and after the death of King Richard he betwix the like duties of stuelitie and trust to his brother Iohn that succeeded him. For by a long Oration he perswaded the whole Nation of the Englishmen, that he was a very circumspect man, vertuous, valiant, borne of Noble parentage, and most worthy of the Crowne. Whereupon he was so reueired of all the people and crowned King. He wrote certaine booke, and died at the last with very great griefe of minde, in the yeere 1205, hauing bene Archbishop the space of 11. yeeres 8. moneths and fixe dayes, by reason of the ciuill discords abroade, whereby all things went topsie turue, and in the raigne of King Iohn.

Robert Curfon descended of a noble familie in England, vfed great diligence as well in pro-phane as in diuine studies in the famous vniuersitie of Oxfoꝛde (as I coniecture.) Hee hau there the best scholemasters that were to be gotten, and was most industrious in the Arts and continuall exercises of learning; by means whereof he grew to be of great renowne where he liued, Afterward thinking of greater matters he went to Paris and thence to Rome it selfe, and at Paris he proceeded doctor of Diuinitie, at Rome he was made Cardinal: whereupon boch Matthew Paris and Matthew of Westminster, produce this testimonie of him. The one in his 2. booke, the other in his 8. booke of Chronicles. In the yeere of our Loꝛde (say they) 1218, at the taking of Damiata a Citie of Egypt vnder Iohn Brenne King of Ierusalem, M. Robert Curfon an Eng-there with Pelagius Albanensis, &c. Boston of Burie in Hopsfolke in his Catalogue repositeth, that he wrote diuers bookes. He flourished in the yeere aforesaid by the witnesses aforesaid. Henry Boston this Curfon was Legate into England in ʒ dayes of Honorius the thirde bishop of Rome.

Raynulph Glanville Earle of Chester, a man of a very noble house and learned in both the Lawes, deserues of duetie to be here placed by me in the Catalogue of worthy and notable men. He applied so well all the yeeres of his youth to the studie of humane and diuine Lawes, that he came not so soone to the age of a man, as he had purchased to himselfe by reason of his singular learning, renowne and honour. When the noble men of France went to Ptolomais, vpon on the counsell of Iohn Brenne King of Ierusalem, they resolved to bessege Damiata a Citie of Egypt, in the yeere 1218. And then Henry the King vpon the motion of Honorius the 3. bishop of Rome, sent thither this Earle Raynulph with a great power of armed souldiers, to further the enterprise of the Christians: whose valure in that warre (by the testimonie of Polidor Virgil) was marueilously commended of all men. After the ende of which busines, he being returned into his countrey, wrote a booke of the Lawes of England. It is also reported that hee wrote other bookes, but time the destroyer of many memorials, hath taken them from vs. He flourished in the yeere after the natiuitie of Christ 1230, being very aged, and in the raigne of K. Henry the 3.

The voyage of William Longespee, a notable and valiant Gentleman of England into Asia, in the yeere 1248. and in the 32. yeere of the raigne of Henric the 3. King of England.

Or, long sword.

Ewes the French King being recovered of his sickness which hee fell into, in the yeere 1244, vowed thereupon for a free will sacrifice to God, that he (if the Counsell of his Realme would suffer him,) would in his own person visite the Holy land; which matter was opened and debated in the Parliament of France helde in the yeere 1247. Where at length it was concluded, that the King according to his vow should take his journey into Asia, and the time thereof was also prefixed, which should be after the feast of S. John Baptist the next yeere ensuing.

At which time William Longespee a worthy warriour, with the bishop of Worcester and certayne other great men in the Realme of England (moued with the example of the French men) prepared themselves like wise to the same iourney.

It fell out in this enterpryse, that about the beginning of October the French king assaulted and tooke Damietta, being the principall foze or hold of the Sarracens in all Egypt, Anno 1249. and hauing fortified the Citie with an able garrison left with the Duke of Burgundie, he remooued his tents from thence to goe Eastward. In whose armie followed William Longespee, accompanied with a piked number of English warriours retapning vnto him. But such was the disdain of the Frenchmen against this William Longespee & the Englishmen that they could not abide them, but slouted them after an opprobrious maner with English tailes, inso much that the French king himselfe had much adoe to keepe peare betweene them.

A foze wonne
by the Englishmen.

The originall cause of this grudge betweene them beganne thus. There was not farre from Alexandria in Egypt a strong foze of castles replenished with great Ladies and riche treasure of the Sarracens; which holde it chanced the saide William Longespee with his companie of English souldiers to get, more by politike dexteritie then by open foze of armes, where with hee and his retinue were greatly enriched. When the Frenchmen had knowledge hereof (they not being made ystie hereto) began to conceiue an heart burning against the English souldiers, and could not speake well of them after that.

also gotten by
men.

It happened againe not long after, that the saide William had intelligence of a companie of riche marchants among the Sarracens going to a certaine Faire about the parts of Alexandria, hauing their camels, asses and mules, richly laden with silkes, precious iewels, spices, golde, and silver, with Cart loads of other wares, beside victuall and other furniture, whereof the souldiers then stood in great neede: he hauing secret knowledge hereof, gathered all the power of Englishmen vnto him that he could, and so by night sailing vpon the Marchants, some he slew with their guides and conducters, some he tooke, some he put to flight: the Carts with the diuers, and with him, loosing in all the skirmish but one souldier and 8. of his seruitors: of whom notwithstanding some he brought home wounded to be cured.

The iniurie of the Frenchmen to our English.

This being known in the Campe, forth came the French men which all this while loytered in their paullions, and meeting this cartage by the way, tooke all the foze side waye whole to themselves, rasing the saide William and the Englishmen for aduenturing and yllusing out of the Campe without leaue or knowledge of their Generall, contrary to the discipline of warre. William said againe he had done nothing but he would answere to it, whole purpose was to haue the spoyle deuoid to the behoofe of the whole armie.

William Longespee iustly foylsheth the

When this would not serue, hee being sore grieved in his minde so cowardly to be spoiled of that, which hee so aduenturously had trauailed for, went to the King to complaine: But when no reason nor complaint would serue by reason of the proude Earle of Artoys the kings brother, which vpon spight and disdain stood against him, he bidding the King farewell saide hee would serue him no longer: and so William de Longespee with the rest of his companie breaking from the French hoste went to Achon. Upon whose departure the Earle of Artoys saide, Now is the armie of Frenchmen wel ridde of these taile people, which words spoken in great despight were all taken of many good men that heard them.

But not long after when the keeper of Cayro and Babylonia, bearing a good mind to the Christian Religion, and being offended also with the Soldan, promised to deliuer the same to the French King, instructing him what course was best for him to take to accomplish it, the King hereupon in all haste sent for William Longespee, promising him a full redresse of all his iniuries before receiued: who at the Kings request came to him againe, and so ioynd with the French power.

After this it happened that the French King passing with his armie towardes Cayro aforesayde came to the great riuer Nilus, on the further part whereof the Soldan had pitched himselfe to withstand his comming ouer: there was at this time a Sarracen lately converted to Christ, seruing the Earle Robert the French Kings brother, who told him of the absence of the Soldan from his tents, and of a shallow flood in the riuer where they might easily passe ouer. Whereupon the saide Earle Robert & the Master of the Temple with a great power, esteemed to the third part of the Armie yllued ouer the Riuer, after whom followed W. Longespee with his band of English souldiers. These being ioynd together on y other side of the water, encostred the same day with the Sarracens remaining in the tents & put them to the worst. French Carle surprised with pride and triumph, as though he had conquered the whole earth, would needs forwarde, deunting himselfe from the maine holde, thinking to winne the spures alone. To whome certaine sage men of the Temple, giuing him contrary counsell, aduised him not to doe so, but rather to returne and take their whole company with them, and so should they be more sure against all betraies and dangers, which might be layd principally for them. The manner of that people (they sayd) they better knewe, and had more experience thereof then he: alleaging moreover their wearied bodies, their tired horses, their famished soldiers, and the insufficiencie also of their number, which was not able to withstand the multitude of the enemies, especially at this present hunte, in which the aduersaries did well see the whole state of their dominion now to consist either in winning all, or losing all.

Which when the proude Carle did heare, being inflated with no lesse arrogancie then ignorance, with opprobrious taunts reuiled them, calling them cowardly bastards, and betrayers of the whole countrey, obiecting vnto them the common report of many, which sayd, that the land of the holy crosse might soone be trowne to Christendome, were it not for rebellious Templaries, with the Hospitallaries, and their followers.

To these contumelious rebukes, when the master of the Temple answered againe for him and his fellows, bidding them display his ensigne when he would, and where he durst, they were as ready to follow him, as he to goe before them, then began William de Longespee the worthy knight to speake, desiring the Carle to giue care to those men of experience, who had better knowledge of those countries and people then had he, commending also their counsell to be discrete and wholesome, and so turning to the master of the Temple, began with gentle wordes to mitigate him like wise. The knight had not halfe ended his talke, when the Carle taking his words out of his mouth, began to fume and sweare, crying out of those cowardly Englishmen with tailes: What a pure armie (sayd he) should we haue here, if these tailes and tailed people were purged from it, with other like wordes of villany, and much dishayne: whereunto the English knight answering againe, well, Carle Robert (sayd he) wheresoeuer you dare set your foote, my step shall goe as farre as yours, and (as I beleue) we goe this day where you shall not dare to come nere the taile of my horse, as in deede in the event it proued true: for Carle Robert would needs set forward, weening to get all the glory to himselfe before the coming of the hoste, and first inuaded a litle village of castle, or castle, called Manlor. The countrey Boones and Pagans in the villages, seeing the Christians comming, ranne out with such a maine crye and shoute, that it came to the Soldans hearing, who was nereest then our men did thinke. In the meane time, the Christians inuading and entering into the munition incircumspectly, were pelted and pashed with stones by them which stood about, whereby a great number of our men were lost, and the armie fore mayned, and almost in despaire.

Then immediatly vpon the same commeth the Soldan with all his maine power, which seeing the Christian armie to be deuided, and the brother separated from the brother, had that which he long wished for, and so inclosing them round about, that none should escape, had with them a cruell fight.

Then the earle began to repent him of his heady rashnes, but it was too late, who then seeing William the English knight doubtly fighting in the chief hunte of the enemies, cried by him most cowardly to flie, seeing God (saith he) doth fight against vs: To whome the Knight answering againe, God forbid (sayth he) that my fathers sonne should runne away from the face of a Sarracen. The Carle then turning his horse, fled away, thinking to auoid by the swiftnesse of his horse, and so taking the riuier Thafnis, oppressed with harnelle, was there sunken and drowned.

Thus the Carle being gone, the Frenchmen began to dispaire and scatter. Then William de Longespee hearing all the force of the enemies, stood against them as long as he could, wounding and slaying many a Sarracen, till at length his horse being killed, and his legges maimed, he could no longer stand, who yet notwithstanding as he was do tunc, mangled their feete and legges, and did the Sarracens much sorrow, till at last after many blowes & wounds, being stoned of the Sarracens, he yielded his life. And after the death of him, the Sarracens setting vpon the residue of the armie, whome they had compassed on euery side, deuoured and destroyed them all, in somuch that scarce one man remained alive, sauing two Templaries, one Hospitaller, and one poore rasall soldier, which brought tidings hereof to the King.

And thus by the impudent and foolish hardines of that French Carle, the Frenchmen were discomfited, and that valiant English Knight ouermatched, to the grieft of all Christian people, the gloire of the Sarracens, and the vetter destruction and ruine of the whole French armie, as afterwards it appeared.

The voyage of Prince Edward the sonne of King Henry the third into Asia, in the yeere 1270.

About the yeere of our Lord, 1267, Octobonus the Popes Legat being in England, prince Edward the sonne of King Henry, and divers other Noble men of England tooke vpon them the crosse vpon S. Johns day the Baptist, by the said Legates hands at Northhampton, to the reliefe of the Holy lande, and the subuersion of the enemies of the crosse of Christ. For which purpose, and for the better furnishing of the prince towards the iourney, there was granted him a subside throughout all the Realme, and in the month of May, in the yeere of our Lord, 1270. he began to set forthward,

As Michelmas following, he with his companie came to Egnemortes, which is from Marsilia eight leagues westward, and there taking ship againe (having a merrie & prosperous wind) within ten daies arrived at Tuncz, where he was with great ioy welcommed, and intertained of the Christian princes that there were to this purpose assembled, as of Philip the French King, whose father Lodouicus died a litle before, of Carolus the King of Sicilia, and the two Kings of Nauarre, and Arragon, and as this Lord Edward came thither for his father the King of England, thither came also Henry the sonne of the King of Almaine for his father, who at his returne from the voyage, was staine in a Chappell at Viterbium,

When prince Edward demaunded of these Kings and princes what was to be done, they answered him againe, and said, the prince of this cite and the prouince adioyning to the same, hath bene accustomed to pay tribute vnto the king of Sicily euery yeere: and now for that the same hath bene for the space of seuen yeeres vnpaid and moze, therefore we thought good to make inuasion vpon him. But the King knowing the same tribute to be but iustly demanded, hath now accoyding to our owne desire satisfied for the time past, and also paid his tribute before hand.

Then said he, My Lords, what is this to the purpose? are we not here all assembled, and haue take vpon vs the Lords Character to fight against the infidels & enemies of Christ? what meane you then to conclude a peace with them, God forbid we should do so, for now J land is plaine and hard, so that we may approach J holy city Jerusalem. Then said they, now haue we made a league with them, neither is it lawfull for vs to breake the same. But let vs returne againe to Sicilia, and when the winter is past we may well take shipping to Acra. But this counsell nothing at all liked him, neither did he see we himselfe wel pleased therewith: but after he had made them a princely banquet, he went into his closet or priuy chamber from amongst them, neither would be partaker of any of that wicked money which they had taken. They notwithstanding continuing their purpose, at the next merry wind tooke shipping, and for want of ships left 200. of their men a shoare, crying out, and piteously lamenting for the peril and hazard of death that they were in: wherewith prince Edward being somewhat moued to compassion, came backe againe to the land, and receiued and stowed them in his owne ships, being the last that went aboard.

Within seuen daies after, they arrived in the kingdome of Sicilia, ouer against the cite Trapes, calling their ankers a league from thence within the sea, for that their shippes were of great burden, and thoughtly fraught: and from the haven of the cite, they sent out barges and boates to receiue and bring such of the Nobilitie to land as would, but their hopes for the most part, and all their armour they kept still within board.

At length towards the evening, the sea began to be rough, & increased to a great tempest and a mighty: insomuch that their ships were beaten one against anothers sides, and drowned there was of them at that tempest lying at anker moze then 120. with all their armour and munition, with innumerable soules besides, and that wicked money also which they had taken before, likewise perished, and was lost.

But the tempest hurt not so much as one ship of prince Edwards, who had in number 13, nor yet had one man lost thereby, for that (as it may be presupposed) he consented not to the wicked counsell of the rest.

When in the morning the princes and kings came to the sea side, and saw all their ships drowned, and saw their men and hopes in great number cast vpon the land drowned, they had full heauie hearts, as well they might, for of all their ships and mariners, which were in number 1500. besides the common soldiers, there was no moze saued then the mariners of one onely ship, and they in this wise.

There was in that ship a good and wise Matrone, a Countesse of an Earles wife, perceiving the tempest to grow, & fearing her selfe, called to her the W. of the ship, & asked him whether in attempting boare as was possible, so that with the vehemencie of the weacher and force he came withall, hast the ship and saued all that was within the same, as the Master had thewen, and sayd before.

Then the Kings and Princes (altering their purpose after this so great a shipwacke) returne ned home againe euery one vnto their owne lands. Onely Edward the sonne of the King of England, remained behind with his men and shipps, which the Lord had saued and preserued.

Then Prince Edwarde renouating his purpose, tooke shipping againe, and within siteme dayes after Easter arrivde he at Acra, and wone a land, taking with him a thousand of the best soldiours and most expert, and caried there a whole moneth, refreshing both his men and horses, and that in this space he might learne and knowe the secrets of the land. After this he tooke with him sixe or seven thousand soldiours, and marched forward twentye miles from Acra, and tooke Nazareth, and those that he founde there he slew, and afterwarde returned againe to Acra. But their enemies following after them, thinking to haue set vpon them at some streight or other aduantage, were espied by the Prince, and returning againe vpon them gaue a charge, and slew many of them, and the rest they put to flight.

After this, about Midsummer when the Prince had vnderstanding that the Saracens began to gather at Cakowe which was forty miles from Acra, he marching thither set vpon them very early in the morning, and slew of them more then a thousand, the rest he put to flight, and tooke riche spoiles, marching forward till they came to a Castle named Caltrum peregrinorum, situate vpon the sea coast, & taried there that night, & the next day they returned againe to ward Acra.

In the meane season the King of Ierusalem sent vnto the Noble men of Cyprus, desiring them to come with speede to ayde the Christians, but they would not come, saying they would keepe their owne land, and goe no further. Then Prince Edward sent vnto them, desiring that at his request they would come and ioyne in ayde with him: who immediately thereupon came vnto him with great preparation and furniture for the warres, saying, that at his commandment they were bound to doe no lesse, for that his predecessors were sometimes the gouernours of that their land, and that they ought alwaies to thewe their fidelitie to the Kings of England.

The Princes
of Cyprus ac-

Then the Christians being herewith animated, made a thirde voyage or roade, and came as farre as the foyle called Vincula sancti Petri, and to St. Georgius, and when they had slaine certaine there, not finding any to make resistance against them, they retired agayn, he from whence they came: when thus the fame of Prince Edward grew amongst his enemies, and that they began to stand in doubt of him, they deuiled among themselves how by some policie they might circumuent him and betray him. Whereupon the great Prince and Admirall of Ioppa sent vnto him, saining himselfe vnder great deceit willing to become a Christian, and that he would bring with him a great number besides, so that they might be honourably intertained and vided of the Christians. This talke pleased the Prince well, and perswaded him to finish the thing he had so well begun by imiting againe, who also by the same messenger sent and wrote backe vnto him diuers times about the same matter, whereby no mistrust should spring.

This messenger (sayeth mine Author) was one ex caute nutritis, one of the stonie hearted, that neither feared God, nor dreaded death.

The fift time when this messenger came, and was of the Princes seruantes searched according to the manner and custome what weapon and armour he had about him, as also his purse, but not so much as a knife could be seene about him, he was had by into the Princes chamber, & after his recurrence done, he pulled out certaine letters, which he deliuered the Prince from his loye, as he had done other's before. This was about eighthe daies after Whitsonide, vpon a Thursday, somewhat before night, at which time the Prince was layd vpon his bed bare headed, in his Jerkin, for the great heate and intemperature of the weacher.

When the Prince had read the letters, it appeared by them that vpon the Saturday next following, his loye would be there ready to accomplish all that he had written and promised. The report of these newes by the Prince to the standers by, liked them well, who drew some what backe to consult there of amongst themselves. In the meane time, the Spelenger kneeling, and making his obeisance to the Prince (questioning further with him) put his hand to his belt, as though he would haue pulled out some secrete letters, and suddenly he pulled out an intemomed knife, thinking to haue straken the Prince into the belly therewith as he laye: but the Prince lifting by his hand to defend the blowe, was stricken a great wound into the arme, and being about to

to fetch another stroke at him, the prince againe with his foote tooke him such a blowe, that he felde him to the ground: with that the prince gate him by the hand, and with such violence wapped the knife from him, that he hurt himselfe there with on the fore head, and immediately thrust the same into the belly of the Challenger and Striker, and slew him.

The princes seruants being in the next chamber not farre off, hearing the bulking, came with great haste running in, and finding the Challenger lying dead in the floore, one of them tooke by a shoole, and beate out his braynes: where at the prince was wroth for that he stroke a dead man, and one that was killed before.

But the rumour of this accident as it was strange, so it went some thoroughout all the Court, and from thence among the common people, for which they were very heauy, and greatly discouraged. To him came also the Captaine of the Temple, and brought him a costly and precious drinke against poison, least the venome of the knife should penetrate the liuely bloode, and in blessing wise sayde vnto him: did I not tell your Grace before, of the dectrine and subtiltie of this people: notwithstanding, sayde he, let your Grace take a good heart, you shall not die of this wound, my life for yours. But straight way the Surgions and Physicians were sent for, and the prince was dyed, and within fewe dayes after, the wound began to putrifie, and the flesh to looke dead and blacke: wherupon they that were about the prince, began to mutter among themselves, and were very sad and heauy.

Which thing he himselfe perceiving, said vnto them: why mutter you thus among your selues: what see you in me, can I not be healed: tell me the truth, be ye not afraid. Wherupon one said vnto him, and like your Grace you may be healed, we mistrust not, but yet it will be very painefull for you to suffer. Whay suffering (sayd he againe) restore health: yea sayth the other, on paine of losing my heade. Then sayd the prince, I commit my selfe vnto you, doe with me what you thinke good.

Then sayd one of the Physicians, is there any of your Nobles in whome your Grace repositeth speciall trust: to whome the prince answered yea, naming certaine of the Noble men that stode about him. Then said the Physician to the two, whome the prince first named, the Lorde Edmund, and the Lorde John Voylyc. And doe you also faithfully loue your Lorde and Prince: Who answered both, yea vndoubtedly. Then sayth he, take you away this Gentlewoman and Ladie (meaning his wife) and let her not see her Lorde and husband, till such time as I will you thereunto. Wherupon they tooke her from the princes presence, crying out, and wounding her hands. Then sayd they vnto her, be you contented good Ladie and Madame, it is better that one woman should weepe a little while, then that all the Realme of England should weepe a great season.

Then on the morrow they cut out all the dead and inuenedomed flesh out of the princes arme, and theye it from them, and said vnto him: how cheereth your Grace, we promise you within these fifteene dayes you shall see in your selfe abroad (if God permit) vpon your horse backe, whole and well as euer you were. And according to the promise he made the prince, it came to passe, to the no litle comfort and admiration of all his subiects.

When the great Souldan heard hereof, and that the prince was yet aliuie, he could scarcely helieve the same, and sending vnto him thre of his Nobles and princes, excused himselfe by them, calling his gods to witnes that the same was done neither by him nor his consent. Which princes and Challenger standing a looke off from the Kings some, worshipping him, fell flat vpon the ground: you (sayd the prince) doe reuerence me, but yet you loue me not. But they understood him not, because he spake in English vnto them, speaking by an Interpreter: neuertheless he honorably incertained them, and sent them away in peace.

Thus when prince Edward had bene eightene monthes in Acra, he tooke shipping about the Assumption of our Lady, as we call it, returning homeward, and after seuen weekes he arrived in Sicilia at Trapes, and from thence traueled through the mds of Apulia, till he came to Rome, where he was of the Pope honorably intertaind.

From thence he came into France, whose fame and noble prowes was there much bruted among the common people, and enuid of the Nobilitie, especially of the Earle of Chalons, who thought to haue intrapped him and his companie, as may appeare in the storie: but prince Edward continued forth his journey to Paris, and was there of the French King honorably intertaind: and after certaine dayes he went thence into Gascoyne, where he taried till that he heard of the death of the King his father, at which time he came home, and was crowned King of England, in the yeere of our Lord, 1274.

Iohn Mandeuil Knight, borne in the towne of S. Albons, was so well giuen to the studie of Learning from his childhood, that he seemed to plant a good part of his felicitie in the same: for he supposed that the honour of his birth would nothing auale him, except he could render the same more honourable by his knowlege in good letters. Having therefore well grounded him selfe in religion by reading the Scriptures, he applied his studie to the arte of Physicke, a profession worthy a noble wit: but amongst other things, he was raiued with a mightie desire to see the greater partes of the world, as Asia and Africa. Having therefore provided all things necessarie for his iourney, he departed from his countrey in the yeere of Christ, 1332, and as another V-lysses returned home, after the space of 34. yeeres, and was then knowen to a very fewe. In the time of his trauaile he was in Scythia, the greater and lesse Armenia, Egypt, both Lybias, Arabia, Syria, Media, Mesopotamia, Persia, Chaldaea, Greece, Illyrium, Tartarie, and diuers other kingdomes

kingdomes of the world: and hauing gotten by this meanes the knowledge of the languages, least so many and great varieties, and things miraculous, whereof himselfe had bene an eye witness, should perish in oblivion, he committed his whole traueill of 33. yeeres to writing in three diuers tongues, English, French and Latine. Being arrived againe in England, and hauing seene the wickednes of that age, he gaue out this speech: In our time (sayd he) it may be spoken more cruelly then of olde, that vertue is gone, the Church is vnder foote, the Clergie is in error, the de- uill reigneth, and Simonie beareth the sway, &c.

He died at Leege, in the yeere 1372. the 17. day of Nouember, being there buried in the Ab- bie of the Order of the Guilielmites.

Hic iacet vir nobilis, D. Ioannes de Mandeuille, aliter dictus ad Barbam, Miles, Dominus de Campdi, natus de Anglia, Medicinæ professor, deuotissimus, orator, & bonorum largissi- mus pauperibus erogator, qui toto quasi orbe lustrato, Leodij diem vitæ suæ clausit ex- tremum. Anno Dom. 1371. Mensis Nouembris, Die 17.

Hæc in lapide: in quo cæzata viri armati imago, Leonem calcantis, barba bifurcata, ad caput manus benedicens, & vernacula hæc verba: Vos qui passis sor. ms. pon. l' amon deix proies por mi. Clipeus erat vacuus, in quo olim fuisse dicebant laminam æream, & eius in ea eidem cæzata in- signia, Leonem videlicet argenteum, cui ad pectus lunula rubea in campo cæruleo, quem Lin- bus ambiret denticulatus ex auro. Eius nobis ostendebant, & cultros, ephipiâque, & calcaria quibus vsum fuisse asserbant, in peragrande toto serè terrarum orbe, vt clariùs testatur eius Iti- nerarium, quod typis etiam excusum passim habetur.

CAPVT. I.

Commendatio breuis terra Hierosolimitana.

Vm terra Hierosolimitana, terra promissionis filiorum Dei, dignior cunctis mundi terris sit habèda multis ex causis, & præcipue illâ, quod Deus conditor cæli & mundi, ipsam tanquam dignatus fuit æstimare, vt in eo proprium filium saluatorem mundi Christum exhibuerit generi humano per incarnationem ex intermerata Virgine, & per eius conuersionem humillimâ in eadem, ac per dolorosam mortis suæ consummationem ibidem, atque inde per eius admirandam resurrectionem, ac ascensionem in cælum, & postremò quia creditur illic in fine seculi reuersurus, & omnia iudicaturus: certum est, quòd ab omnibus qui Christiano nomine à Christo dicuntur, sit tanquam à suis proprijs hæredibus diligenda, & pro cuiusque potestate ac modulo honoranda. A principibus quidem, & potentibus vt ipsam conentur de infidelium manibus recuperare, qui eam iam pridem à nobis, nostris exigentibus meritis, abstulerunt, & per annos heu plurimos possederunt: mediocribus autem & valentibus, vt per peregrinationem deuotam loca tam pia, & vestigia Christi ac discipulorum tam Sancta, principaliter in renissionem visent delictorum. Ab impotentibus verò, & impeditis, quatenus supradictos vel hortentur, vel in aliquo modo iuuent, seu certè fideles fundant orationes. Verum quia iam nostris temporibus vicius quam olim dici potest, Loquitur secundum tempora in quibus vixit.

Virtus, Ecclesia, Clerus, demon, symonia, Cessat calcatur, errat, gignat, dominatur, ecce iusto Dei iudicio, credita est terra tam incluta, & sacrosancta impiorum manibus Saracenorum, quod non est absq; dolore pijs mentibus audiendum, & recolendum, EGO Ioannes Mandeuill militaris ordinis saltem gerens nomen, natus & educatus in terra Angliæ, in villa sancti sancti Albani, ducabar in Adolescentia mea tali inspiratione, vt quamvis non per potentiam, nec per vires proprias possem præfatam terram suis hæredibus recuperare, item tamen per aliquod temporis ipacium peregrinari ibidem, & salutarem aliquantulum de propinquo. Vnde in anno ab Incarnatione Domini 1322. imposui me nauigationi Marsiliensis maris & vsque in hoc temporis, Anni 1355. scilicet, per 33. annos in transmarinis partibus mansi, peregrinatus sum, ambulauit, & circuiui multas, ac diuersas patrias, regiones, prouincias, & insulas, Turciam, Anneniam maiorem, & minorem, Egyptum, Lybiam bassam & altam, Syriam, Arabiam, Persiam, Chaldeam, Ethiopie partem magnam, Tartariam, Amazoniã, Indiam minorem, & mediam, ac partem magnam de maiori, & in istis, & circum istas regiones, multas insulas, Ciuitates, vrbes, castra, villas, & loca, vbi habitant variaz gentes, aspectuum, morum, legum, ac rituum diuersorum: Attamen quia summo desiderio in terra prouisionis eram, ipsam diligentius per loca vestigiorum filij Dei perlustrare curauit, & diutius in illa steti. Quapropter & in hac prima parte huius operis iter tam peregrinandi, quam nauigandi, à partibus Angliæ ad ipsam describo, & loca notabiliter sancta, quæ intra eandem sunt breuiter cõmemoro & diligenter, quatenus peregrinus tam in itinere quam in prouentione valeat hæc descriptio in aliquo deseruire.

CAPVT. 2.

Iter ab Angliã tam per terras quam per aquas vsq; in Constantinopolim.

Qui de Hybernia, Anglia, Scotia, Noruegia, aut Gallia iter arripit ad partes Hierosolymitanas potest saltem vsq; ad Imperialem Græciæ Ciuitatem Cõstantinopolim eligere sibi modum proficiscendi, siue per terras, siue per aquas. Et si peregrinando eligit transigere viam, tendat per Coloniam Agrippinam, & sic per Almaniam in Hungariam ad Montislanam Ciuitatem, sedem Regni Hungariæ. Et est Rex Hungariæ multum potes istis temporibus. Nam tenet & Sclauoniam, & magnam partem Regni Comanoruni, & Hungariam, & partem Regni Rusiæ. Oportet vt peregrinus in finibus Hungariæ transeat magnam Danubij flumen, & vadat in Belgradum; Hoc flumen oritur inter Montana Almaniz, & currens versus Orientem, recipit in se 40. flumina antequam finiatur in mare. De Belgrade intratur terra Bulgariæ, & transitur per Pontem petrinum fluij Maroy, & per terram Pyncenars, & tunc intratur Græcia, in Ciuitates, Sternes, Asinopape, & Andrinopolis, & sic in Constantinopolim, vbi communiter est sedes Imperatoris Græciæ. Qui autem viam eligit per aquas versus Constantinopolim nauigare, accipiat sibi portum, prout voluerit, propinquum siue remotum, Marsiliæ, Pisi, Ianuz, Venetiz, Romæ, Neapoli, vel alibi: sicque transeat Tusciam, Campaniam, Italiam, Corsicam, Sardiniam, vsque in Siciliam, quæ diuiditur ab Italia per brachium maris non magnum. In Sicilia est mons Ætna iugiter ardens, qui ibidem appellatur Mons Gibelle, & præter illum habentur ibi loca Golhan vbi sunt septem leucæ quasi semper ignem spirantes: secundum diuersitatem colorum harum flammarum estimant incolæ annum fertilem fore, vel sterilem, sicum vel humidum, calidum, vel frigidum: hæc loca vocant caminos Infernalis, & à finibus Italiæ vsque ad ista loca sunt 25. miliaria. Sunt autem in Sicilia aliqua Pomeria in quibus inueniuntur frõdes, flores, & fructus per totum annum, etiam in profunda hyeme. Regnum Siciliæ est bona, & grandis insula habens in circuiu ferè leucas 300. Et ne quis erret, vel de facili reprehendat quoties scribo leucam, intelligendum est de leuca Lombardica, quæ aliquantò maior est Geometrica; & quoties pono numerum, subintelligatur ferè, vel circiter, siue citra, & dictam intendo ponere, de 10. Lombardicis leucis: Geometrica autem leuca describitur, vt notum est, per hos versus.

Quinq; pedes passum faciunt passus quog. centum Viginti quinque staduum, si millia des que Octo facis stadia, duplicatum dat tibi leuca.

Postquam ita que peregrinus se credidit Deo & mari, si prospera sibi fuerit nauigatio, non ascendet in terram, donec intret aliquem portum Græciæ, scilicet, Myrroyt, Valonz, Durasc, siue alium prout Diuinæ placuerit voluntati, & exhinc ibit Constantinopolim prædictam, quæ olim Byzantium, vel Vesaton dicebatur. Hic autem notandum est, quod à portu Venetiæ, vsq; ad Cõstantinopolim directè per mare octingentæ leucæ, & 80. communiter computantur ibi contentæ.

nunc valde modica apparent vestigia Ciuitatis. In Constantinopoli habentur multa mirabilia, ac insuper multæ sanctorum venerandæ reliquie, ac super omnia, preciosissima Crux Christi, seu maior pars illius, & tunica inconfutis, cum spongia & arundine, & vno clauorum, & dimi-de illa Parisijs vnica spina, quam vsque nunc precise conseruo, & est ipsa spina non lignea sed velut de iuncis marinis rigida, & pûgitua. Ecclesia Cõstantinopolitana in honorem sancte Sophiæ, id est, ineffabilis Dei sapientiæ dedicata dicitur, & nobilissima vniuersarum mundi Ecclesiarum, tam in schemate artificiosi operis, quam in seruatis ibi sacrosanctis Reliquijs: nam & continet corpus sanctæ Annæ matris nostræ Domine translatum illuc per Reginam Hele-nam ab Hierosolymis: & corpus S. Lucæ Euangelistæ translatum de Bethania Iudeæ; Et Corpus beati Ioannis Chrysostomi ipsius Ciuitatis Episcopi, cum multis alijs reliquijs preciosis; quoniam est ibi vas grande cum huiusmodi reliquijs velut marmoræ de Petra Enhydros, quod iugiter de sciplo defudans aquam, semel in anno inuenitur suo suatore repletum. Ante hanc Ecclesiam, super columnam marnioream habetur de ære aurato eperæ suiorio, magna imago Iustiniani quondam Imperatoris super equum sedentis: fuit autem primitus in manu imaginis fabricata sphaera rotunda, quæ iam diu è manu sua sibi cecidit, in signum quòd Imperrator multarum terrarum dominium perdidit. Namque solebat esse Dominus, Romanorum, Græcorum, Asiæ, Syriæ, Iudeæ, Ægypti, Arabiæ, & Persiæ, at nunc solum retinet Græciam, cum aliquibus terris Græciæ adiacentibus, sicut Calitrum, Cholchos, Ortigo, Tylbriam, Minos, Flexon, Melos, Carpatas, Lemnon, Thraciam, & Macedoniam totam: Suntq; sub eo Caypoplij, & alti Pynntardi, ac maxima pars Commannorum. Porrò imago tenet manum eleuatam & extentam in orientem, velut in signum cominationis ad Orientales infideles. De prædicta terra Thraciæ fuit Philosophus Aristoteles oriundus in Ciuitate Stageres, & est ibi in loco tumba eius velut altare, vbi & singulis annis certo diè celebratur à populo festum illius, ac si fuisse sanctus. Temporibus ergò magnorum consiliorum conueniunt illuc sapientes terræ, re-putantes sibi per inspirationem immitti consilium optimum de agendis. Item ad diuisionem Thraciæ & Macedoniæ sunt duo mirabiliter alti montes, vnus Olympus, alter Athos, cuius vltimi vmbra oriente sole apparet ad 76. miliaria, vsque in insulam Lemnon. In horum cacumine montium ventus non currit, nec aer mouetur, quod frequentèr probatum est per ingenium Astronomorum, qui quandoque ascendentes scripserunt literas in puluere, quas sequenti anno inueniunt quasi recentèr scriptas, & quia est ibi purus aer sine mixtione, elementis aque, necesse est vt ascendentes habeant secum spongas aquæ plenas pro anhelitus respira-tione: In prædicta autem sanctæ sophiæ Ecclesia, (sicut ibidem dicitur,) voluit olim quidam Imperator corpus cuiusdam sui defuncti sepelire cognati: cuius cum foderetur sepulchrum, ventum est ad mausoleum antiquum in quo super incineratum corpus iacebat discus auri puri, & erat sculptum in eo literis Græcis, Hebraicis, & Latinis sc. Iesus Christus nascetur de Virgine, & ego credo in eum. Et erat simul inscripta data defuncti secundum modum illius temporis, quæ continebat duo millia annorum ante incarnationem ipsius Christi de Maria Virgine. Seruatur quoque hodierno tempore eadem patina in Theaurario eiusdem Ecclesiæ, & dicitur illud corpus fuisse Hermetis, sapientis. Omnes quidem, terrarum, regionum, & insularum homines, qui isti Greco obediunt Imperatori sunt Christiani, & baptizati, tamen variant singuli in aliquo articulo fidem suam a nostra vera fide Catholica, & diuersificant in multis suos ritus à ritibus Romanæ Ecclesiæ, quia iamdiu omiserunt obedire Pontifici Romano, dicentes, quoniam beatus Petrus Apostolus habuit sedem in Antiochia, quamuis passus fuit in Roma: Idcirco patriarcha Antiochenus habet in illis Orientalibus partibus similem potestatem, quam Pontifex Romanus in istis Occidentalibus. Imperator etiam Constantinopolitanus creat eorum patriarcham, & instituit pro sua voluntate Archiepiscopos, & Episcopos, & con-

"Vel Achon.

A Constantinopoli qui voluerit ire pedes, transibit statim nauigio Brachium Sancti Georgij quod satis est strictum, ibique ad Rughinal quod est forte castrum, inde ad Puluereal, & hinc ad castrū Synopolū. Ex tunc intrat Capadociam, terram latam sed plenam altis montibus,

- montibus, deinde Turciam ad portum Theueron, & ad Ciuitatem ita dictam, nunc munitam firmis turribus, ac muris, per quam transit fluiuius Reglay. Postea tranfit sub Alpbibus Noyremont, & per valles de Mallenbrinis in districto Rupium, ac per villam Doronatum, & alias villas adiacentes fluiuijs Reglay, & Granconia, sicque peruenit ad Antiochiam minorem super Reglay, quæ vocatur nobilior Ciuitas Syriæ: Notandum autem quod Regnum olim dictum Syria, modo communiter vocatur Suria. Illa verò Antiochia, est magna, pulchra, ac firma, licet quandoque maior, pulchrior, ac firmior fuerit. Tunc autem transitur per Ciuitates Lantoniam, Gibellam, Tortusiam, Toruplam, & Berythum super mare vbi sanctus Georgius fertur occidisse Draconem. Hinc pergitur in Ciuitatem nunc dictam Acon, quondam Prolomaidem, antiquitus Acharon, quæ tempore quo eam vltimò Christiani tenebant circa annù incarnationis Domini 1280. erat Ciuitas valde fortis, sed modò apparent eius magnæ ruinæ. Porro a Constantinopoli poterit peregrinus facilius versus Hierosolymorù partes per mare nauigare quàm per terras peregrinare prædictas, si deus illi propitijs fuerit, & mare fidè cõseruauerit. Qui ergò a Cõstantinopoli iter trãsire nauigando disponit, tendat ad Ciuitatem Myrnam vbi nunc ossa Sancti Nicholai venerantur, & sic procedendo per multa maritima loca veniet ad Insulam Sio vbi crescit gummi masticum lucidum: Inde ad Insulam Pathmos Sancti Ioannis Euangelistæ, & ad Ephesum vbi idem noscitur sepultus: hanc totam minorem Asiam tenent nunc pessimi Turci, & eam appellant minorem Turciam. Post Ephesum nauigatur per plures Insulas vsq; Pateram Ciuitatem, vnde oriundus fuit beatus Nicholaus, ac per Myrtham vbi stetit Ephesus, vbi nascuntur fortia vina valde, deinde ad Insulam Cretæ, hinc Coos postea Langò, vnde Hippocrates Medicus dicitur natus: tuncq; ad grandem Insulam Rhodum: & sciendũ quod a Constantinopoli vsq; Rhodũ, per mare dicuntur ducẽtæ octuaginta leucæ. Hanc insulam totam tenent, & gubernant Christiani Hospitalarij nunc tẽporis, quæ quondam Colosse dicebatur: nempe & multi Saracenorum adhuc eam sic appellant, vnde & Epistola, quam beatus Paulus ad habitatores huius Insulæ scripsit, intitulabatur ad Colossenses. Ab hoc loco nauigando in Cyprum, aspicitur absorptio Ciuitatis Sathalia, quæ sicut olim Sodoma dicitur perijisse, propter vnicum crimen contra naturam a quodam Iuvene petulante commissum. Sciendum quod a Rhodo ad Cyprum feruntur plenè quingentæ quinquaginta leucæ: Cyprus magna, & pulchra est Insula habens Archiepiscopatũ, cum quinque Episcopatibus suffraganeis: Illuc Famogosta, est vnus de principalibus portibus mundi, in quo ferè omnium mercatores conueniunt nationum, tam Christianorum, quam multorum Paganorum, & similiter apud portum Limechon. Est ibi & Abbacia ordinis sancti Benedicti, in monte sanctæ Crucis, vbi dicitur saluati latronis seruari crux, qui in eadem cruce audiuit à Christo, Hodie mecum eris in Paradiso. Corpus etiam sancti Hylanonis seruatur ibi, in castro Damers quod Rex Cyprici diligentiſſimè custodiri: Vltra modum fortia vina nascuntur in Cypro, quæ primo rubra, post annum albescunt, & quo vetustiora, eo albiora, ac magis odorifera, ac fortia efficiuntur. Vterius paucissimæ villæ, aut Ciuitates sunt Christianorum, sed ferè omnia Saraceni possident infideles: et proh dolor, ab Anno 1200. incarnationis Domini aut circa, pacificè tenuerunt. Qui autem a Cypro prosperè legit spacia maris, poterit in duobus naturalibus diebus peruenire in portum Ioppæ, qui Iasse nunc nuncupatur, & proximus est a Ierusalem, distans 16. tantum leucas, hoc est dieta cum dimidia. Et sciendum quod circa medium, inter Cyprum, & Iasse est portus Tyri quondam munitissimæ Ciuitatis, hanc dum vltimo Saraceni à Christianis ceperunt turpissimè destruxerunt, custodientes iam curiosè portum, timore Christianorum. Ille portus non vocatur modò Tyrus, sed Sur, Nam & ab illa parte est ibi introitus terræ Surie. Ante istam Ciuitatem Tyrum habetur quidam lapis, super quem dominus noster Iesus Christus sedendo suis discipulis vel populis prædicauit. Vnde, & Christiani olim super hunc locum construxerunt Ecclesiam in nomine Saluatoris. Peregrinus vero qui ab hoc loco vult peregrinari, morosè sciat, quod ad octo leucas à Tyro in orientem est Sarcpta Sydoniorum, vbi olim Elias Propheta filium viduæ suscitauit a morte. Itemq; sciat, quod a Tyro in vnica dieta pergere potest in Achon, siue Acharon supra scripta. Circa Acon versus mare, ad 120. stadia, quorum 16. leucam constituunt, est mons Carmeli, vbi morabatur præfatus Elias, & super alium montem Villa Saffra vbi sanctus Iacobus, & Ioannes germani Apostoli nascebantur, & in quorum natiuitatis loco pulchra habetur Ecclesia. Item propè Acon ad ripam dictam Beleon, est fossa multum vtilis, & mirabilis quæ dicitur fossa Mennon, hæc est rotunda circumferentia, cuius diameter continet prope 100. cubitos, plena alba & resplendente arena, & munda ex qua conficitur mundum & perlucidum vitrum. Via à Francia aut Flandria per solas terras vsque Ierusalem.

Iteribus, quæ per terras, & per mare a nostris partibus ducunt in terram promissionis descriptis, restat breuiter dicendum de alia via, per quam omnino mare transcendendum non est, videlicet per Almaniã, per Bohemiã, per Ptuissiam, & hinc per terram Paganorum regni Lituaniæ, & sic per longam, & pessimam terram primæ Tartariæ vsque in Indiam: Dico autem Tartariæ primæ, quoniam de hac exiit primus Imperator totius Tartariæ, qui semper vocatur Grand Can, quo vix maiorem mundus habet terrenum Dominum, excepto Imperatore superioris Indiæ, de quibus in secunda & tertia huius tractatus partibus, aliquanto est diffusus narrandum. Cuncti principes huius primæ Tartariæ, quorum summus semper vocatur Bachu, & moratur in Ciuitate Horda, reddunt Imperatori Grand Can, magna tributa. Est autem hæc prima Tartaria terra misera & sabulosa, & infructuosa: hoc enim scio, quod per aliquod tempus steti in ea, & perambulauit Insulas, regiones, & terras circumiacentes, scilicet, Russiæ, Inssa, Craco, Latton, Restau, & alias nonnullas: crescunt namque in ista Tartaria modica blada, pauca vna, & fructuum, ac frugum parua copia, exceptis herbis pro pastu Bestiarum, quarum ibi est abundantia: nam carnibus illarum vescuntur pro omnibus cibarijs, ius earum sorbentes, & pro potu bibentes lac de omni genere bestiarum. Quin etiam pauperiores manducant canes, lupos, catos, ratos, talpas, ac inures, ac huiusmodi bestiolas omnes: sed nec aliquis Princeps aut prælatus comedit vltra semel in die, & hoc parè, vel parcissimè: & sunt homines valde immundi, quia non nisi benè diuites vtuntur mappis, linteaminibus, aut lineis indumentis: sed nec habent copiam lignorum, vnde & fimum bouum, ac omnium bestiarum desiccatum ad solem accipiunt pro ignis materia, vbi se calefaciunt, & coquendo coquunt. Aestiuo tempore, cadunt ibi frequenter tempestates tonitruorum, fulminū, & grandinum, quibus domus, arbores, bestiæ, & homines, comburuntur, euelluntur, & occiduntur. Nam & quandoque subrepentè oritur ibi calor immoderatus, & improuiso frigus immoderatum. Deinq̃ cum terra illa, se multum inclinet ad polum Septentrionalem, fortius ibi gelare solet, & frequentius, ac diutius quàm ad partes nostras, vnde & quasi omnes habent ibi stupas, in quibus manducant, & operantur. Nec valet à nostris partibus ingredi ad illam nisi tempore gelicidij, quod ad introitum eius sunt tres dietæ, de via molli, aquatica, & profunda, in qua dum viator putaret se stare securum, profundetur in lutum ad tibias, ad genua, ad femora vel ad renes: hoc ergo sciendum quod paucissimi tendunt per hanc terram in viam promissionis: Nam iter est graue, distortum, longum, & periculosum sicut audistis, imò periculosius quàm scribo.

Descripto sicut potui tripliciter itinere in terram sanctam, restat videre de duabus alijs vijs, quæ incidenter solent contingere peregrinis: Multi namque illorum ex speciali deuotione desiderant visitare ossa beatissimæ Virginis Catharinæ in monte Sinay: Cum igitur ipsis sit necessarius Soldani Babyloniar conductus eo quod Imperator sit, & dominus omnium illarum terrarum, quidam postquam perueniunt in Cyprū tendunt primò in Babyloniam & Egypti, pro impetrando conductu securo, atque inde pergentes in Sinay vadunt in Ierusalem. Quidam verò postquam perfecterunt peregrinationem Hierosolymitanam, pergunt per terras ad Soldanum pro conductu, & tum in Sinay, propter quod vtramque viam breuiter describo. De Cypro in Egyptum itur per mare relinquendo Hierosolymorum terram ad manum sinistram, & accipitur primus portus Egypti, dictus Damaia: ibi quondam fuit Ciuitas valde munita, sed quod Christiani illam, prima & altera vice ceperunt, Sarraceni vltimò destruxerunt, & aliam remotius à mari eiusdem nominis Ciuitatem ædificauerunt: Hinc venitur in portum Alexandriae Egypti, quæ est Ciuitas magna, pulchra, & fortis valde, sed absq; aquis potabilibus. Adducit tamen sibi per longos ductus aquam Nili fluminis in cisternis ad potandum. Alexandria nobilis 30. stadia habet longitudinis decemque inlatum. In ea restant adhuc

EXtra hanc ciuitatem Cayr, est campus seu ager Balsami: circa quod sciendum, quòd optimum totius mundi Balsamum in magno crescit Indiæ deserto, vbi Alexander Magnus dicitur quondam locutus fuisse arboribus Solis & Lunæ, de quo in sequentibus aliquid est scri-bendum. Illo itaque Indiæ Balsamo duntaxat excepto, non est liquor in vniuerso orbe, qui huic creditur comparari. Has arbores seu arbuta Balsami fecit quondã quidam de Caliphis Acgypti de loco Engaddi inter mare mortuum, & Ierico, vbi Domino volente excreuerat, eradi-cari, & in agro prædicto plantari: Est tamen hoc mirandum, quòd vbiunque alibi siue propè, siue remotè plantantur, quamuis fortè virent, & exurgant, non tamen fructificant. Et è contrario apparet hoc miraculosum, quòd in hoc agro Cayr non se permittunt coli per Sarracenos, sed solummodò per Christianos, vel aliter non fructificant: Et dicunt ipsi Sarraceni hoc sæpius se tentasse: sunt autem arbuta trium, vel quatuor pedum altitudinis, velut vsque ad renes hominis, & lignum eorum aspiciendum, sicut vitis syluestris. Folia non marcescunt, quin prius marcescant fructus, cernitur ad formam Cubebæ, & gummi eorum est Balsamum. Ipsi appellant arbores, Enoch kalsc, fructum Abebifau, & liquorem gribalse. Extrahitur verò gummi de arbutulis per hunc modum: De lapide acuto, vel de osse fracto dant scissuras per cortices in ligno, & ex vulneribus Balsamum lachrymat, quòd in vasculis suscipiunt, cauentes quout possunt, ne quid de illo labatur in terram. Nam si de ferro, vel alio metallo fieret incisura, liquor Balsami corrumpetur à sua virtute. Veri Balsami virtutes sunt magnæ quidem, & innumerosæ: nam vix aliquis mortalium scire potuit omnes, quamuis inter Physicos quinquaginta scribantur. Rarò vtique Sarraceni vendunt Christianis purum & verum Balsamum, quin prius commisceant, & falsificant sicut ego ipse frequenter vidi. Nam aliqui tertiam, seu quartam partem immiscunt terre bynthine. Alii ramusculos arbutarum, & fructus eorum coquant in oleo, quòd vendunt pro Balsamo: & quidam (quòd pessimum est) nil Balsami habentes, distillant oleum, per clauos gariophillos, & spicum nardum, & similes odoriferas species, hoc pro Balsamo exponentes, atque alijs pluribus modis deludunt ementes. Sed & Mercatores inuicem nonnquam sophificant altera vice: probatio autem veri Balsami potest haberi pluri-bus modis, quorum aliquos hic describo. Est enim Citrini coloris, valdè clarum, & purum, & fortissimum in odoris fragrantia: si ergò apparet alterius quàm Citrini coloris, sciatum non sim-plicis, sed cuiuscunq; commixtæ substantiæ, vel ita spissum, vt non possit fluere, scitote sophi-ficatum. Item si posueris modicum veri Balsami in manus palma, non poteris sustinere cam linaliter in feruore splendentis Solis ad spacium recitandæ Dominicæ orationis. Item si in clara flamma ignis vel candelæ cereæ miseris punctum cultelli cum gutta puri Balsami, ipsa gutta de facile comburetur. Item si in scutella munda cum puro lacte caprino posueris modicum veri Balsami, statim miscebit se, & vnietur cum lacte, ita vt Balsamum non cognoscetur. Item è contra, si posueris verum Balsamum cum aqua Lympida, nunquam miscebit se aquæ, etiam si aquam moueris vehementer, imò Balsamum semper tendit ad fundum vasis, nam est in sui

Nilus supra dictus fluius Aegypti appellatus est alio nomine Gyon, cuius origo est à Paradiso terrestri. Hic venit currens per deserta Indiae Maioris, hincque per meatus subterraneos transit plures terras: exiens sub Monte Aloth, inter Indiam, & Aethiopiam, & Mauritaniam intra deserta Aegypti, irrigans totam longitudinem Aegypti vsque ad Alexandriam, ibique se perdit in mare. Sole intrante signum Canceri omni anno, hoc est, ad quindenam ante Festum Natiuitatis Ioannis Baptistae incipit paulatim fluius crescere, & inundare, quousque sol intret Virginem, quod est circa Festum Laurentij, atque ex tunc decrefcere, & minui, donec Sole veniente in Lybram intra suos alueos se conseruet: Dùmque per inundationem nimis effluit, dammificat terræ culturas, & fit Charistia in Aegypto. Et similiter dum parùm exundat, ingruit esuries, quoniam in Aegypto rarissimè pluit, aut apparent nubes, quoniam si quandoque pluerit in æstate, terra nurius adimpletur. Terra Aegypti continet in longitudine dietas quindecim, in latitudine ferè tres, & habet triginta dietas deserti: à finibus Aegypti vsque Nubiam, duodecim sunt dietæ. Hi Nubij sunt Christiani, sed nigri, velut Aethiopes, vel Mauri.

Modicum est maior Aquila, cristam in capite maiorem pauonis, collum habens croceum, dorsum Indicum, alas purpureas, caudam duobus coloribus, per transfuerum croceo & rubeo regulatam, qui singuli colores sunt ad splendorem Solis delectabiliter videntibus resplendentes. In Aegypto multæ habentur arbores, sexcies aut septies in anno fructificantes, ibique frequenter inueniuntur in terra Smaragdi, & circa oram Nili alij lapides pretiosi. A Babylonia Aegypti, vsque ad ciuitatem Meccam, (quam Pagani ibidem appellant Iacrib, & est in magnis desertis Arabiæ) sunt triginta duæ dietæ. In ea veneratur detestandum cadaver Machon siue Machometi honorabiliter & reuerenter in Templo eius, quod ibi vocatur Mulker, de cuius vita aliquid infra narrabo. Per prædicta itaque apparet, quod Imperator Sarracenorum Soldanus Babyloniæ, valde potens est Dominus.

CAPVT. 10.

De conductu Soldani, & via vsque in Sinay.

Prius dictum est de reuerentia Soldani, quando ad ipsum intratur exhibenda. Sciendum ergo, cum ab eo petitur securus conductus, nemini denegare consuevit, sed datur petentibus communiter sigillum eius, in appenditione absque literis: hoc sigillum, pro vexillo in virga aut hasta dum peregrini ferunt, omnes Sarraceni videntes illud flexis genibus in terram se reuerenter inclinant, & portantibus omnem exhibent humanitatem. Verumtamen satis maior fit reuerentia literis Soldani sigillatis, quod & Admirabiles, & quicumque alij Domini, quando eis monstrantur, antequam recipiant, semultim inclinant: Deinde ambabus manibus eas capientes ponunt super propria capita, postea osculantur, & tandem legunt inclinati cum magna veneratione, quibus semel aut bis perlectis, offerunt se promptos ad explendum quicquid ibi iubetur, ac insuper exhibent deferenti, quicquid possint commodi, vel honoris: sed talem conductum per literas Soldani vix quisquam peregrinorum accipit, qui non in Curia illius stetit, vel notitiam apud illum habuerit. Ego autem habui in recessu meo, in quibus etiam continebatur ad omnes sibi subiectos speciale mandatum, vt me permitterent intrare, & respicere singula loca, pro mea placito voluntatis, & mihi exponerent quorumcumque locorum mysteria distinctè & absque vilo velamine veritatis, ac me cum omni sodalitate mea benigne reciperent, & in cunctis rationalibus audirent, requisiti autem sine cesse foret de civitate conducerent in civitatem. Habito itaque peregrinis conductu, ad Montem Sinay potest à Cayvnam duarum incipere semitarum, vsque vallem Helim, vbi adhuc sunt duodecim fontes aquarum. Nam vna viarum est, vt petrascat passagium maris rubri, non longè ab eodem loco, vbi olim populus Israel Duce Mose, Deo iubente, siccis pedibus transijt idem mare. CAPVT. II.

Mons Sinay appellatur ibi desertum Syn: quasi in radice montis istius habetur Cæno-bium Monachorum pergrande, cuius clausura in circuiu est firmata muris altis, & por-tis ferreis, pro nictu bestiarum deserti. Hi Monachi sunt Arabes, & Græci, & in magno conuentu, multum Deo deuoti: viuunt in magna abstinentia, vtentes simplicibus cibariis, de lotis & dactylis, & huiusmodi, nec vinum potantes, festis exceptis. Illic in Ecclesia Beatæ Virginis & matris Catherinæ semper lampades plurimæ sunt ardentes, nam habetur ibi plena copia olei oliuarum. A posteriori parte magni altaris monstratur locus, vbi Moyssi apparuit Dominus in rubo ardente, ipsum rubum adhuc seruans, quem dum Monachi intrant, semper se discaceant gratia illius verbi, quo Deus iussit Moyssi ibidem, Solue calciamentum de pedibus tuis, locus enim in quo stas, terra sancta est: hunc locum appellant Bezeleclj, id est, ymbra Dei. Et propè altare tribus gradibus in altitudine, habetur capsula, seu Tumba Alabastri, sanctissima contines ossa Virginis. Christiani qui ibidem morantur, cum magna reuerentia aduenientibus peregrinis, à Monachorum prælato, seu ab alio in hoc instituto, excipiuntur. In quodam instrumento argenteo consuevit ossa defricare, siue linire, vt ex iis exeat modicum olei, velut parumper sudoris, quod tamen non apparet in colore sui tanquam olei seu Balsami, sed aliquan-tulum pluris magnitudinis. Et ex isto traditur interdum aliquid petentibus peregrinis, sed pa-rum, quia nec multum exudat. Ostendere solent & caput ipsius Catherinæ cum inuoluenito sanguinolento, & multas præterea sanctas, & venerabiles reliquias, quæ omnia intuitus sum diligenter & sæpè, oculis indignis. Habent quoque in ista Ecclesia propriam Lampadem quilibet Monachorum, quæ imminente illius discessu lumen per diuinum miraculum variat vel extinguit. Ego etiam curiosus super vno dubio quod prius audiveram, plures interrogationes feci ab aliquibus Monachorum, vtrem scilicet prælato eorum decedente semper successor per diuinum signum eligeretur: & vix tandem ab eis recepi responsum, quod per vnum isto-rum miraculorum habetur successor, videlicet in missa sepulturæ defuncti omnibus Monacho-rum lampadibus extinctis, illius sola Dei nutu reaccenditur, quem fieri vult prælatum, vel de cælo inuenitur missus breuiculus super altare, inscriptum habens nomen prælati futuri. Intra hanc Ecclesiam nunquam musca, vel aranea, aut huiusmodi immundi vermiculi nascuntur, quod similiter per diuinum accidit miraculum: nam antè replebatur Ecclesia talibus immun-ditiis, & totus conuentus recederet ad construendam Ecclesiam in alio loco. Et ecce Dei ge-netrix virgè beata eis visibiliter obuiauit, iubens reuerti, & dicens nunquam Ecclesiam similibus infestari. In cuius obuiationis loco, in ascensu procliuo huius montis per multos gradus construxerunt Ecclesiam, ædificium excellens, in honorem eiusdem virginis. Et aliquot altissimum, per eiusdem montis ascensum est vetus Capella, quam vocant Eliæ Prophetæ, & locum spe-cialiter appellant Horeb. A cuius latere in montis appendentia colitur vinea, quam nominant Iosue schophis, de qua quidam putare volunt, quod Sanctus Ioannes Euangelista eam prius plantauit. In superiori verò montis vertice, est Capella, quam dicunt Moyssi, & illic rupis ser-uans adhuc corporis eius formam impressam dum se abscondit, veritus dominum respicere in facie. Locus quoque ibi ostenditur, in quo Deus tradidit ei decem mandata, siue legem proprio digito scriptam, & sub rupe cauerna, in qua mansit ieiunus diebus 40. Ab hoc monte qui vo-catur Mosh, restat via producta ad quartam Leuceæ, vsque in montem qui dicitur Sanctæ Ca-therinæ per vallem speciosam, ac multum frigidam. Circa eius inediam habetur Ecclesia, no-

Per iſtud latum & longum deſertum, moratur vel potiùs vagatur maxima multitudo malorum, & incompoſitorum hominum, qui non manent in domibus, ſed ſub pellium tabernaculis, quemadmodum & olim filij Iſrael in eodem deſerto ambulauerunt, quoniam aqua non manent ibi diu in locis certis: & ideò mutant tabernacula ſequentes aquas: non colunt terras, rarò manducant panem, ſed tantùm carnes beſtiarum deſerti quas venantur, coquentes ſuper petras calefactas ad Solem: fortes ſunt & feroces, & velut deſperati de vita propria non curantes, qui licet non habeant arma præter lanceam, & tarchiam, & caput grandi albo linteolo inuolutum, tamen non verentur exercere guerras, & inire prælia contra Dominum ſuum Soldanum: nam & ego ſtipendiarius in expeditione Soldani contra eos ſæpiùs fui. Iſti ſunt quidem Arabes, ſed notiori nomine appellantur Bedoyns & Acopars, & quamvis plurima mala agunt per deſertum, rarò tamen nocent peregrinis beatæ Virginis Catharinæ. Itaque peregrinus qui debitum tenuit iter, veniat à finibus deſerti in primam ciuitatem Iudææ, quæ dicitur Berſeba: eſt vicus grandis Hebron inde miliario vergens ad Auſtrum: Hieronymus. Noandum, Theros Mons Dei in regione Magiaw iuxta Montem. Noandum ſimiliter, Arabiam in deſerto eſſe, cui iungitur Mons, & deſertum Sarracenorum, quod vocatur Phaaran. Mihi autem videtur, quod duplici nomine, nunc Mons Sinay, nunc Oreb vocatur. Hieronymus. Phaaran nunc oppidum trans Oreb, iam iunctum Sarracenis, qui in ſolitudine vagi pererant. Hos interfecerunt filij Iſrael, cum de Monte Sinay caſtra mouiſſent. Eſt ergo, vt dixi, trans Iordanem contra Auſtralem plagam, & diſtat ab Helyn, contra Orientem, itinere dierum trium. In deſerto autem Phaaran, Scriptura commemorat habitaſſe Iſmaelem, vnde & Iſmaelita, qui nunc Sarraceni. Legimus quoque Chederlaomer percuffiſſe eos qui erant in deſerto Phaaran quod nunc dicitur Aſcalon, & circa eam Regio Paleſtinorum. Hieronymus. Hæc Berſheba erat bona & ſpectabilis, vltimo tempore Chriſtianorum, & adhuc ibi reſtant nonnullæ Eccleſiæ.

Ciuitas Hebron:

Hinc ad Leucas duas venit in ciuitatem Hebron, & Hebron ab Helyn diſtat ad Meridianam plagam millibus circiter 39. de qua legitur, quòd primis temporibus fuerit habitatio maximorum Gigantium, Regumque, poſteà Dauidis. In hac eſt illa ſpelunca duplex, quæ ſeruat oſſa ſanctorum Patriarcharum, Abrahæ, Iſaac, & Iacob, Saræ, & Rebecæ, conſiſtitque ad radicem montis, & habetur ſuper iſtam cum propugnaculis ad modum caſtri conſtructa pulchra Eccleſia. Sarraceni appellant iſtam ſpeluncam Kanaackaba, cuſtodientes locum diligenter ac reuerenter propter honorem Patriarcharum, & non permittentes quenquam Chriſtianorum aut Iudæorum ingredi, niſi oſtenderit ſuper hæc ſpecialeſ gratiam à Soldano. Nam ipſi communiter reputant tam Chriſtianos quam Iudæos pro canibus, & quando deſpectiue eos volunt appellare, dicunt Kyp, id eſt, canis.

Vallis Mambre. Quercus arida.

Ab Hebron incipit vallis Mambre, quæ protenditur ferè vſque Ieruſalem: haud remotè ad Hebron eſt mons Mambre, & in ipſo monte arbor quercus arida, quæ pro antiquitate ſui, ſpeciale ſibi nomen meruit in mundo vniuerſo, vt vocetur arbor ſicca: Sarraceni autem eam dicunt Dirp: hæc creditur ſteſſiſſe ante tempora Abrahæ, tamen quidam volunt putare à mundi initio, virens donec paſſionis Chriſti tempore ſiccaretur. Hoc autem certum eſt, haberi eam ab omnibus nationibus in veneratione.

Gambil ſpecies Aromatis.

In quodam loco præfatæ vallis eſt planities, vbi per plures ſoſſas effodiunt homines Gambil, quod comeditur loco ſpecieſ aromaticarum, & per villas deſertum venale. Sed & hoc audiui, quòd nulla ibi ſoſſa ita valet exhauriri, ſi dimittatur per annum, quin inueniatur de prædicta Gambil impleta.

Ad duas leucas de Hebron, monſtratur ſepultura Loth filij fratris Abrahæ. Itè de ciuitate Hebrò per quinque leucas anioeni itineris, hoc eſt, in media die, venit in Bethleem Iudææ. Notandū, Arbe, CAPVT 13.

De ciuitate Bethleem, & semita vsque in Ierusalem.

Bethleem Ciuitas longa sed parua, firmata est vndique fossatis fortibus: cuius modò habi-tatores quasi omnes sunt Christiani. In illa ad orientem honesta, & placida habetur Ecclesia: (nescio an aliquam eiusdem quantitatis viderim placentiorem,) extrinsecus habens turres salturas, pinnacula, & propugnacula nobili artificio fabricata, & intrinsecus 44. de marmore decoro columnas. Ad principalis autem turris dextram in descensu 16. graduum, est diuersorij locus, vbi ex intacta & benedicta Virgine nascebatur Christus homo Deus. Hic locus est mul-timum artificiose operatus in armore, & generose depictus auro & argento, varioque colore, cui propè ad tres passus est præsepe in quo reclinabatur natus Dominus, ibique videtur puerus quidam, in quo aliqui putare volunt cecidisse stellam ductricem trium Magorum, post eius peractum officium.

Est etiam ante præsepe Domini, tumba beati Interpretis Hieronymi, & extra Ecclesiam mô-stratur cathedra, in qua residere solebat. Sub clausura huius ecclesie ad dextram, per 18. gradus apparet fossa, quæ dicitur ossium innocentium causa Christi ab Herode impio occisorum.
Hinc ad quingentos, vel citra pedes habetur alia Ecclesia nomine Sancti Nicholai, in quo scilicet loco, post recessum Magorum beata Virgo tempus sui puerperij obseruauit. Ibique monstrantur mira saxa albis respersa maculis, quod simplices narrant saxi euenisse de abun-dantia lactis virginis ab vberibus eiecisti. In via Bethleem ab Helya iniliario contra meridianam plagam iuxta viam quæ ducit Ebron, Christiani de Bethleem colunt circa ciuitatem inultam copiam vinearum, ad potum sui ipsorum. Nam Saraceni non colunt vineas, nec vina vendunt neque in manifesto bibunt, eò quod liber legis Mahomet, facit super hoc prohibitionem, & in-terpretatur maledictionem.

De Bethleem in Austrum duabus leucis habetur claustrum Sanctæ Charitatis, ibidem suo tempore Abbatissæ. A Bethleem tendendo Ierusalem inuenitur ad dimidiam leucam Ecclesia, in cuius loco Angelus dixit pastoribus, Annuncio vobis gaudium magnum, quod natus est nobis Saluator qui est Christus Dominus. Est & tumba Rachel Patriarchæ, vbi etiam coaceruata iacent 12. saxa magna, quæ quidam autumant illic tumulasse Jacob, eò quod Benjamin duo-decimus sibi filius nascebatur ibidem. Sicque venit in Sanctam Ciuitatem Ierusalem. Notandum, Bethel vicus est 12. ab Helya ad dextram euntibus Neapoli, quæ primum Luza vocabatur. Sed ex eo tempore quo ibat ad Ieroboam filium Nebar, vituli aurei fabricati sunt, & à decem tribubus adorata, vocata est Bethauen, id est, Domus Idoli, quæ autè vocabatur Domus Dei. Hieronymus. Sed & Ecclesia ædificata est vbi dormiuit Jacob, pergens Mesopotamiam, vbi & ipsi loco Bethel, id est, domus Dei nomen imposuit.

CAPVT 14.

De Ecclesia gloriosi Sepulchri Domini in vrbe Ierusalem.

Ierusalem cum tota terra promissionis, est quasi vna de quinque prouincijs vel pluribus, quibus Regnum Syriæ distinguitur. Iungitur autem Iudæa ad Orientem Regno Arabiæ, ad me-ridiem Aegypti, ad Occidentem mari magno, & ad Aquilonem Regno Syriæ. Iudæa terra per diuersa tempora à diuersis possessa fuit nationibus, Cananæorum, Iudæorum, Assyriorum, Per-sæ, Medorum, Macedonum, Græcorum, Romanorum, Christianorum, Saracenorum, Bar-barorum, Turcorum, & Tartarorum. Cuius rei causa merito potest æstimari, quod non sustinuit Deus magnos peccatores longo tempore permanere in terra sibi tam placita, & tam sancta.

Itaque peregrinus veniens in Ierusalem primò expleat suam peregrinationem, ad reuerendum & sacrosanctum Domini nostri Iesu Christi sepulchrum: cuius Ecclesia est in vltima ciuitatis extremitate, ad partem aquilonarem, cum proprio sui ambitus muro ipsi ciuitati adiunla, ad latus dextrum, continetur incomparabilis thesaurus gloriosissimi sepulchri, habentis octo pedes longitudinis, & quinque latitudinis. Et quoniam in toto habitaculo nulla est apertura præter paruum ostium, illustratur accedentibus peregrinis pluribus lampadibus, (quarum ad minus vna coram sepulchro iugiter ardere solet) ingressus.

Sciendum, quod ante breue tempus solebat sepulchrum esse ingressis peregrinis accessibile, ad tangendum & osculandum, sed quia multi vel effringebant, vel conabantur sibi effringere aliquid de petra sepulchri, iste Soldanus Melech Mandybron fecit illud confabricari, vt nec osculari valeat, nec adiri, sed tantummodo intueri. Et ob illam causam in sinistro pariete in altitudine quinque pedum immurari effracturam petræ sepulchri ad quantitatem capitis humani, quod tanquam pro sepulchro ibi ab omnibus veneratur, tangitur, & osculatur.

Melech Mandybron Soldanus.

Mandeuillus de hoc dubitat.

Dicitur ibi quoque communiter præfatam lampadem coram sepulchro singulis annis in die Sanctæ Parascheues, hora nona extingui, & in media nocte Paschæ sine humano studio reaccendi. Quod (si ita est) euidentis diuini beneficii miraculum est. Et quamuis id plurimi Christiani simpliciter in magno pietatis merito credant, plerique tamen est in suspitione. Fortè talia Sarraceni custodes sepulchri fingentes diuulgauerunt, pro augendo emolumenta tributi, quod inde resularct, seu oblationum quæ dantur.

Singulis autem annis in die cœnæ Domini in Parascheue, & in vigilia Paschæ, tribus his diebus manet Tabernaculum hoc apertum continuè, & patet omnibus Christianis gentibus accessus, aliàs verò non per annum sine redditione tributi. Intra Ecclesiam, propè parietem dextrum, est Caluarie locus, vbi crucifixus pependit Christus Dominus. Per gradus ascenditur in hunc locum, & est rupis velut albi coloris, cum aliqua rubedine per loca commixta, habens scissuram, quam dicunt Golgotha, in qua maior pars preciosi sanguinis Christi dicitur influxisse: vbi & habetur altare constructum, ante quod consistunt tumbræ Godefridi de Bullion, & aliorum Regum Christianorum, qui circa annum incarnationis Domini, 1100. debellauerunt & obtinuerunt sanctam urbem cum tota patria ex manibus Sarracenorum, & per hoc conquisierunt sibi magnum nomen, vsque in finem sæculi duraturum. Propè ipsius crucifixionis locum continetur literis Græcis hoc scriptum: Ἰσθὶς ἁγιασθεῖς ἵππὸς ἀπὸ τοῦ εὐαγγελιστοῦ εὐαγγελιστοῦ, ἐν τῷ μνημείῳ τῆς σταυρώσεως. Ἰσθὶς ἁγιασθεῖς ἵππὸς ἀπὸ τοῦ εὐαγγελιστοῦ εὐαγγελιστοῦ, ἐν τῷ μνημείῳ τῆς σταυρώσεως. hoc est dicere, Deus Rex noster ante secula operatus est salutem in medio terræ. Item directè in loco, vbi crux sancta stetit cum Christo rupi infixa, habetur hoc exaratum in saxo rupis: Ἰσθὶς ἁγιασθεῖς ἵππὸς ἀπὸ τοῦ εὐαγγελιστοῦ εὐαγγελιστοῦ, ἐν τῷ μνημείῳ τῆς σταυρώσεως. hoc est, quod vides fundamentum est fidei mundi.

Psal. 74. 12.

Haud remotè ab hoc Caluarie monte, habetur & aliud altare, vbi iacet columna flagellationis Domini, cui stant de propinquo & aliæ columnæ quatuor de Marmore aquam iugiter resudantes, & (secundum opinionem simplicium) passionem innocentem Christi descentes. Est sub isto altari crypta, 42. graduum profunda, vbi sancta Helena Regina reperit tres cruces, videlicet Christi, & latronum cum eo crucifixorum, ac etiam clauos crucis Domini in cryptæ pariete.

Iterum taxat ignorantiam vulgi. Regina Helena Angla.

In medio autem chori huius Ecclesiæ, est locus pavementi stratus mirè & pulchrè, ad integrâ cõpalsi figuram, vbi depositum corpus Christi de cruce Ioseph ab Aramathia cum suis adiutoribus lauit & cõdiuit aromatibus. Itè infra Ecclesiam à septentrionali parte ostenditur locus, vbi Christus Magdalena apparuit post suam resurrectionem, quando eum credidit hortulanum.

A dextro autem latere ad ingressum Ecclesiæ, habentur gradus 18. sub quibus est Capella Indorum, vbi soli peregrini de India per sacerdotes suos cantant iuxta ritum suum Missas, celebrantque diuina. Missam faciunt quidem breuissimam, conficientes in principio verbis debitis sacramentum corporis & sanguinis Christi de pane & vino, ac postea paucis orationibus additis, totum oratione Dominica concludunt officium. Hoc autem verum est, quod cum maxima attentione, reuerentia, humilitate, & deuotione se gerunt, & continent diuinis.

Porro illud, quod quidam peruulgauerunt, aut opinati sunt, Iudæam aut Ierusalem, vel Ecclesiam istam consistere in medio totius mundi, propter prædictam scripturam, (in medio terræ) hoc intelligi non potest localiter ad mensuram corporis terræ: Nam si ad terræ latitudinem, quam æstimant inter duos polos, respiciamus, certum est Iudæam non esse in medio, quod tunc esset sub circulo Aequatoris, & esset ibi semper æquinoctium, & vtrumque polorum staret iis in horizonte. Quod utiq; nõ est ita, quod existetibus in Iudæa eleuatur multum polus arcticus.

Rursus si ad terræ longitudinem spectemus, quæ æstimari potest à Paradiso terrestri, scilicet à digniori & latiori terræ loco, versus eius Nadir, scilicet, versus locum sibi in Sphæra terræ oppositum, tunc Iudæa esset ad Antipodes paradisi, quod apparet ita non esse, quod tunc esset vatori de Iudæa ad Paradisum tendentis æqua iuneris mensura, siue tenderet versus Orientem, siue versus Occidentem. Sed hoc non est verisimile nec verum, sicut probatum constat per experientiam multorum. Mihi autem videtur, quod præfata Prophetæ scriptura, potest exponi, in medio terræ, id est, circa medium nostri habitabilis, videlicet vt Iudæa sit circa medium inter

CAPVT. 15.

De scribis alijs Ecclesiarum, & specialiter de templo Domini.

VLtrà duo stadia ab Ecclesia ad Meridiem sancti sepulchri habetur magnū hospitale sancti Ioannis Hierosolymitani, qui caput & fundamentum esse dignoscitur ordinis hospitaliorum modò tenentium Rhodum insulam: in quo recipi possunt omnes Christiani peregrini cu-iuscunque sint conditionis, seu status, vel dignitatis. Nam Saraceni pro leui cura anxij rumoris, prohibent ne apud quenquam suorum Christianum pmoctet. Ad sustentationem ædificij huius hospitalis, habentur in eo 124. columnæ marmoreæ, & in parietibus distincti 54. pilarij, Satis propè hunc locum in orientem, est Ecclesia quæ dicitur, de Domina nostra magna: & indè non remotè alia, quæ dicitur nostræ Domine latinorū, edificata super locum, vbi Maria Magdalene, & Maria Cleophæ cum alijs pluribus, dum Christus cruci affigebatur, flebant & dolores lamen-tabiles exercebant.

Item ab Ecclesia Sancti Sepulchri in orientem ad stadium cum dimidio habetur ædificium mirabile, ac pulchrum valdè, quod templum Domini nominatur, quod constructum est in forma rotunda, cuius circumferentiæ diameter habet 64 cubitos, & altitudo eius 126, & intrinsecus pro sustentatione ædificij, multi pilarij. In medio autem templi est locus altior 14. gradibus, qui & ipse columnis vndiq; est stipatus: & secundum quatuor mundi plagas habet tem-plum quatuor introitus per portas Cypressinas artificiosè compositas, nobilitatq; sculptas, & excisas. Et ante portam aquilonarem intra templum fontem aquæ mundæ, qui quantum olim exundabat, tamen nunc minimè fluit. In toto circuiu ædificij extrinsecus est valdè pro arrio latum spaciū loci, stratum per totum pauimentum marmoribus. Hoc templum non ducitur stare in eodem loco vbi templum Dei stetit in tempore Christi, quo post resurrectionem a Romanis destructo, istud longo post tempore Adrianus Imperator extruxit, sed non ad formam templi prioris: prædictum tamen excelsum in medio templi locum vocant Iudæi sanctum sanctorum.

Sciatis itaq; quod Saraceni magnam exhibent huic templo reuerentiam, & honorem, se-plus illud discalceati intrantes, & positis genibus deuotè Deum omnipotentem exorantes, nulla enim ibidem habetur imago, sed multæ lampades relucentes. Neminem Christianorum seu Iudæorum ingredi sinunt hoc templum, reputantes eos indignos ad hoc, & nimium immundos, vnde nisi virtute literarū quas habuit a Soldano, nec ego fuisset ingressus. Ingrediens autem cum meis sodalibus deposuimus calciamenta, recogitantes cum multa cordis deuotio-ne, nos magis id facere debere, quam incredulos Saracenos.

Et verè meritò est iste locus in magna reuerentia habendus: dum enim Rex Salomon primum in illo templo per Dei iussionem, & Dauidis patris sui commissionem edificasset, exorauit præsentem cuncto populo Israel, vt quicumque illic Deum pro iusta causa rogaret audiretur; & Dominus monstrauit ex auditionis signum per nebulam de cœlo emissam; prout narrat historia veritatis 3. Regum libro.

Porò in eo loco vbi statuerat idem Rex ante templum altare holocausti, videlicet extra por-tam templi occidentalem, habetur & nunc altare, sed non ad instar, nec ad vsum primi; Nam Saraceni, quasi nihil curantes, traxerunt in eo lineas tanquam in astrolabio sigentes in linearum centro batellum, ad cuius vmbra per lineas discernuntur diei horæ.

Etiam in hac atrij parte apparent adhuc vestigia portæ speciosæ, vbi Petrus Apostolus, cum Euangelista Ioanne dixit contracto, In nomine Christi Iesu Nazareni surge, & statim consoli-dabantur illi plantæ.

Habetur & ante Eccleſiam arbor grandis & antiqua, de qua nonnulli fabulantur, quod ad beatæ Mariæ natiuitatem principium accepit, & ortum.

Mons Sion. Mons Sion eſt excelſior locus in vrbe ad cuius radicem, eſt caſtrū ſpectabile conſtruſtum per aliquem Soldanorum. In montis autem cacumine videntur multe ſepulcræ regum Iudeæ, videlicet Dauid, Salomonis, & quorundam de ſucceſſoribus ſuis. Ad introitum montis habetur capella, & in illa lapis monumenti quem Ioseph de Arimathea obuoluit ad oſtium ſepulchri eſt valde magnus, & eſt ibidem aliqua pars columnæ flagellationis, ac pars menſæ ſuper quam Dominus vltimò cænauit cum Apoſtoliſ, & inſtituit noui Teſtamenti ſacramentū ſui venerandi corporis, & ſanguinis. Sub hac capella ad aliquos gradus monſtratur locus eiſdem cænationis, videlicet cænaculi magni, & in eo vas aquarū, in quo Chriſtus lauabat pedes Apoſtolorum: iuxta quod vas, & Gamaliele, & alijs viris timoratis primus ſepultus fuit protoMartyr Stephanus.

Ad tractum sagittæ de hac tumba, est Ecclesia vbi sanctus Iacobus maior Apostolus primò post martyrium fuit sepultus, cuius modò sacrata ossa venerantur Compostellæ in Galizia.

Ultra vallem in supremo montis Oliueti apice discipulis cernentibus, Dominus noster Iesus Christus eleuatis manibus ascendit in cœlum, & super eundem locum digna habetur Ecclesia, in qua eiusdem Ascensione tale seruatur in rupe pavementi indicium, quod sinistri pedis Christi videtur vltimum vestigium.

Hinc satis propè habetur & capella medio montis, vbi Christus sedens prædicauit octo beatitudines, vbi & creditur docuisse discipulos orationem Dominicam, scilicet, Pater noster, &c. Ab eo quoq; loco non distat multum Ecclesia beatæ Mariæ Egyptiacæ, in qua & eius tumba videtur : & haud procul inde est vicus Bethplage, vbi Christus misit ante passionis suæ tempus duos de discipulis pro asina & pullo eius. In cliuo verò huius mōtis Oliueti versus ciuitatem, monstratur locus, de quo videns Dominus Ierusalem, fleuit super illam, dicens, quòd si cognouisses & tu, &c. Atq; vltra montem in disensu eius in orientem est villa siue castellum Bethaniam, distans quasi ad leucam ab vrbe vbi in domo cuiusdam Symonis inuitatus Christus condonauit omnia peccata Mariæ Magdalene. Et in ipso castello, quòd erat fororis Marthæ, & Mariæ resuscitauit fratrem earum Lazarum quatuoriduanum mortuum;

De Bethania in Ierico sunt 5. leucas, quæ quondam fuit ciuitas speciosa sed iam est villa modica: ibi Diues Zachæus ascendit in arborem Sycomorum, vt videret transeuntem Dominum, & resiliens fraudata quadruplum, obtinuit peccatorum remissionem omnium.

Ierico.

Item de Bethania ad flumen Iordans est iter setè octo leucarum, per montes, ac valles deuotos, & desertos. Porrò de Bethania in orientem ad 6. leucas venit in montem magnum, vbi Christus expleto 40. dierum, ac noctium ieiunio temptatus est à diabolo, fuitq; in eodem loco quandoq; Ecclesia, sed modo habetur ibi quasi cenobiū quorūdam Christianorum, qui Georgici vocantur. Sciendum enim est, quòd vbiq; intra terram Saracenorum, & similiter multorum Paganorum inueniuntur Christiani dispersi, habitantes sub tributo, qui licet sint baptizati omnes, & beatissimam Trinitatem credentes, diuersificantur tamen nominibus, moribus, ritibus, fide, & opinionibus: ita vt semper vel in multis vel in aliquibus dissentiant à Romanæ Ecclesiæ consuetudinibus.

Christiani Georgici.

Aliqui namque eorū dicuntur Christiani Iacobitæ: hij errant circa peccatorum remissionem, dicentes, non debere confiteri homini sed soli Deo. Alij Syrij, Isti in fermentato pane consociunt Sacramentum altaris ritu Græcorum. Alij Georgici, hi omnes ferunt in capite tonsuras: clerici rotundas, laici quadratas, sequentes etiam in multis mores Græcorum. Alij Cordelarij ecce quod se cingunt de super corde. Alij Indi, Nubij, Nestorini, & Arriani.

Iacobitæ, Syrij, Georgici, Cordelarij, Indi, Nubij, Nestorini, Arriani.

Præfatus autem mons magnus, vocatur hortus Abrahæ, ex eo quod Abraham patriarcha ibi dicitur commoratus, & currit propè montem riuuulus, in cuius aqua vel fonte Deus sal per Helizèū prophetam mitti iussit, vt sanaretur sterilitas, id est, amaritudo aquæ. Nec distat hic mons à Ierico vltra grandem leucam.

C A P V T. 18.

De notabilibus alijs locis, & mari mortuo.

RVrsum de ciuitate sanctæ Ierusalem versus Occidentem itinere leucæ, habetur pulchra satis Ecclesia, in loco vbi dicitur creuisse arbor crucis salutiferæ. Arbor excelsa, digno stipite sacra Christi mēbra tangere. Tenetur istud quidè pro certa veritate nam & hoc satis testatur constructio tatar. & talis Ecclesiæ, quāuis multa aliena, & incerta scripta de crucis arbore ferantur per orbē. Hinc ad duas leucas est & alia Ecclesia, vbi obuiauerūt sibi Maria virgo, & Elizabeth eius cognata, & ad saluationem Mariæ Christi baiulæ exultauit Ioannes in vtero Elizabeth grauidæ.

De isto quoque ad leucam est Emaus castellum, distans in spacio stadiorum 60. ab Ierusalem, vbi discipuli in cœna die resurrectionis Domini cognouerant eum in fractione panis. Porrò ab Ierusalem ad alium exitum; ad duo stadia videtur spelunca grandis de qua dicitur quòd tempore Cosdri Imperatoris Persarum, fuerunt circa Ierusalem 12. mille martyrum occisi, quorum omnium corpora leo habitans in spelunca congregauit ibidem voluntate diuina, tanquam pro singulorum sepultura obsequiosa.

Cosdri Imperator.

Item ab vrbe ad leucas duas habetur in monte tumba sepultura sancti Samuelis prophete, qui mons nunc vocatur exultationis vel lætitiæ, eò quod peregrinis ab illa parte intratibus redidit primum sanctæ ciuitatis aspectum. Ab oppido autem Ierico in 30. stadiorum spacio venit

ad Iordanis fluij locum, vbi beatus Ioannes Baptista Christum sacri baptismatis merebatur tingere lymphis. Et in cuius reuerendi mysterij venerationem habetur ad dimidiam leucam à fluuio ædificium honestæ Ecclesiæ consecratum in nomine eiusdem venerabilis baptistæ ministri. Ab hac Ecclesia de propè vidi donum de qua patiebar inihari narrari, quòd in eodem loco olim fuerit Ieremiæ sancti habitatio prophetæ.

scriptio.

Notandum est. Iordanis fluius quamuis grandis non sit, bonorum tamen, piscium copiam nutrit, ortum accipiens sub monte Libanon ex duobus fontibus, scilicet Ior, & Dan, quæ nomina simul mixta nomen Iordanis efficiunt. Decurrit autem per quendam locum dictum Ma-ron, ac secus stagnum quod dicitur Mare Tyberiadis, ac subter montes Gylboe per aingnissima loca, atque in subterraneis meatibus per longum spacium se occultans tandem exit in planitie, quæ dicitur Meldam, id est, forum, quod certis temporibus ibi Nundinæ exercentur, & ad extre- num se iactat in mare mortuum.

um.

Hoc stagnum quod vocatur mare mortuū habet longitudinis 600. ferè stadia, & latitudinis 150. & appropinquat aliqua pars huius maris ad quatuor leucas propè Ierico, videlicet ad la- tus camporum Engadi, ex quibus (vt supra dictum est) eradicatæ fuerunt arbores Balsami, quæ modò sunt in agro Cayr Ægypti. Istud mare dicitur mortuum.

Nota.

Primò quidem quòd non viuendè currit, sed est quasi lacus.

Cur mare
mortuum dicatur.

Secundò quod amara est eius aqua, & fœtidum reddit odorem.

Tertiò quod propter eius amaritudinem terra adiacens littori nil viride profert.

Quartò (prout dicitur) si cadat in ea bestia, vel aliud quid viuens, vix poterit plenè mori siue submergi in octo diebus, nec nutrit in se pisces aut quid simile:

Litora quoque sua variant quam sepè colorem, & sine vlla agitatione ventorum eijcit in qui- budam locis se aqua, extra proprios terminos. Per huiusmodi aquam dicitur Deus pro indi- cibili vitio Pentapolim submersisse, Sodomam, Gomorram, Adaman, Seboim, & Segor.

Nota.

Quidam vocant hoc mare lacu Asphaltidis, alij fluium Dæmonū, aut flumen Putre. Quod autem olim propheta interpretans dixit, montes Gilboe, nec ros nec pluuia veniat super vos, magis spiritualitèr quàm literalitèr videtur intelligendum. Nam ibi crescunt altissimi cedri, & arbores poma ferentes, ad capitis quantitatem humani, ex quibus valdè saporosus fit potus.

Mare istud mortuum determinat fines terræ promissionis, & Arabiæ, Ideoq; vltra ipsum mare condidit quondam, vnus successorum Godfridi de Bollion forte & spectabile castrum, ponens illic copiosam Christianorum militiam ad terram promissionis custodiendum. Nunc verò temporis, est Soldani, & appellatur Caruth, id est mons Regalis. Sub hoc monte est villa dicta Sobal: habitat in illis partibus magna Christianorum multitudo.

De Nazareth, & Samaria.

NAzareth in prouincia Galileæ in qua nutritus, & de qua cognominatus est Dominus vni- uersorum, distans ab Hierosolymis ad tres circiter dietas, erat quondam ciuitas, quæ nunc est dispersa, & rara domorum, quod vix villæ sibi competit nomen: & in loco Annunciationis, vbi Angelus ad Mariam dixit, Aue gratia plena, Dominus tecum, habebatur olim bona Ecclesia, pro qua paruū Saraceni restituerunt habitaculum, in colligendas peregrinorum offerendas.

A Nazareth redeundo per terram Galileæ, transitur per Ramathaym Sophim, vbi nascebatur fidelis Samuel propheta Domini, & per Sylo, vbi locus orationis erat antequam in Ierusalem: & per Sicheim magnæ vbertatis vallem, itur in prouinciam Samariæ, vbi habetur & bona ciuitas nunc dicta Neapolis, distans à sancta vrbe spacio solius dietæ, ac per fontem Iacob, super quem Iesus fatigatus ab itinere colloquebatur Samaritanæ, vbi & apparerit ruina destructæ Ecclesiæ quondam illic habitæ. Et est ibi villa adhuc vocata Sychem, & in eo est mausoleum Ioseph pa- triarchæ filij Iacob: ad cuius ossa visitanda sub deuotione non minus peregrini Iudæi adueni- unt, quàm Christiani.

sebastæ.

Hinc satis propè est mons Garizin cum vetusto templo orationis Samaritanorum: ex tunc intratur Samaria, quæ modò appellatur Sebastæ, & est illius principalis ciuitas prouinciæ. In qua fuit primum terræ mandatum corpus beati Ioannis Baptistæ, inter sacra corpora Helizæ, & Abdiæ Prophetarum, vt quorum assimilabatur virtutibus in vita, corporibus iungeretur in sepultura. Hæc quoque distat ab Hierosolymis, fortassis 2. dietas.

De territorio Galilee, &amp; Samaria, &amp; de villa Sardenay.

Item à Nazareth ad leucæ dimidium, monstrantur in rupe vestigia pedum, quæ dicuntur esse Domini nostri Iesu Christi vbi de manibus Iudæorum, ipsum de alta rupe præcipitare volentium desiluit in istam. De quo saltu quidam intelligunt illud scriptumque Euangeticum, Iesus autem transiens per medium illorum ibat.

Ad quatuor autem leucas de Nazareth, est Cana Galilee, vbi Christus ad vrbanas matris preces, mutauit vndam in vinum optimum.

Mons Thabor

Ad distantiam quatuor leucarum à Nazareth, venit in Thabor, montè spectabile, vbi tranfigurabatur Christus, coram quibusdam suis Apostolis, apparentibus ibidem, Mose, & Helia, prophetis, voceq; dilapsa à magnifica Patris gloria, & videbatur Petro bonum ibi esse: quondam in hoc monte habebatur ciuitas, cum piuribus Ecclesijs, quarum nunc sola restant vestigia, excepto quod ille locus transfigurationis est inhabitatus, qui est Schola Dei nominatus.
Notandum, Thabor est in medio Galilee, campus mira iucunditate sublimis, distans à "Diote-

Item de Nazareth in tres leucas est villa, seu castrum Zaffara, de quo recolo me supradix-cis longus.

Vltra centum 60. forsan stadia est lacus, bonorum piscium ferax & vber, qui etiam in alio loco sui vocatur mare Tyberiadis, & in alio mare Genezareth, varians sibi nomen, secundum ciuitates, & terras propinquas. Circa hoc mare Christus frequentè, & libentè ambulasse vi-detur: hic vocauit ad sui discipulatum, Petrum, & Andream, Iacobum, & Ioannem: hic super vi-dà ficis ambulabat vestigijs, & præcipitem Petrum filium tentantem, verbo increpationis releuat ne mergatur, hic denique rediuiuus à morte repleuit discipulorum rete magnis piscibus 153.

Mare Tyberiadia.

Item in ciuitate Tiberiade, quæ est propè hoc mare habetur in veneratione mensa illius cænæ, quam in Emaus castello Christus cænauit, cum ab oculis comensalium euauit. Hic de propè monstratur mons ille fertilis, mons ille pinguis, in quo de paucis panibus, & de paucio-ribus piscibus iusu Christi fuerunt saturati, quinque milla hominum.

Ad initium autem prædicti maris iuxta villam Capernaum habetur fortius castrum totius terræ promissionis, in quo dicitur nata fuisse sancta Anna mater virginis Mariæ.

Prædictis itaq; Christi vestigijs, & terræ sanctæ locis à peregrino cum deuotione cordis & reuerentia debita visitatis, si desiderat reuerti, possit illud facere per Damascum, quæ est ciuitas longa, nobilis, & grandis, ac plena omnium rerum mercimonijs, cum tamen distat à portu ma-lius Abel fratrem suum occidit.

Damascus,

A Damasco de propinquo est mons Seyr, ciuitas grandis firmata duplicibus muris ac populosa nimis, in qua sunt multi in arte Physica famosi professi. Item à Damasco haud remotè distat castrum satis munitum, & firmum, quod Derces est nominatum. Habent autem in illis, & vltirioribus partibus hunc usum: si quando castrum ab hostibus fuerit sic obsessum, quod Domidetinuit incauatam, & scriptas quas vult literas alligans collo columbæ, dimittit liberam vo-

CAPVT. 21.

Diligentia Mandeuilli.

Fides Saracenorum.

IAni restat vt de secta Saracenorum aliquid scribam vel compendiosè, secundum quod cum ijs frequenter colloquendo audiui, & liber Mahometi, quem Alcaron, vel Mesahaf, vel Harmè vocant, ijs præcipit, sicut illum sæpe inspexi, & studiosè perlegi.

Credunt itaq; Saraceni in Deū creatorem cęli & terre qui fecit omnia in ijs contenta, & sine quo nihil est factum. Et expectant diem nouissimum iudicij, in quo mali cum corpore & anima descensuri sunt in infernū perpetuè cruciandi, & boni equidem cum anima & corpore intraturi Paradisum sælicitatis eternę. Et hæc quidē fides pænē in cęli immortalium nationibus, lingua & ratione ventibus. Verumtamē de qualitate Paradisi est magna diuersitas inter credentes.

Nam & Saraceni & Pagani & omnes scētę præter Iudæos & baptizatos Christianos sentiunt bonorum Paradisum fore terrestrem illum de quo fuit expulsus Adam propter inobedientiam protoplastus: qui (vt putant) fluit, vel tunc fluit pluribus rimis lacūs & mellis, & vbi in domibus & mansionibus nobiliter iuxta meritum viuiscunt vsq; ædificatur auro, & argento & gemmis, perfertur omnibus corporalibus delicijs, in oblectatione animę eternaliter sine fine. Illi ergo qui fide sanctę Trinitatis carent, & Christum qui est vera lux ignorant, in tenebris ambulat. Iudei verò & omnes baptizati rectè sentiunt Paradisum cęlestem & spiritualem, vbi quilibet secundum meritum Diuinitati vnictur, per cognitionem, & amorem. Attamen Iudæi quod contra Scripturas suas sanctę Trinitati contradicunt, & Christo obloquuntur, qui est vera via, nesciunt quo vadunt. De baptizatis autē, qui firmiter fidē Catholicam in humilitate cordis sub Ecclesię præceptis seruaerunt, hi soli filij sunt lucis, & in via veniendi ad cęlestē Pardisum quē Christus verbo prædicauit, & ad quē corpore & anima, videntibus discipulis, de facto cōfendit.

Credunt etiam Saraceni, omnia esse vera, quę Deus ore prophetarum est locutus, sed in diuersitate, quia nesciunt specificari, imò specificanti contradicere defacili, vel negare. Inter omnes prophetas ponunt quatuor excellentiores, quorum supremum & excellentissimū fatentur Iesum Marię Virginis filiū, quem & asserunt, sermonē, vel loquelam, vel spiritū Dei, & pronunciatore sententiarū Dei, in iudicio generali futuro, & missū à deo ad Christianos docendos. Secundo loco Abrahamum dicunt fuisse verum Dei cultorem, & amicū.

Quartum volunt esse Mahomet, sanctum, & verum Dei nuncium ad seipso missum, cum lege diuina in dicto libro plene contenta. Tenent itaq; indubitatè, quod beata Maria Iesum peperit, & concepit virginem: anens intacta, ac libèter loqui audire de incarnatione in ipsa facta per annunciationem Gabrielis Archangeli. Nam & Alcharo eorum dicit, ad saluationem Angeli virginem expauisse, quod tunc erat in partibus Galilęe incantator, Turquis nomine, qui per susceptam sibi formam Angeli plures virgines deslorauerat, & beatam Virginem conuenisse Angelum, an esset Turquis. Refert quoq; eam peperisse sub palma Arbore, vbi habebatur præsepe bouis, & asinę, & illic præ confusione puerperij, & verecundia ac dolore, fuisse in proximò desperatam, & infantulum in consolationem matris dixisse, mater ne timeas, Deus in te effudit secreta ad saluationem Mundi. Hęc & his similia multa ibi scribuntur figmenta, & isti plura in ter se narrando componunt, quę hoc loco ventilanda non sunt.

Et dicit liber Iesum sanctissimum omnium Prophetarum fuisse veracem in dictis & factis, benignum, pium, iustum, & ab omni vitio penitus alienum: Sanctum quoque Ioannem Euangelistam post prædictos Prophetas fuisse alijs Sanctiorem, cuius & Euangelium fatentur

ture esse plenum salutari, ac veraci doctrina, & ipsū Sanctū Ioannem illuminasse cæcos, leprosos mundasse, iustificasse mortuos, & in cælum volasse viuentem. Erat enim (prout dicit) plus quàm Propheta, & absque omni peccato, contradicente eodem de seipso, si dixerimus quòd peccatum non habemus, veritas in nobis non est: vnde & si quando Sarraceni tenent scriptum Euangelij Sancti Ioannis, aut illud beati Lucæ, missus est Angelus Gabriel, eleuant ambabus manibus pro reuerentia super caput & super oculos id ponentes, & osculantur quàm sepe cum summa deuotione. Nonnulli etiam eorum in Græco, aut Latino litterati confueuerunt cum deuotione cordis id lætitare.

Idem liber dicit Iudæos perfidos fuisse, quòd Iesu eis primū missō à Deo, & multa miracula facienti credere noluerunt, quòdque per ipsum tota gens Iudæorum fuit dignè decepta, & meritò illusa hoc modo. Iesus in hora dum Iudas eum pro signo traditionis osculabatur, posuit per Metamorphosin figuram suam, in ipsum Iudam, sicque Iudæi in ambiguo lumine nocturni temporis, pro Iesu Iudam capientes, ligantes, trahentes, deridentes, in fine crucifixerunt, putantes se omnia facere Iesu, qui protinus capto & ligato Iuda, viuus ascendit in cælum, & decemius iterum viuus ad iudicium in die finali.

Et addit, Iudæos falsissimè vsque hodie nos Christianos suo mendacio decipere, quo dicunt se Iesu crucifixisse, quem non tetegerunt. Hinc errorem tenent Sarraceni obstinati: & quoddam argumentum inire conantur. Nam si Deus (aiunt) permisisset Iesum, innocentem, & iustum ita miserabiliter occidi, censuram suæ summæ iustitię minuisset. Sed cum ipsi, vt supradictum est, in tenebris ambulant, idcirco ignorantes Dei iustitiam, statuerent voluit iustitiam, imò iniustitiam quam fabricant in corde suo, quia nos de cruce Christi scriptum nouimus, benedictum est lignum per quod fit iustitia. Illi tamen quod in aliquibus facit veræ fidei, multi quandoque eorum inuenti sunt conuersi, & plures adhuc de facili conuerterentur, si haberent prædicatores, sincerè eis verbum tractantes, quippe cum iam fateantur legem Mahometi quandoque defecturam, sicut nunc perijt lex Iudæorum, & legem Christianorum vsque in finem seculi permanfuram.

De vita, &amp; nomine Mahometi.

Promissi in superioribus aliquid narrare de vita Mahometi legislatoris Sarracenorum, prout vidi in scriptis, vel audiri in partibus illis. Itaque Macho, siue Machon, vtrum in secunda syllaba scribatur N, litera, vel non idem refert: & si tertia syllaba addatur, & dicatur Machomet, vel etiam quarta, Machometus, nihil differt, quòd semper idem nomen representat. Ipsi tamen illum sepius nominant Machon. Putatur autem istum Mahomet habuisse generationis ortum de Ismael Abrahæ filio naturali de concubina Agar, vnde & vsque hodie quidam Sarracenorum dicuntur Ismaelitis, alij Agareni: sed & quidam Moabitæ, & Ammonitæ, à duobus Loth filijs Moab & Amon, genitis per incestum de proprijs filiabus.

Hic verò Machon, circa annum incarnationis Domini sexcentessimum natus, in Arabia pauper erat gratis pascens camelos, & interdum sequens Mercatores in Aegyptum fordellos illo- rum proprio collo deferens pro mercede. Et quoniam tunc temporis tota Aegyptus erat Christianæ fidei, didicit aliquid de fide nostra, quòd diuertere solebat ad cellulam Heremitæ commemorantis in deserto. Et quodammodo fabulantur Sarraceni, quod illo quandoque ingrediente cellulam, cellulæ ostium mutatum in ianuam valde patentem, velut ante palatium, & gloriantur hoc primum miraculum. Qui ex tunc conquerendo sibi pecunias, & discendo seculi actus diues est effectus, & prudens ab omnibus reputatus, in tantum, vt postmodum in terræ gubernatorem Corrozaem, (quæ est vna prouinciarum regni Arabiæ) assumeretur, ac deinde defuncto principe Codice per coniugium illius relicte in eiusdem prouinciæ principem eleuaretur. Erat autem satis somnolus, & valens, & vltra modum in verbis & factis maturus, & principalis, & satis diligebatur à suis, magis tamen metuebatur, & erat epilepticus, nemine tamen sciente. Sed tandem ab vxore comperto cōtristabatur, se tali morbido nuptam, qui versutus sefellit, & consolabatur mestam sigmento mendacij excogitati, dicens sanctum Dei Archangelum Gabrielem ad colloquendum & inspirandum sibi, quædam arcana & diuina interdum venire, & pro virtute aut claritate veniente se subito cadere & iacere ad intendendum inspirationem.

Post hoc autem, mortuo etiam Rege Arabiæ, tanta egit per simulationem sanctitatis, per donorum effusionem, & copiam promissionum, quod electus est & assumptus, in totius Arabiæ Regem.

Confirmato igitur Mahometo in regnationis suæ maiestate suprema, transactis à concepti- one Domini nostri Iesu Christi annis solaribus 612. in die Iouis feria quinta Hebdomadæ promulgaiudicio colitur & seruatur, quamuis miserabile, & miserandum videtur, quòd tot animæ in illo perduntur. Erat quoque tempore regni eius, & alius Heremita in deserto Arabiæ, quem e-tiam quasi pro deuotione frequentare solebat, ducens secum aliquos de principibus & famiterfecerunt, iterum clam condentes cruentum gladium in vagina: ac ille euigilans virum videns occisum, magno furore succensus imposuit familiæ factum, volens omnes per iu-pari concordia, simili voce, & vno ore testabantur tan diuissim quàm coniunctim, Regem in ebrietate sua hominem occidisse, quamuis fortassis esset facti oblitus. Et in plenariam rei probationem, dixerunt ipsum reposuisse mucronem in loculo nudum intersum, sed calido cruore madentem. Quo ita inuento, ac tantis rex obrutus testificationibus, nimum erubuit, plenè obmutuit, & confusus recessit. Et ob hoc omnibus diebus suis vna bibere renunciauit: & in lege sua à cunctis bibi vetuit, ac vniuersis bibètibus, colentibus, & vendentibus maledixit. Cuius maledictio cõuertatur in caput eius, & in verticè ipsius iniquitas eius descèdat, cùm de vino scri-

De colloquio Anthoris cum Soldano.

Error eorum

Finaliter Sarraceni ponunt Iudæos malos, eò quòd legem Dei violauerunt sibi missam, & cõ-missam per Mosem. Et à simili probant Chriitianos malos, quòd non seruant legè Euagelij Christi, quam seruandam susceperint. Inest enim ijs falla persuasio ita vt putent vnūquemq; in ea qua natus est secta posse beari, si susceptam seruauerit illibatè: ideòq; probant ab opposito se esse bonos, quia, sicut dicunt, obseruant scripta legis præcepta & ceremonias sancti libri sui à

CAPVT. 24.

Persuasio ad non credentes terrarum diuersitates per orbem terræ.

Irabilis Deus mirabilia propter semetipsum creauit, vt scilicet ab intellectu-alibus creaturis suis intelligeretur, & per hoc diligeretur, atque in hoc ipse creator, & creatura se mutuò fruerentur. Mirabilis est ergo Deus maximè in illo, quòd ipse solus sufficit sibi: & mirabilis in altis Dominus, hoc est, in cælo & in cælestibus: sed & mirabilis in terris, & in terrestribus: tamen si verum iudicauerimus, nihil est mirabile, quod mirū videri non debet, si ille qui omnipotens est, fecit quæcunque voluit in cælo & in terra. Sed ecce dum nobis contingit videre rem quam prius non vidimus, miratur noster animus, non quòd simpliciter mirum est, sed quod nobis id mirum & nouum, Deus vnus, simplex quidem est, vt creaturæ cælestes quò Deo ma-gis de propinquo sunt eò simplices existunt. Terrestris autem quòd in situ remotiori sint, id-circo magis diuersæ, magis contrariæ inter se sunt.

Ergo quicunque sapiens est non stupet animo, dum in terrenis respicit res varias, & diuersas, vel dum diuersa contingunt, seu inueniuntur in partibus terræ diuersis: sed qui intellectum super sentum non eleuant, & magis credunt oculo suo corporeo, quàm spiritali, & qui nun-quam à natiuitatis suæ loco recesserunt, isti vix volunt credere, seu possunt alijs vera narrantibus de mundi diuersitatibus.

At tamen tales, si vellent, de facili videre possunt suum errorem. Quia quicunque natus in vna ciuitate, vel patria, si tantummodò moueat se ad proximam ciuitatem, inueniet ibi procul dubio aliquam differentiam, vel diuersitatem in idiomate linguæ, vel in modo loquendi, in moribus hominum, in occupationibus, in legibus, in consuetudinibus, vel etiam in agrorum fructibus, in arborum frugibus, seu in his quæ gignuntur in terra, in aere, & in aquis.

Si ergo aequaliter inueniri possit differentia in proximo, quantò maior sit distantia, tantò maior differentia æstimanda est in remoto, vel in remotiori, seu remotissimo loco. Vnde ego, quia in præcedente parte tractatus narrare cepi aliqua, quæ in his, & in peregrinatione mea vsque in terram promissionis sanctam vidi, de quibus etiam potest, & poterit constare multis, qui in partibus nostris eadem peregrinatione me præcesserunt, & secuti sunt, procedam in describendo aliqua illorum, quæ vidi & percepi in deambulatione mea, qua peragravi multas alias terras, & perlegi multas vndas, vsque in multorum hoc tempus annorum, & propter insipientes, & discredentes non tacebo. Sed nec propter credentes nec sapientes fatis mouebor, ita enim vt diuersa Dei opera qui respicere non possunt oculo, saltem legant, vel audiant ex hoc scripto. Pauca vtique vidi horum quæ sunt, sed pauca horum quæ vidi, narrabo.

De Armenia, Persia, & Amazonia.

DE regionibus quæ Iudææ contiguantur, scilicet Arabia, Aegypto & Syria, statui modicum vltra narrare, relinquens hunc locum narrandi alijs peregrinis. Et festinans ad terras remotiores, Armeniam inuicem, non per singulas ciuitates, sed celeriter transiens, vidi à remotis amplum castrum vocatum Del espoyer, de quo mihi sustinui dici, quod sit vastum, & à nemine habitatum, nisi à fantastica quadam Domina, seruante in medio maioris aulae super perticam, volucrum rapacem, quæ dicitur Latine accipiter, vel huiusmodi: quam auem, si aliquis hominum ingre diens se custodire peruigil absq; vlla somnolentia per septem continuos dies & noctes possit, ipsa Domina in fine facti apparet concederet illi quantamcumque faceret petitionem terræ, commodi, vel honoris, sed si obdormiret, periret. Huic tamen dicto parum curavi accommodare aurem, nisi quod communiter dicebatur, in bene transacto tempore prædicta suscipiente tentata per duas personas, vnum Regem, & alterum Paltorem. Et Regi quidem quod indubitam fecit petitionem, vile successit negotium, paltori peroptime successit negotium.

In Armenia maiori, est magna & bona ciuitas Artyron ad dietam propè flumini Euphratem. Et sunt ibi duo montes euecti valde, vnus Sabissafelle, alter Ararath, quorum vltimus habet per anfractus, & periodos per ascensum viæ, ferè 7. leucas, & quasi omni tempore est plenus niue.

In illo loco fertur quiescisse Arca diluuij, cuius vnicus asser môstratur, in Ecclesia Monachorū ad montis pedem habitantiū: attamē nullus hominū pro frigore nimio attetare presūmit ascensū.

Est autem & ibi ciuitas Landania, de qua nonnulli dicunt quod Noe illam fundauerat, & ciuitas magna Hany, in qua, tempore Christianorum mille habebantur Ecclesie.

In illa Arinenia sub Imperio Persæ est famosa ciuitas Tauris, vbi de mercionij ponderalibus fit inestimabilis mercatura. Hinc ad decem dietas ad Orientem habetur ciuitas Zadonia, in ea Imperator Persarum moratur, & est in eodem imperio ciuitas valde magna Cassach, quæ recto itinere dicitur stare ab Hierosolymis 55. dietis. Geth ciuitas imperialis, & melior totius Persæ in hæc terra noscitur esse, cum tamen Carnaa sit satis maior.

Circa fines Persæ in terra "Sennaar, est illa quæ olim dicebatur Babylonia, nec apparet ibi aliquid, quàm ruinae grandis & vetustæ ciuitatis, quæ ab hominibus est deserta, sed à Draconibus inhabitata, & alijs animalibus, & volucibus venenosis. Hanc terram tenet Imperator Persarum, vt supra dixi. Etiam intra fines Persæ, est terra, vbi sanctus Job patiens morabatur, quæ modò dicitur terra Sues, in cuius montanis inuenitur Manna, quod venditur in Apothecis. Huic terræ Sues contiguatur Chaldæa, quæ non est magna, quamuis nobilis regio habeatur. Et ab ista intratur Amazonia.

Amazonia est modica insula, quam absque viris solæ regunt & inhabitant mulieres: cuius rei prima causa hæc fuit.

Olim cum insula communiter à viris, & mulieribus habitabatur, Rex eius dictus Colopius cum omnibus nobilibus suis in bello contra Regnum Scithæ occisus fuit. Audientes igitur nobilium vxores ipsius insulæ se viduaras, super his in doloroso furore animi ad plures congressiones occiderunt & fugauerunt omnes aliarum mulierum maritos, ne scilicet sua ingenuitas subiaceret voluntati, & potestati plebis. Et tandem post reformatam inter se pacem mulieres inito consilio statuerunt se solas absque viris dominari in terra, atque ex tunc sumi sibi regimen per certam electionis formam, quæ robusta, agilis, sapiens, iuuenis, ac valens apparet in armis.

Sciendū tamen est, extra hanc insulam flumen esse, & alias modicas insulas, quarū vna dicitur Carmagite, de quibus licitum est ijs accersire viros, & amafios bis in anno, ita vt nulla moram trahat septem dierum naturalū sub pœna indubitata occisionis. Infanem masculū nutrire licet quoadusq; per se comedat & gradiatur, tunc transmittendus est in domū paternam. Generosæ natæ puellæ aufertur ignito cultro vber sinistrum pro scuto gerendo, de generi dextrum, ad sagittandum de arcu Turco.

Regina cum consiliariis & officialibus suis regit sapienter & bene terram, & seruat omnes sibi sub districta obedientia, per leges, & pœnas, & amendas conscriptas. Et cum circumiacentium insularum Reges contra se ad inuicem præliari solent, tunc Regina Amazoniz cum suis Nobilibus ab vna parte pro magno stipendio vocari solet in adiutoriū, vbi & inuicem sunt sapientes in consilijs, probæ in armis, acres in consilijs, & in omnibus Curæ actibus bene valentes.

C A P.

Aethiopia consistit à terra Chaldæorum in Austrum, quæ distinguitur in Orientalem Aethi- opiam, & Meridionalem, quarum prima in illis partibus vocatur Cush, propter hominum nigredinem, altera Mauritania. Et est ibi Regnum Saba, de quo legitur; quod Regi Salo- moni Reges Arabum, & Saba, dona & tributa adduxerunt. Eòque Regina Saba venit à finibus, hoc est, à longinquis terræ partibus audire sapientiam Salomonis. Omnes in Aethiopia aque in fluuijs & riparijs, & fontibus sapiunt Sal, propter nimium calorem. Est ibi vnus aquæ fons ita de nocte calidus, vt nemo in eo sustineat manum, & ita de die frigidus, vt bibi vix possit.

Mauritania. Regnum Saba

Generaliter isti de Mauritania Aethiopes comedunt parilm, de facili inebriantur, fluxum ventris patiuntur, nec diu viuunt.

India triplex.

De Aethiopia intratur in Indiam mediam, nam triplex est, videlicet infima, quæ in quibus- dam suis partibus est nimis frigida ad inhabitandum: Media quæ satis temperata est, & supe- rior, quæ nimis calida. In India infima propter continuum & graue frigus generatur christal- lum de aqua per gelu, sicut quidam asserunt. Sed certum est ibi haberi rupes christalli, & in il- lis gigni optimos Diamantes, quos lingua illius vocant Hamestht.

Diamantes.

Est autem diamas paruus præciosus lapis, magnæ virtutis, sicut plenius describitur in lapida- rijs. Quidam inueniuntur in magnitudine pisci, vel etiam pisci minores: alii ad quantitatem fa- bæ, sed nullus maior auellana, vel nucæ. Et dicitur de eo in partibus illis, quod si hic qui portat sit contiuens, & sobrius reddit illum magnanimum & audacem, & iuuat in causis iustis certan- tem, conseruat substantias corporales, auert praua somnia, depellit prauorum spirituum illusi- ones, fortilegia, & incantationes, ac valet contra lunaticam passionem, & demonis obsessio- nem, & venenosum quod illi appropinquauerit exsudat, & exhume scit.

Optimi Diamantes de India asimulantur in colore multum christallo, sed sunt aliquantu- lum magis citrini, & pro sui duritie poliri non possunt. Inueniuntur autem ibi nonnulli subni- gri ad colorem violæ: Alii nascuntur in Arabia nigri, & tenuiores prædictis, alii in Macedonia, & quidam in Cypro, sed in mineris auri, dum prima massa in minutias confingitur, interdum reperiuntur. Sciendum enim est, sæpè plures simul crescere, nec non generant, & concipiunt inuicem de rore calii, quemadmodum & Margaritæ: quod ego pluribus tentans, accepti de rupe cespitem cum diamante masculo, & femella, plantans in pratello, & frequentans, focillans ma- defeci de rore Maii. Et ecce in breui, paruulus ex iis gignebatur, nascebatur, & adolefcebat ad debitam quantitatem: sunt verò omnes per naturam cum pluribus angulis vt trium vel qua- tuor, aut quinque laterum, & nonnulli cum lateribus senis. E contra, omnes margaritæ nascun- tur in forma sphærica, seu rotunda.

Diamantum sophisticatio.

Probario veri diamantis.

Et notandum quòd mercatores, pro diamantibus, frequenter aliud vendunt: Nam solet commixtio fieri de christallo Crochee, de Saphiro, de Lonpes Citrino, de lapide Yri, & de pari- uis petris ex murium nidis. Probatio veri diamantis haberi potest his modis.

Primò, si ita inuenitur tener, vt se poliri dimittat, non est verus.

Item si de eo non potest scindi vitrum cristallum, non est verus.

Item accipe paruum quantitatis lapidem Adamantem, qui solet sibi attrahere acum & ferrum, & pone verum diamantem super adamantem, tunc que si ministraueris ad amanti a- cum, videbis adamantem operari nihil, vero diamante præsentè, dum tamen adamas non sit di- amante maior.

Item si cultellum laminæ tenuis, habentem in manubrio inclusum vel alligatum verum dia- mantem in mensa vel asserè crexeris, protinus vt ipsi venenum appropinquabit, stabit tremu- lans atque sudans: Et notandum, quòd per luxuriosum, seu gulosum qui ferret diamantem a- mitteret virtutem ad tempus.

Terra Indiæ vnde dicta.

Insula Ormuz

Terra Indiæ appellatur ab Indo ibi corrente fluuiò, cuius anguillæ inueniuntur quando que- vltra 20. pedes in longitudine. In media India transitur per multas insulas vsque ad mare O- ceanum; in insulanis Ormuz, vbi Mercatores Venetiæ sæpè tendunt, sed viri, qui afflicti non sunt tantum sustinere calorem, ne exeat perpendicularia de corporibus propè ad genia, ibi se contra hoc debitè inuoluunt, & ligant, nec audent ibi transire nauibus ferrum continentibus, ne teneantur de rupibus adamantum.

A Balsara, per sinum Persicū ad Ormuzium nauigantes, talibus hodie vniuntur nauigijs, sine ferro- is clauis.

Hic in aliquibus Aethiopiæ partibus habitant publicè, inhonestorum vtriusque sexus ho- minum consuetudinem inhonestam gerentes, & in æstu meridiano refrigerandi causa exeunt circa cluitatem ad riparias iacere, & discurrere nudis prorsus corporibus omni pudore reiecto, ex quo procul dubio inhonesta vitia sequuntur.

ER

Insula Chaua, vel Chau
forte.

Est & non longè ab ista insula regio seu insula Caua vel Chaus, quæ à primo statu multum est minorata per inare. Hi sunt infidelissimi Paganorum. Nam quidam adorant Solem, alij Lunam, ignem, aquam, & terram, arborem, vel serpentem, vel cui de manè primò obuiant. Ibi magni mures, quos nos dicimus rattas, sunt in quantitate paruorum canum. Et quoniam per caros capi non possunt, capiuntur per canes maiores.

Zarke, vel Zarclyas.

Corpora inortuorum non sepeliuntur ibi, nec cadauera qualibet bestiarum operiuntur, quòd ad acris æstum carnes in breui tempore consumuntur, nam & tota insula consistit sub zona torrida. Inde transferri potest per mare in Indiam superiorem, siue maiorem, videlicet Imperium Presbyteri Ioannis ad portum ciuitatis Zarke, quæ est elegans & bona satis. In ea habitant plurimi Catholicæ fidei Christiani: & habentur plurimæ Abbatiæ religioforum, quas olim Dux Danorum Ogerus constituit, vnde & vsque nunc dicuntur Ecclesiæ Dani, atque ex hoc nauigari potest in terram Lombe.

De foresto Piperis, & fonte iuuentutis.

Singlant.

Regio seu insula dicta Lombe, spatiosa quidem est, continens forestum dictum aliàs Tombar, longi per dietas 18. In orbe vniuerso nõ noscimus crescere piper, præterquam in hoc foresto. In quo & habentur duæ ciuitates, vna Flandrina, (& illa ciuitas inhabitata est à Iudeis, & Christianis, inter quos sæpè magna seditio oritur) altera Singlant: quas quondam Danus fertur fundasse Ogerus, vocans vnam Flandrinam, nomine auiæ suæ ex parte patris sui, alteram Florentiam nomine auiæ ex parte matris suæ, quæ mutato nomine nunc vocatur Singlant.

Piper quomodo
creseat.

Sciendum est autem, piper ibi crescere in hunc modum: sicut nos plantamus vites aut quercus arbores robustas, vt vitis cum fructibus se spargat, vt supportetur per ramos, sic coluntur arbuta piperis ad arbores foresti, & sparantur per ramos, & dependent fructus vt botri. Et venit in eodem arbutulo triplex piper in anno.

Piper longum

Primum est quod vocatur longum piper, & venit priusquam nascuntur folia in arbutis, quemadmodum nos in arbore videmus corylo in hyeme ante folia præcedere quasdam caudulas longas, quo circa initium vindemiato, nascuntur cum folijs botri piperis viridis ad similitudinem paruorum vuarum. Quod quidem circa tempus Iulij in eadem viriditate vindemiatum, in æstu feruido siccatur ad Solem, vt accipiat nigredinem, & rugarum contractionem.

Piper album.

Postea exurgit piper album in granis minoribus, & in abundantia satis minori, quo tanquam precipiosior vtuntur in partibus illis, & rarò vendunt ad partes istas.

Primum piper appellatur Sorbotyn, secundum Fulful, tertium verò Bauos.

Sunt autem per nemus istud fera animalia, & venenosa, sicut parui serpentes, colubri, & huiusmodi, de quibus nescio quis famam diffundit per nostras partes, quòd vindemiatores piperis tales venes fugant per ignem: sed non est ita, inò vngunt brachia, manus, tibias, & pedes cum quodam succo herbæ dictæ Limonse, à quo citò diffugit omne venenum.

Mons Polembus.

In huius foresti capite sub monte Polembus, est ciuitas dicta Polemba, & sub eodem monte fons qui dicitur Iuuentutis. Aqua huius fontis reddit odorem, & saporem quasi de omni genere aromatatum, nam singulis penè horis immutat odorem, & saporem. Et quisquis per aliquos dies potat ieiuno stomacho sanatur in breui tempore, à quacunque interiori infirmitate, languore duntaxat mortis excepto: & sanè illorum qui propè sunt, & frequenter bibunt apparet per totum vitæ tempus mira iuuentus. Ego autem ter vel quater bibi, quamobrem & vsque hodie arbitror potius me corporaliter valere. Putatur enim fons ille immediate per poros subterraneos eliquari de fonte paradisi terrestri, ita quòd nulla via decurrentium super terram fluensium vicietur. In ista etiam regione, & in insulis circumquaque creseit gingiber valde bonum, vnde & mercatores sæpè ibi tendunt de Venetia pro emendo pipere & gingibere. Genes verò huius insulæ peruersæ & stolidissimæ sunt superstitionis adorantes bouem tanquam animal beatisimum, propter eius simplicitatem mansuetudinem, patientiam, & vtilitatem.

Ciuitas Polemba.

Fons Iuuentutis.

Nota.

Gingiber.

Multitudo cuiuslibet ciuitatis vel villæ vnius speciatem nutrit bouem, quem postquam laborauit in aratro per sex annos immolant manducantes pariter cum maxima solemnitate. Et quicunque inde minimam minutiam comedit, reputat se sanctificatum totum.

Porro apud Regem tenetur bos singularis, cuius custos diligentissimè vrinam in vase aureo accipit simpliciter, & desimo in vase consimili: & quotidie venit summus eorum prælatus, quem dicunt Archiprotoplastum, offert personaliter in prædictis preciosis vasibus, Domino Regi de bouis vrina & simo, atque in vrina, quam appellant Gaul, tingens manus, defricat, & perungit Regis pectus & frontem, deinde similiter de simo in multa cordis attentione, ad sinem vt

Præterea populi isti colunt Idola facta ad medium in forma humana, & ad medium in forma bouis. In quibus permissione Dei per eorum perfidiam maligni spiritus habitant dantes de interrogatis responsa. Attamen in simili causa, si vir non vult cremari cum vxore mortua, non minuit ei honorem.

Et forte vinum nascitur ibi: quòd mulieres bibunt, & non viri, vt sic mulieribus crescant barbæ, sed mulieribus raduntur, & viris minime.

CAPVT. 28.

De Ecclesia &amp; corpore Sancti Thomæ Apostoli.

Hinc in Meridiem pluribus exactis Insulis per viam decem dietarum venit in Regnum Mabr6, Illic in ciuitate Calamiæ, seruatur in magno templo corpus beatissimi Thomæ Apostoli Domini noster Iesu Christi in capsâ honorificata. In quo loco & martirizatus fuit, licet dicunt quidam, quod in Edissa ciuitate. Ille populus non est multum tempus transfactum, quin fuit totus in fidei religione, sed nunc est ad pessimos Gentilium ritus peruersus, nec attendit, nec veneratur reliquias sancti corporis Apostoli ibidem contentas, quanius ijs euidens, ac vile, & mirificum prætere solet beneficium, quod infra narrabo.

Per certas historias habetur Ducem Danorum Ogerum conquisiuisse has terras, & in exaltatione sanctarum Apostoli reliquiarum fecisse fieri præfatam spectabilem Ecclesiam, ac intra eam reponi in nobilissimo loculo, gemmis, auro, argentoque decenter ornato Sanctum corpus, ac deinde post annorum tempus trecentorum Assyrios abstulisse feretrum cum ipso corpore sancto in Edissam ciuitatem Mesopotamiæ, in qua & fuit martyrizatus secundum quosdam, rursusq; post sexaginta & tres annos recuperatū corpus in suam fuisse Ecclesiam restitutum, videlicet in Calamia, atque in eiusdem recuperationis signum certum dimiserunt isti, & dimitunt extra feretri loculum dependere brachium dextrum, cum manu quæ tetigisse creditur pia resurgentis vulnera Christi.

Quærendum est quæ sint istæ historias.

Eadem quoque manus solet vsque hodie suæ veræ pœnitentiæ tale manifestare miraculum vt dum partes quolibet litigantes velint vtræque suas causas iuramento confirmare, conscrip-tishinc indè causis ponantur ambæ cartulæ in Apostoli manu. Quæ cunctis] exeuntibus Ecclesiam, protinus sub vnius horæ tempore reiecta longius saltitate, veritatem sibi referuat: sed nunc sicut dicere cæpi isti populi huic beneficio Dei ingrati, & diabolica illusione exæcati mirabiliter paganizant.

Inter ea dum exirer, Monachi suos dolos potuerunt exercere.

Nam & in hac ipsa beati Thomæ Ecclesia statuerunt multa miræ magnitudinis simulachra, ex quibus vnum quòd maius est multò alijs apparet sedens homo in alto folio adoperto aureis sericis, & lapidibus præciosis, habensque ad collum suspensa pro ornato multa cinctoria præciosè gemmis, & auro contexta. Ad hoc autem Idolum adorandum confluunt peregrini à remotis partibus, & propinguis, in satis maiori copia, & valdè feruentiori deuotione quam Christiani, ad sanctum Iacobum in Galizia, quia multi eorum per totum peregrinationis iter, non audent erigere palpebras oculorum, ne fortè propter hoc deuotio intermitteretur.

Idolum in templo sancti Apostoli erectum.

Alij de propè venientes superaddunt labori itinerandi, vt ad tertium vel ad quartum passum semper cadant in genibus. Nonnulli quoque demoniaca inspiratione senetipfos per viam peregrinationis lanceolis, & cultellis nunc minoribus, nunc maioribus fauciant vulneribus per singula corporis loca, & dum ante Idolum perueniunt, excisum frustum de carne propria projiciunt ad Idolum pro offerenda, ac plagis durioribus se castigant, & quandoque spontaneè penitus se occidunt: in solemnitatibus verò, sicut in dedicatione, & sicut in thronizatione simulachrorum, fit conuentus populi, quasi totius Regni. Et ducitur cum processione maius Idolum per circuitum ciuitatis, in curru præciosissimo, modis omnibus perornato, & præcedat in numero magno puellæ cantantes binæ, & binæ ordinatissime, succeditque pluralitas Musicorum cum instrumentis varijs simphonizantes, quos continè sublequitur currus, cuius lateribus coniungit se peregrinorum exercitus, qui & venerunt de remotis.

Ibique cemitur miserabilis actus ultra modum. Nam aliqui victi ultra modum diabolica deuotione proiciunt se sub rotis currus præcedentis, vt frangantur sibi crura, brachia, latera, dorſa, nec non & colla in reuerentiam Dei sui (vt dicunt) à quo remunerationem sperant, venire ad Paradisum terrestrem.

Occidunt se
in honorem Idoli.

Reprehendit
fabulas vulgi.

Et post processionem postquam statuerunt Idolum in templo suo loco, multiplicatur coram simulachris numerus sæpè plangentium, & occidentium ultra quam credi sit facile. Ita quod quandoque in illa vnica solemnitate inueniuntur ducenta corpora, vel plura occisorum. Et assistant propinqui amici talium diaboli martyrum, cum magna musicorum melodia decantantes in sua lingua offerunt Idolis corpora, ac demum accento rogo omnia corpora comburunt in honorem Idolorum, affluentes sibi singuli aliquid de ossibus aut cineribus pro reliquijs, quas putant sibi valinuras contra quolibet infortunia, & tempestates. Et habetur ante templum aquæ lacus, velut seruatorium piscium, in quo proicit populus largissimè suas oblationes, argentû, aurû, gemmas, cyphos, & similia, quibus ministri certis temporibus exhibentes prouident Ecclesiæ, ac sibi ipsis abundantè. Quoddam fabulosum scriptum exiit per partes nostras, quod in prædicta processione circumferatur cuius pheretro corpus heath Thomæ, qui & in fine processionis populo communicaret proprijs manibus de Euchariſtiæ sacramento, sed non est ita, & nunquam fuit.

Inde vterius procedendo in Austrum per multas & mirabiles terras quinquaginta duarum dieitarum spacio, habetur magna Insula Lamori. Illic omnes nudi incedunt, & scè omnia sunt singulis communia, nec vtuntur priuatis clauibus siue feris, imo & omnes mulieres sunt communes omnibus & singulis viris, dummodo violentia non inferatur: sed & peior est ijs consuetudo, quod libentè comedunt teneras carnes humanas; vnde & negotiatores adferunt eis crassos infantes venales: quod si non satis pingues afferuntur, eos saginant sicut nos vitulum, siue porcum.

Hic apparet in bona altitudine polus Antarcticus, & incipit modò apparere in alta Lybia, ita quod in alta Ethiopia eleuatur octodecim gradibus, prout ipse probaui Astrolabio.

Ad meridiem terræ Lamori est Insula bona, Sumebor, cuius gentes reputant se nobiliores alijs, signantes se in facie certo cauterio. Illi semper guerras gerunt contra præfatas gentes nudas de Lamory.

Ad modicam iudè distantiam habetur Insula Rotonigo abundans in bonis pluribus: sed & in Austrum sequuntur a. a. plures regiones & Insulæ, de quibus prolixum narrare fuisset.

Et est valde grandis regio Iaua, habens in circuitu ambitum leucarum duarum millium. Huius rex est valde potens, & imperans septem insularum vicinarum regibus. Terra ista est populosa valdè, & crescunt in ea species, & abundantia gingiberis, canella, gariofoli, nuces muscatæ, & mastix, cum aromatis multis. Sed & quod ibi nascatur vinum, non habent: aurum & argentum est ibi in copia immensa, quòd patet in regis Iauæ palatio, cuius palatij nobilitas non est facilè scribenda.

Cuncti gradus ascendentes ad palatij aulas, & aularum cameras, & ad thalamos Camerarum sunt solidi de argento vel auro, sed & omnis statura pauimentorum in alijs habetur ad similitudinem scacarij, vnam quadratam argenti, alteram auri, laminis valdè crassis, & in ipsis pauimentis, sunt exculpta gesta, & historiæ diuersæ. In principali verò aula, est plenariè expressa Dani Ducis Ogeri historia, à natiuitate ipsius, quousque in Franciam fantastice dicatur reuersus, cum tempore Caroli magni regis Francia; ipse Ogerus armata manu conquisiuit Christianitati ferè omnes partes transmarinas à Ierosolymis vsque ad arbores solis & Lunæ, ac propè paradisum terrestrem.

Pro hac Regione Iaua, (quæ tangit fines Imperij Tartarij) sibi subiuganda, Imperator Grand Can inultoties pugnavit, sed nunquam valuit expugnare. Hinc per mare venit ad regnum ¶ Thalamassæ, quòd & ¶ Panchon dicitur, in quo habetur magnus numerus bonarum ciuitatum. Nam circa collum gestat trecentas orientales margaritas, quibus quotidie ante comestionem orationes suas colligit, quemadmodum nos colligimus, Pater noster, &c. Ac praterea portat ad collum sūrbetum orientalem, nobilem, purum, pulchrum, resplendentem, & summe preciosum, ad longitudinem pedis humani, quem habet diligentē seruare, quod dum eo caret non tenetur pro Rege.

Crocodili.

Pro isto carbunculo Grand Can Imperator, per ingenium, per insidias, per precium, & per preliū sæpè laborauit, sed nihil profecit. Post istam apparet insula Syllan, habens leucas de circuitu 80. quæ paucos habet homines propter multitudinem draconum, serpentum, crocodilorum in ea. Sunt autem crocodili speciales serpentes, coloris virgulati de croceo & nigro, cum quatuor cruribus, & tibijs & latis pedum vngulis. Aliqui horum habent longitudinem quinque tenarum, aut citrà, qui dum tendunt per arenaf relinquant signum seuitæ, ac si fit ibi tractus grandis arboris truncus.

Item in hac insula habetur mons altus, & in sui vertice satis altus & distentus & magnus a quæ lacus, de quo & stulti homines fabulantur, quod primi parentes post eiecctionem suam, illam aquam primò lacrymauerunt. In huius fundo lacus nascuntur margaritæ, & habentur semper lapides preciosi. Solentque pauperes terræ, accepta à Rege licentia, semel in anno ingredi, ac piscari gemmas, qui intrantes vngunt se succo Lymonsæ, contra hirūdines, colubros, & serpentes. Sed & de lacu effluit riuius per montis descensum, in quo nonnumquam margaritæ inueniuntur, & gemmæ: dicunt etiam ibi nullum venenatum animal nocere aduenis.

Ibi videntur leones albi in mira magnitudine bouum nostrorum, & multæ diuersæ bestię, & aues, bestiolæ, & auiculæ aliarum specierum quàm in partibus istis. Nam ibi & in nonnullis alijs insulis vidi vnum mirum, de quo prius vix credidisse in narranti, videlicet anates cum duobus capitibus.

Nota.

Verfus meridiem hinc legendo per mare, inuenitur regio speciosa nomine ¶ Doudim cuius rex imperat seu principatur 54. regibus in circuitu insularum.

Dum quis hic infirmatur tendit proximus ad Idolum sciscitans an morietur, & si respondit non, addit & dicere medicinam qua curabitur: si autem responderit moriturum, statim conuocatis amicis occiditur, & cum symphonia, & solemnitate comedunt eius carnes, ossa tantummodo sepelientes. In Insulis verò circumiacentibus, habentur incredibilitè diuersæ gentes. Nam vna habet homines enormis magnitudinis, cum solo in medio frontis oculo, qui absque vilo condimento manducant carnes & pisces.

Alia Insula habet homines aspectu deformes, nihil autem colli aut capitis ostendentes, vnde & Acephali nuncupantur: oculos autem habent ante ad scapulas, & in loco pectoris os apertum ad formam ferri, quo nostri caballi frænantur.

In alia Insula sunt gentes planis faciebus absque eleuatione nasorum, & palpebrarum cum parvis foraminibus oculorum, & scissura modica oris. Et in alia gentes cum superiore oris labio ita lato & amplo, vt, dum velint, totam faciem de illo tegant.

Alia generat homines parux stature cum oris foramine sic paruo, vt per fistulas alimentum, & potum sumant, & quoniam carent lingua & dentibus, monstrant per naturalia signa conceptus. Et aliqui sunt homines debite quidem stature, & forme, nisi quod habent pedes equinos, quibus ita sunt præpetes, vt syluestres bestias capiant, quas comedunt, & manducant.

In alia homines sunt toti pilosi & hispidi, vsu fimirum manibus & pedibus ambulantes, & ad arbores reptantes, qui quamuis non loquuntur, apparent rationabiles, quia regem habent, & rectores.

Et in alia omnes sunt claudi, qui quamuis pedes habeant, tamen ambulant super genua multum ridiculose, imò miserabiliter, vt de passu in passum videantur casuri in terram. Et in quadam, sexum tam masculinum, quàm femininum habentes, qui dum masculino vtuntur generant, dum feminino, impregnantur & pariunt. Hæc Regio Manchus, pro sui quantitate reputatur melior, delectabilior, & omnium bonorum abundantior de cunctis ibi propè Regionibus. Nam & homines, bestię, & volucres maiores & corpulentiores sunt alijs, & præ vbertate vix inuenirentur in vna ciuitate decem mendici. Formosi sunt viri, sed femine formosiores. Sed viri loco barbę, habent perpaucos pilos, rigidos, & longos ab vtraque oris parte, quemadmodum nostros videmus catos habere.

Prima quam ingrediebamur ciuitas est  $\parallel$  Lachori, distans vna diæta à mari, & mirabamur, & gauisi sumus nos inuenisse integram ciuitatem Christianæ fidei. Nam & maior pars Regni credit in Christum.

Ibi habetur in leui precio copia rerum omnium, & præcipue victualium: vnum genus est ibi serpentum in abundantia quod manducant ad omne conuiuium, & nisi pro finali serculo ministraretur de illis serpentibus, conuiuium iam modicum diceretur.

Suntque per hoc regnum pleręq; ciuitates & Ecclesię, & religiones, quas instituit dux Ogerus, quia hoc est vnum de quindecim regnis quæ quæ fuit, sicut infra dicitur.

Illic sunt elegantes albę gallinæ, quæ non vestiuntur plumis vt nostræ, sed optima lana.  $\parallel$  Canes aquatici, quos nos luras nominamus, sunt ibi multi edomiti, quod quoties mittuntur in flumen, exportant domino piscem.

Ab hoc loco per aliquas diætas, venitur ad huius regionis maximam urbem Cansay, hoc est dicere ciuitatem cœli, imo de vniuerso orbe terrarum putatur hæc maxima Ciuitatum; nam eius circuitus 59. leucis est mensus, nec est facile dicere, quàm compressæ a quamplurimus populis inhabitatur. Hæc sedet in lacu maris, quemadmodum, & Venetiæ: & habentur in ea plures quàm mille ducenti pontes, & in quolibet turres miræ magnitudinis, ac fortitudinis, munitæ peruigili custodia, & pro vrbe tuenda contra Imperatorem Grand Can.

Sunt huiusmodi etiam canes in India occidentali, teste Petro Martyre in Decadibus. Cansay, vel Quinsay, & eius descriptio.

Multi sunt ibi Christiani, & multe Religiones Christianorum, sed & de ordinibus Minorum, & prædicatorum, qui tamen ibi non mendicant; est magna pluralitas ex diuersis nationibus Mercatorum. Per Regnem nascitur vinum valde bonum, quod appellatur Bigon. Et ad leucā extra ciuitatem, Abbatia magna est, non de religione Christiana sed Pagana: & in ea forestum, siue hortus magnus vndique circumclusus, consistit arboribus, & arbutis, in cuius etiam medio mons, altus simul & latus, habens hortum vbi solum inhabitant bestiolę mirabiles, sicut Simiz, marmotæ, Lanbon, papiones, foreti & huiusmodi ad varia & multa genera, & ad numerum infinitum.

Omni autem die post refectionem conuentus Abbatie, qui est valde monachus, deseruntur reliquæ ciborum cum magno additamento, in vasis auro lucentibus ad hunc hortum: & ad sonitum campanarum argentearum, quam Eleemosynarius manu gestat descendentes, & occurrentes de bestiolis duo millia aut plures sese componunt residere ad circulum more pauperum mendicorum, & traditur singulis per seruos aliquid de his cibarijs, ac nudè audita campana segregando recedunt: Cumque nos tanquam redarguentes, diceremus, cur hæc non darentur egenis, responderunt, illic pauperes non habentur, quod si inuenirentur, potius tamen dari deberent bestiolis. Nota, quilibet ignis soluit quolibet anno vnum balis pro tributo, quod valet vnum florenum cum dimidio, sed omnes famuli de domo vna pro vno igne computantur: summa ignium tributalium, octies centum millia. Reliqui verò Christiani mercatores, in isto vico non computantur. Copia est ibi victualium.

Hospitium Mandeuilli in China.

Quatuor fratres minores vnum potentem conuertebant apud quem hospitabar, & qui duxit me ad Abbatiam istam, ibi vidi scilicet quod hic narratur.

¶ Vel de Delay.

Ad fines itaque regni Mangi transitur grandis fluius de ¶ Dylay, maius flumen mundi, vbi strictius est continet septem miliaria. Odericus: cuius alueus in loco districtiori continet quatuor leucas. Et ex hoc in breui temporis spacio intratur Imperium Tartarorum, sequendo fluium vsque in terram Pygmæorum, per cuius medium transit.

Pygmæi.

Hij Pygmæi sunt homines statura breues ad longitudinem nostri brachij, seu trium manuum expanſarum. Tam mares quam femine formosæ, & gratiosæ, & viuunt cõmuniter ad annos sex vel septem: si qui pertingunt ad octo, mirè putantur senectutis. Ad dimidiam anni etatem nubere possunt, in secundo anno parturiunt: rationales sunt, & sensati iuxta etatem pusillam, ac satis ingeniosi ad opera de serico, & de lana arboris. Frequentè præliantur contra aues grandes patris, exercitiis congregatis hinc inde, & fit strages vtriusque. Hæc gens tam parua optime operatur sericum & bombacem. Isti Pygmæi venerunt mihi obuiam chorizãdo, Non laborant terram, prædia, seu vincas, sed morantur inter eos nostræ quantitatis homines, qui eos incolunt, sicut serui, quos & Pygmæi sæpè derident, quia si in ipsis maiores, & quod ipse non cesso mirari dum dicti homines in illa terra generant vel pariunt, non crescit proles supra Pygmæi staturam: Insula non est protensa, sed fortè 1 2. ciuitatum. Quarum vna est grandis, & bene munita, & quam Grand Can facit cum fortibus armaturis curiose seruari, contra regem Mangi.

Miraculum.

Hinc proceditur per Imperium Grand Can, ad multas ciuitates, & villas morum mirabiliter diuersorum, vsque in regnum Iamchan, quod est vnum de 12. prouincijs maximis, quibus distinguitur totum Imperium Tartarorum.

Imperium Tartarorum duodecim prouincijs distinctum. Iamchan Ciuitas nobilis.

Nobilior ciuitas huius Regni seu Prouinciæ dicitur Iamchan, abundans mercimonijs, & diuitijs infinitis, & multa præstans proprio Regi tributa, quoniam sicut illi de ciuitate fatentur, valet annuè regi quinquaginta milia cuman florenorum auri.

Summa tributum vnius Ciuitatis.

Nota. In Iamchan ciuitate est conuentus fratrum minorum: in hac sunt tres Ecclesiæ Monasteriorum: reditus simul ascendit ad 12. cuman. Odericus, Vnus cuman est decem millium. Summa tributum annui, quinquaginta milia millium Florenorum. In illis namque partibus magnas numerorum summas estimant per cuman, numerum 10. millium qui & in Flamingo dicitur Iaste.

Chitas Meke. Maximæ naues.

Ad quinque leucas ab hac ciuitate est alia dicta Meke, in qua sunt de quodam albissimi genere ligni naues maximæ cum aulis & thalamis, ac multis ædificijs, tanquam Palatium tellure fundatum.

¶ Vel Caremoron.

Inde per idem regnum ad viam octo dietarum per aquam dulcem, multas per ciuitates, & bonas villas, venimus ¶ Laucherim, (Odericus appellat Leuyim.) urbem formosam optimæ magnarum, sitam super flumen magnum ¶ Cacameran. Hoc flumen transit per medium Cathay, cui aqua infert damnum, quando nimis inundat, sicut palus in Ferraria, Mogus in Herbipoli: & illud sequentes intrauimus principalem prouinciam Imperij Tartariz, dictam Cathay Calay: & ista prouincia est multum distenta, ac plena ciuitatibus, & oppidis bonis, & magnis omnibusque reſerta mercimonijs, maximè sericosis operibus, & aromaticis speciebus.

Ab hac ciuitate, multis ciuitatibus peragratu versus Orientem, veni ad ciuitatem Cambalu, Vel Camba-

In hac ciuitate Cambalu residet Imperator Magnus Can, Rex Regum terrestrium, & Dominus Dominorum terrestrium. Atque inde vterius in Orientem intratur vetus vrbs Caydo, Caydo ciui-

De palatio Imperatoria Grand Can.

Palatium Imperatoris Grand Can, quod est in Caydo ciuitate, continet in circuitu proprii Palatii Impe-muralis vltra duas leucas, & sunt in eo aulae quam plures, in forma nobiles, & in materia no-biliores. Aula autem sedis, quae est maxima caeterarum, habet intrinsecus pro sui sustentatione 24. aereas columnas factas opere fusorio, de auro puro, & omnes parietes ab intus operas pelli-bus quorundam animalium, quae vocantur Pantheres: haec sanguinei sunt coloris, & ita remicantes, vt Sole desuper relucente, vix oculus valeat humanus sufferre splendorem, tantaeque fra-grantiae, vt illi approximare non possit aer infectus, vnde & ista opertura parietum appreciatur super tegmen aurearum laminarum.

Can descriptio.

Namque stultorum aliqui Paganorum huiusmodi adorant animalia propter colorum, odo-rumque virtutem. Proposui retrahere calamum a describenda nobilitate, gubernatione, & ministrantiu frequentia, atque Imperatoris magnificentia: attamen quia capsi ego, propter incre-dulos, & nescios, ac ineredibiles, non dimittam in toto. Quicumque enim nihil credunt, nihil sciunt, neque erudiri possunt, Scriptura testante, si non crederitis non intelligetis. Dico ergo, & verè dico, quod in huius aulae capite sit thronus, vel sedes Imperialis, excellens, & eminens in ascensu graduum quamplurium, in quo residere solet in plenaria maiestate, in cuius throno toto corpore nihil apparet minus nobile, auro, margaritis, gemmis, & lapidibus preciosis. Singuli gradus sunt de singulis, ac inter se diuisis magnis lapidibus, vt pote primus de Haematillo, ali-us de Sardo, & alius de Chrysolito, & sic vsque ad supremum gradum, qui singuli ad formam cuiusque gradus sunt circumfusi, & cluiforio opere firmati, auro solido, & nihilominus per su-perficiem auri, distinctè seminati, firmiterque inclusi lapilli cari, cum orientalibus Margaritis, summitas autem cum ferculo residentiae in nobilitate excisionis, & fabricatura operis tam diuersa est, & mira, vt paruitatem mei ingenij excedat, quam obrem & ei cedo, vteriusque pro-cedo.

Inuclitur in incredulos.

Ad Imperatoris sinistram gradu vno basior, est sedes suae primae coniugis, tota de iaspidibus auro circumfusa, & in superficie aulae distinctae gemmulae cum granellis eodem schemate, & similiter de iaspide. Sed adhuc submissior vno gradu est sedes coniugis secundae, nec non & sub illa vxoris tertiae. Nam tres proprias secum habet vxores, Odericus dicit, istas duas concu-binas. Itemque resident sub tertia coniuge nobiles mulieres de Imperatoris progenic, iuxta illustriam vnus cuiusque.

Sedes primae
coniugis Im-peratoris.
Sedes coniu-gis secundae.

Et notandum, quod per totam patriam singulae mulieres maritatae, vt intelligantur maritis subiectae, & vt discernantur a soluris, gestant in capitis summitate similitudinem pedis viri, longitudinis brachij & dimidij, quadam leui materia operatam: videlicet nobiles de sericosis operibus pannorum, seu alijs caris & pulchris pannis, & preciosis lapillis, & ignobiles iuxta statum suum de materia communiore.

Signum subie-

Ad dextram vero sedentis Imperatoris vno gradu submissus residet primogenitus eius filius, & sub ipso ordinatè in consimilibus sedibus nobiles proximi de cognitione Imperii.

Primogeniti

Item super thronum & desuper ante ipsius throni locum, tanquam pro celato seu operimen-

Tempore prandij in hac aula, Imperator & Imperatrices, & quiſq; de prædictis, habet mensam ſibi ſolam, quarum vilior præualeat theſauro grandi.

In ſolennitatibus ponitur menſa Imperatori de exquisito electo, ſeu de auro examinato, diſtincta diamantibus, & nobis ignotis incomparabilibus gemmis, quandoque de christallo perſpicuo, ſeu croceo, circumcluſa auro cum gemmis: quandoque de Hæmatifto, quandoque de ebore candido, vel rubicundo: interdum de ligno artiſcioſe combinato, quod deſcendit per flumina de Paradifo. Idem dicit Odericus.

His menſis aſtant Barones, & Principes pro vaſallis attentè in ſuis officijs miniſtrantes, quorum nec vnus emittete verbum aliqua præſumit audacia, niſi Imperatore annuente, vel ad illum loquente, illis dütaxat exceptis, qui certis interſpatijs canunt, aut recitant de principum geſtiſ.

Et notandum, quando in hoc ſolio Maieſtatis diebus ſolennibus reſidet Imperator, ſubſidere ad pedes eius notarios quatuor, qui omne quod Dominus loquitur, ſinguli ponunt in ſcriptis: nam quodcunque tunc ex ore illius egreditur, neceſſe eſt eſſe, vel effici, nec valet item ipſe verbum ſuum mutare, nec reuocare, niſi magno conſilio conuocato.

Vniuerſa vt enſilia quibus in ſolennitate ad has ſeruitur menſas, ſunt de nobilibus petris auro recluſis, Cyphi de Smaragdis, vel Saphyris, topaſijs, pyropis, ſue gryophis: & priuatoribus diebus, de auro probato: tiam in cameris, & cubiculis, nec reputatur ibi claritas argenti, niſi pro pilarijs, columnis, gradibus, & pauimentis.

Itius autem oſtia aulae, dum in ea reſidet, aut deambulat Imperator, multi Barones ingreſſum ſeruant intentè, & ne limen tangatur, quod hoc haberent pro augurio, & benè verberaretur, quia Imperatore præſente, nemo niſi adductus in quacunque camera, vel habitazione intro mittitur, donec interrogatus iuſſerit Imperator.

Mandeuillus ſuis pedibus menſurauit aulam Imperatoris. Carbunculus reſplendens.

Latitudinem huius Baſilicę æſtimo ad ſpatium de meis pedibus centum, & longitudinem vltra quatuor centum. In cubiculo autem Regis dormitorio, conſtat vnus pillarius, ſeu columna de auro ſolido & carbunculus concluſus in illo longitudinis pedis vnus, totum habitaculum de nocte perfundens lumine claro. Hic prout ego notaui, non eſt plene rubeus, ſed ſubruſus, quaſi coloris Hæmatifliui. Porò in vna aularum, circa medium palatii, eſt alius excellſus aſcenus, Odericus dicit pigma, ſuper quem dum placet ſtat, vel reſidet Imperator, diſſimè etiam operatus, ex auro, gemmis, baccis, margaritis, & lapidibus raris, & in quatuor angulis, imagines quatuor ſerpentum de auro puro.

Huius per tria latera dependent retia ſeu cortinæ de cordulis ſericis, in quibus ad ſingulos nodos, groſſa margarita habetur innexa, quibus cortinis tegitur officina: in eius concauitate tenetur tunica quadrata, in qua conueniunt conductus omnium potuum, qui bibuntur in Curia, & innumera vaſorum genera, quibus potus omnibus miniſtratur.

Præterea, iuxta palatii ambitum, habetur grandis parci ſpaciamentum, diuerſi generis arboribus repletum, fructus ferentibus varios, & nobis inuiſos, & in parte media, aula ſuper excelſum collem de tam mira & pulchra ſtructura, vt eius nobilitas de facili ad præſens, non poſſit deſcribi. Et vndique, per collis gyrum aquæ foſſatum profundum, & larum vltra quod pons vnicus ducit ad collem. Atque ex duobus montis lateribus, ſtagnum cum diuerſorum copia piſcium, & volucrum indomitaram, vt auarum, annatum, cignorum, ciconiarum, ardearum, & collectorum in magna pluralitate, nec non & per parcum, multæ ſylueſtres beſtiæ, & beſtiolæ quatenus per aulae fenestras poſſit Dominus pro ſolatio reſpicere volucrum aucupationes, beſtiarum venationes, & piſcium captiones.

Palatium inſtar magni vppidi. Pro India intelligit Septentrionalem Aſiæ partem Sodus.

Et hoc pro cuius dubio ſciendum, quòd in noſtris partibus rara ſint oppida cum pluribus manſionibus, quam in iſto palatio continentur.

Tota æſtate moratur in India terra frigidiffima, in hyeme in Cambalu. Odericus.

Præter palatium hoc in Caydo, habet Imperator ſimilitè tria: vnum in ciuitate Sadus, verſus Septentrionem, vbi competens eſt frigus, ibi moratur in æſtate. Cambalu, vbi competens calor, ibi moratur hyeme. Tertium in ciuitate longh, in quo & in iſto Caydo, vt ſæpius ſeruat ſedem, eò quòd in iſtis eſt aer magis temperatus, quamuis ſemper calidus videtur Noſtratibus.

apud ipsum 15. mensibus, & certè inuenimus multò maiorem partem hominum, in mediam partem nobis non fuisse relaram: hominum (exceptis custodibus bestiarum & volucrum), qui intra palatium certa gerunt ministeria est numerus decem cum an.

Nota. Traxi moram in Cambalu tribus annis: fratres nostri locum habent in Curia sua speciali, & festis diebus statuis dant benedictionem, Odericus. Et quoniam Imperator habet sabatu plures quàm decem mille Elephantes edomitos, & velut vltra numerum alias bestias, (quarum quædam tenentur in caueis, stabulis mirabilibus, vel cænis, nec nõ & aues rapaces, & accipitres, falcones, ostrones, gryfandos gentiles, Laueroys, & Satyros, sed & auiculas loquentes, & papingos, & similes, aliaque cantantes: reputatur numerus hominum de illis curam & laborem gerentium, vltra sex cum an, & præterea iugiter ad Curiam equites cum plenarijs armaturis, quinque cum an, & de peditibus cum præstanti armaturis, cum an decem. Sed & omnes de natione quacunque mundi venientes, qui petunt describi pro Curia recipiuntur. Sic enim iussit Imperator.

Habet & medicos Paganos viginti, & totidem Physicos, atque sine his Medicos Christianos ducentos, & totidem Physicos, quoniam iste Grand Can maiorem gerit confidentiam in Medicis Christianis, quàm in suis proprijs nationis medicis.

Hoc ergò firmiter scias, quod de Curia Regis accipiunt necessaria sua iugiter vltra triginta cum an hominum, præter expensas animalium & volucrum, cum tamen in festis maioribus sint homines propè in duplo tanti. Nec valet hic Dominus defectum vllum pati pecuniæ, eò quòd in terra sua non currit moneta de argento, vel auro, aliòve metallo, sed tantùm de corio vel papyro: horum enim forma denariorum signo Imperatoris impressorum preciat minoris aut maioris valoris, secundum diuersitatem impressionis, qui per visitationem, detriti vel rupti, cum ad Regis thesaurarios deferuntur, protinus dantur pro illis noui.

Quatèr in anno celebrat Imperator festiuitates solennes.

Primam de die propriæ Natiuitatis.

Secundam de die suæ primæ præsentationis in eorum Templo, quod appellant Moseath, vbi & fit ijs, nescio quod genus circumcissionis.

Tertiam in thronizatione sui Idoli in Templo.

Quartam de die quo Idolum cepit dare responsum, seu facere diabolica mira. Plures enim in anno non tenet solennitates, nisi si quando nuptias filij aut filiz celebrat.

Itaque in istis solennitatibus est populi multitudo absque numero, omnes tamen in ordine debito, & singuli intendentes proprio ministerio: nam ad hoc ordinandum, & disponendum, electa sunt quatuor Baronum nobilium genera, ex quibus nonnulli sunt Reges, & alij Equites potentes, Duces, & Marchiones, omnes induti holosericis, quibus inserti cū certa disseminatio sunt vbi que preciosi lapides, miræ virtutis, & aurifigia speciosa, vt si quis in his partibus vnum de talibus haberet mutatorijs, dici non posset pauper imò prædiues. Et habet quodlibet millenarium in his vestibus colorem sibi proprium: primum viridem, secundum vermiculum, tertium croceum, quartum purpureum, seu indicum. Ergo in die solenni, dum de mane Maiestatis thronum conscenderit, veniunt se præsentare hoc modo Regi.

Ante primum millenarium procedit copiosa symphonia dulcis chordarum, sicut de violis, cytharis, lyris, & psalterijs, non autem de tubis aut tympanis: & præcedunt Barones per transfuersum Aulæ coram residente Domino ordinatè bini, & bini sub silentio, ferentes amabundantibus ante pectus tabulam de Iaspide, ebore, christallo, pyropo, vel Hæmatisto, & ante faciem throni inclinant se Imperatori profundè.

Illis que pertranseuntibus, succedit simili modo millenarius secundus, & tertius, atque quartus, nec auditur à quoquam vnicum verbum. Hac præsentatione cum debita maturitate perfecta, resident in basso à latere throni ad proprias mensas, multi Philosophi, seu Artista, sicut de Astronomia, Geomantia, Pyromantia, Hydromantia, Chiromantia, Necromantia, augurijs, ac aruspicijs, & huiusmodi, tenentes coram instrumenta suæ artis, alij Astrolabium, & Sphæras de auro, alij in aureis vasis arenam, prunas ardentes, aquam, vitum, oleum, & caluarias mortuorum, loquentes & respondentes, nec non de auro horologia ad minus duo: & ad cunctas horas secundum cursum horologiorum innuunt Philosophi seruis sibi ad hoc deputatis, vt faciant præstari auditum per aulam, quorum vnus aut duo conscendentes scallum, alta voce proclamant, audite, aulcultate, & omnibus intendentibus dicit Philosophorum vnus: Quilibet nunc faciat reuerentiam Imperatori, qui est filius Dei excelsi, Dominus & superior omnium Dominorum mundi, quia ecce hæc est hora. Et mox singuli in aula inclinato corpore & capite se inclinant maiestatem manentes acclij, donec idem Philosophus dicat, leuate. Atque protinus super hoc factum, Musici suis instrumentis, suauem personant melodiam.

Mandeuilli
interrogatio.

Postea ad aliquantam moram simili modo dicit alius Philosophorum, minimus digitus in aure: & ecce hoc omnes faciunt, donec dicat, sufficit: sic in aliam horam, seu moram dicit, manus vestra super os, & postea manus super caput. Atque in hunc modum iuxta temporis cursum imponunt facienda signa diuersa. Innuunt in eis latere magna mysteria, & quodlibet horum factorum melodia terminat Musicorum. Et sciatissimi me quandoque in tempore opportuno ab eis interrogasse de his signis, qui responderunt quod inclinare caput Domino ad illius horæ momentum, foret confirmatio omnibus diebus vitæ suæ, ad obediendum ipsi & fidelitatem obseruandam imperio, nec posse corrumpi promissionibus siue donis, quodque digitum in auricula imponere, obturatio est auditus contra omnia Imperatori, & Imperio contraria. Et sic de singulis factis singula mysteria confingentes decipiunt audientes: horum itaque fraudulento ingenio, iste Grand Can festiuatus, non nisi ad talium iudicium parari permittit cibaria, aut fieri indumenta pro suo corpore.

Offerta Im-
peratori facta.

Dum autem est visum Curiz gubernatoribus satis de prædictis auditum, faciunt proclamatores silentium imperari, & incipit fieri offerenda Imperatori hoc inodo. Intrannt omnes qui sunt de cognatione Imperatoris Barones adornati nobilissimè pro cuiusque decencia balteis, & indumentis, quorum primus cum resonante symphonia præmittit ad oblationem quotquot valet de dextrarijs albis, & inclinans ante thronum pertranfit, atque per eundem modum singuli Baronum offerentes aliquid dignum iocale inclinans transeuntes, silentio firmè seruato.

Benedictio
prælati.

Post hos intrantes simili modo prælati & Abbates, de iurisdictionibus & religionibus Paganorum offerunt singuli pro suo statu se reuerentèr inclinantes maiestati, & maior prælatorum benedicit Regi, & suis ac Curiz quadam suæ legis oratione.

Deinde introducuntur elephantes, leones, pardus, simia, marmoræ, & diuersæ bestiæ, quarum ductores singuli transeuntes inclinant reuerentèr, & intentè. Postremò afferuntur aquilæ, struthiones, gryphandi, accipitres, & papingi, cum diuersis auiibus & auiculis, nec non serpentes ac pisces, quorum portitores inclinant profundè, quoniam dicunt omnes terrenas creaturas debere adorationem Imperatori Grand Can filio Dei excelsi: & his perfectis, Nos igitur intendamus hoc loco quæso quomodo veraciter Pagani in tenebris ambulant: diabolica inuolutione mens eorum obtenebrata non videt quomodò, cum Imperator sit homo mortalis nuper natus, & similiter sicut illi infirmitate circumdatus, atque in breui cum ipsis moriturus, quem etiam non dubitant sub Deo, clamant eum non Deum, sed Dei filium, ubi vtique pro his ignorant illi non esse laudandū, nec adorandū, sed eum non intèdunt alium filium, filium in creatum & connaturalem, qui & ipsos & eum creauit, solum superlaudabilem in secula.

Et oremus instantèr pro ipsis Paganis, vt agnita veritatis luce videre possint quò ambulant, vt perueniant ad Iesum Christum eorum qualem Dei filium, atque in ipso, & per ipsum laudare & adorare solum vnum verum Deum.

Nota: à Cambalu ad viginti dietas, est pulchrum nemus girans octo dietas in circuitu, in quo sunt omnia genera animalium: custodes habet circa eum. Triennio vel quadriennio vilitat illud Imperator, & cum multa gente nemus circumdat, canes emittuntur & aues, cum multo clamore, & feras congregant in medio memoris, ad planiciem sibi sitam. Tunc Imperator prius iacit quinque sagittas, postea alij: tunc Imperator dicit, Eya, hoc est, mina bectis, & sicut quilibet capit sagittam suam signatam, percussam, alijs recedentibus ad sua loca. Odericus.

Præterea ante Imperatoris mensam eriguntur lætæ tabulæ aureæ cum sculptis, ac si viuerent, imaginibus gallorum, pauonum ac diuersarum volucrum artificiosè, quas præligiator facit pro libitu sine apprehensione manus ire, tripudiare, chorizare, tremere, compugnare, bibere, manducare, sed & cantare: quod quidem inter cætera mihi videbatur mirabilis & aspectu delectabilis. Nullus istud plene intruci potuit, nisi qui erat in throno vel circa: & me oportet hoc loco fateri stultitiam propriam, quòd hac delectatione tractus, magnam adhibui apud Artistolam diligentiam, verbis blandis, & quibuscumque munusculis, ac melioribus promissis, quod de tali mihi traderet artem, qui sagax simul & fallax inprimis, spem meam trahebat sponsonum funibus: sed ad vltimum penitus absceidebat, dicens se vouisse Deo immortalis, ne cuiquam doceret nisi proprio filio seniori, ac per hoc me Deus ab illo malo conseruauit inuitum, & gratias nunc reddentem.

Certum est illic homines esse subtiles ad quasdam humanas artes, & ingeniosos ad fraudes super omnes, quas noui mundi partes, vnde & inter se dicunt prouerbiu, se solos videre duobus oculis, & Christianos vno, cæteros autem homines cæcos: sed mentitur iniquitas sibi, quoniam ipsi vident solo oculo terrena & transitoria, & nos Christiani duobus, quia cum terrenis videntur spiritualia, & mansura: percussit enim "Naas, id est, humani generis hostis cum illis fœdus, vt erueret omnibus oculos dextros, scilicet spirituales.

Cùm itaque narrata de præmissis debeant sufficere, quando Imperator Grand Can de vno quatuor palatorum ad aliud transire velit, vel fortè gratia visitationis aut ardui negotij per Imperium de Regno ad Regnum tendit per comitatus, quatuor exercitibus antè & retrò, & ex amobus lateribus.

Primus exercitus præcedit personam Regis per vnam de suis dietis, vt semper in hospitium, de quo recessit exercitus Rex inter nocte sequenti, & est hic primus comitatus descriptus, & statutus de numero quinquaginta cuman virorum, hoc est, quingentorum millium, semperque præuisum, & prouisum est, vt inueniant necessaria in locis, vbi habent quiescere, vel tardare siue in hospitibus, siue in tentoriis.

Secundus & tertius comitatus sunt eiusdem numeri virorum cum primo, quorum vnus ad dextram tendit Imperatoris, alius ad sinistram in distantia ab ipso ad trium vel duarum leucarum.

Quartus autem qui maior est omnibus, subsequitur Imperatorem quasi ad spatium iactus balistæ. Et adhuc sciendum est, quòd personæ horum comitatum sunt sigillatim, & summatim omnes descriptæ, vt dum vna moritur vel recedit, protinus alia inscribatur, & numerus non minuat. Ipse verò Imperator tendit residens in cella seu camera ædificata super currum grandem formæ, fortè robore, nobilem in structura, est cella de ligno Albes optimi odoris, & parietes cellæ aperti in quibusdam locis laminis aureis, quæ & ipsæ distinguuntur gemmis variis, & margaritis.

Est autem currus quatuor rotarum duntaxat, quem trahunt quatuor Elephantes ad hoc curriose instructi, cum quatuor hippis albis equæ doctis & ipsi cooperti ditissimis tegumentis, ac præter aurigas nobiliter indutos, qui currum cautissimè ducunt, ad sunt & quatuor de maioribus palatii Domini, inde ad vehiculum habentes iugem curam, de imitatione eius, & ne vltimo exercitu appropriet infra iactum (vt dixi) sagittæ. ## CAPVT. 37.

SI placet audire, dicam cur hic Imperator sit appellatus Grand Can. Audieram ego in partibus Ierosolymorum hunc esse sic dictum, à filio Noe, Cham: sed in terra Cathay accepi & aliam, & meram huius rei veritatem. Nam & scribendo hæc duo nomina habent differentiam, quòd filius Noe Cham scribitur quatuor elementis, quorum vltimum est M. & iste Can tribus tantum, quorum vltimum est N.

Vera ratio huius nominis Can.
Guis Can.
Post annos Christi 1100. illa prima Tartaria (de qua suprâ scripsi in prima parte, capitulo quinto) fuit nimis oppressa seruitute sub Regibus circumiacentium sibi nationum. Quando autem Deo placuit, maiores illius Tartariæ eleuauerunt de seipsis sibi Regem dictum Guis Can, cui & promiserunt subiectissimam obedientiam.

"Vel Belgiam"
Idem cum esset prudens & strenuus 12. viriles habens filios, debellauit cum ijs & populo suo, & vicit, ac subiecit cunctos in circuitu Reges, quibus terra indebitè diu subiacuerat. Quin etiam apparente sibi in visione Angelo Dei velut milite in albo equo, & candidis armis, & hortante se, vt transiret Alpes, per montem Belgiam, & per brachium maris, ad terram Cathay, & ad alias illic plurimas regiones transiit, & cepit cum filijs suis aliquas ex illis debellare, & subijcere, Deo in omnibus adiuuante patientè. Et quoniam in equo albo ei Angelus apparuit, qui etiam antè passum prædicti maris nouem orationes Deo facere iussit, idè succedentes vsq; hodiè diligunt equos albos, & nouenarium numerum habent præ ceteris in gratia. Dúmque Guis Can morti præ senio appropinquaret, conuocatos ante se filios hortabatur, & mouebat exemplo 12. telorum in simul colligatorum, quæ à nullo filiorum paritèr frangi potuerant, sed dissoluta vnumquodque per se facillè frangebatur, sic filij (inquit) dilectissimi, si per concordiam vos inuicem dilexeritis, & vixeritis seniori fratri obedientes, confido in Deo iuxta promissionem mihi ab Angelo factam, quòd omnem latissimam istam terram, & optimam illius imperio subijcietis, quod & post patris discessum strenuissimè, ac fidelissimè (Deo sibi prosperante) perfecterunt. Et quia cum propriis nominibus habebant cognomen Can, primogenitus pro differentia obtinuit nomen Grand Can, id est, Magnus Can, videlicet suprâ ceteros fratres, qui sibi in omnibus obediebant.

Cur albi equi, & nouenarius numerus Tartaris sint in pretio.

Ochoto Can.

Itaque iste secundus Imperator vocabatur Ochoto Can, Post quem filius eius regnavit dictus Guis Can.

Quartus autem, qui Mango Can baptizabatur, permanstique fidelis Christianus, qui etiam iussu magno exercitu cum fratre suo Hallaon in partes Arabiæ & Aegypti mandauit destrui in toto Mahometi superstitionem, & terram poni in manibus Christianorum. Et fratre cura

C A P V T. 38.

De territorio Cathay, & moribus Tartarorum.

Totum Imperium Imperatoris Grand Can distinctum est in 12. magnas prouincias, iuxta numerum duodecim filiorum primi Genitoris Can, quarum quælibet in se continet circi-ter 6. millia ciuitatum, præter villas non numeratas quæ sunt velut absque numero. Habent & singulæ prouinciæ regem principalem, hoc est 12. reges prouinciales, & horum quisque sub se reges Insularum plurimos, alij 50. alij ceterum, alij plures, qui omnes & singuli subiectissimè obeidiunt Grand Can Imperatori. Harù prouinciarù maior, & nobilior dicitur Cathay, quæ consistit in Asia profunda. Tres enim sunt Asiæ, scilicet quæ profunda dicitur, & Asia dicta maior quæ nobis est satis propinquior & tertia minor intra quam est Ephesus beati Ioannis Euangelistæ seppultura, de qua habes in præcedentibus. Audistis statum magnatum & nobilium esse per-magnificè, & gloriosum, sed sciatu longè secus esse apud communes & priuatos homines tam in ciuitatibus quam in forensibus totius Tartariæ. In prouincijs autem Cathay habetur tantum de mercimonijs specierum, & de operibus sericosis, quòd multis facilius acquirere esset prætio-sum indumentum, quàm camisium de lino. Vnde & quicunq; sunt alicuius honestatis non ca-rent desuper precioso vestimento.

Omnes tam viri quam femine similibus in forma vestibus inducuntur, videlicet valdè latis, & breuibus vsq;e ad genua cum apertura in lateribus quam firmant (dum volunt) ansis quibusdam, nam vterque sexus est brachijs seu femoralibus plenè reclusus. Nunquam vtuntur toga aut collobio, sed nec caputio, vnde nec per aspectum indumentorum potest haberi differentia inter virum & mulierem innuptam. Sed nupta (vt supra dictum est) gestat per aliquod tegumentum in capite formam pedis viri.

Nubit illi vir quotquot placet mulieribus, vt nonnulli habeant decem vel duodecim vxores aut plures, Nam quisque maritus iungitur licentè cui libet mulieri, exceptis matre, & amita, so-rore, & filia. Sicut viri equitant, tendunt, & currunt per patriâ pro negotijs sic & mulieres, quoniam & ipse operantur omnia ferè artificia mechanicæ sicut pannos & quicquid efficitur de no, corio, sericoq;e, minantq;e; carrucas, & vehicula, sed viri fabricant de ferro et de omni metallo lapidibus atq; ligno, nec vir nec mulier nobilis aut degener comedit vitra femel in die communiter. Multa nutriunt pecora sed nullos porcòs, parum comeditur ibi de pane exceptis mag-natibus & diuitibus, sed carnes edunt pecorum, bestiarum, & bestiolarum vtpote bouum, ouium, caprarum, equorum, asinorum, canum, cattorum, murium, & rattorum, ius carniùm forbentes, & omnis generis lac bibentes.

Nobiles autè bibunt lac equarù, seu inmentorù, pro nobilissimo potu & pauperes aquâ bul-rotundam in culmine aperturā præstantem duo beneficia habitationi, quoniam & ignis quem in medio domus cōstituunt fumum emittit, & pro aspiciendo lumen immittit. Intra seclusus sunt parietes vndiq; de filtro, sed & tectum filtrū est: has domus, dum locum habitandi mutare volunt, vel dum in diutina expeditione procedunt, ducunt secum in plaustris quasi tentoria.

Multas superuacuas obseruant ceremonias, quia respiciunt in vanitates & insanas falsas: solem & lunam præcipuè adorant, eisque frequenter genua curuant, & ad nouilunium, quicquid est magni estimant inchoandum.

Nullus omnino vitur calcaribus in equitudo, sed cogunt e quum flagello scorpione, reputantes peccatum non leue, si quis ad hoc flagellum appodiat, aut iumentum percuteret suo freno, pleriq; similia, quæ parū aut nihil nocent, pōderant vt grauia, sicut imponere cultellum in igne, os osse confringere, lac seu aliud porabile in terram effundere, nec non & huiusmodi multa.

Sed super hæc tenet pro grauiori admissio mingere intra domū quæ inhabitatur, & qui de tanto crimine proclamaretur assuetus, mitteretur ad mortem. Et de singulis necesse est vt consiteatur peccator Flamini sup legis, & soluat summā pecuniarū delicti. Et si peccatū deturpationis habitaculi venerit in publicum, oportebit reconciliari domū per sacerdotem, priusquā vllus audebit intrare. Insuper & peccatore necesse erit pertransire ignem, semel, bis, aut ter iuxta iudicium Flamini, quatenus per ignis acrimoniam purgetur à tanti iniquatione peccati.

Neminem hominum prohibent inter se habitare, sed indifferentèr receptant, Iudæos, Christianos, Saracenos, & homines cuiuscunq; nationis, vel legis, dicentes se satis putare suum ritum non ita securū ad salutem, nisi quandoq; traherentur ad ritū magis salutarem, quem tamen determinate nunc ignorant, imò multi de nobilibus sunt iam in Christianitate baptizati.

Attanien qui illorum sunt curiales Imperatoris non vellent in palatio publicari.

Pendè oblitus eram, quod nunc hic dico notandum, quia dum ab extra Imperium, quis veniens nuntius aut legatus cupit tradere proprijs manibus literas Imperatori, vel deponere coram illo mandata, non permittitur, donec prius in puris transeat lineis ad vnū ad minus regum pro sui purgatione, ne quid forsitan afferat cuius visū, vel odoratu seu tactu rex possit grauari.

Porò Tartari in præcincto expeditionis habent singuli duos arcus, cum magna pluralitate telorum: Nam omnes sunt sagittarij ad manum & cum rigida & longa lancea. Nobiles autem in equis preciosè phaleratis ferunt gladios, vel spatæ breues & latas, incidentes pro vno latere, & in capitibus galeas de corio cocto, non altas, sed ad capitis formam depressas.

Quicunq; de suis fugerit de prelio, ipso facto conscriptus est, vt siquādo inuentus fuerit occidatur. Si castrū vel ciuitas obfessa se illis reddere voluerit, nullam acceptant cōditionē nisi cum morte omnium inimicorum, vel si quis homo singularis se dederit victum nihilominus absque vlla miseratione occidunt, detrucentes illi protinus aures, quas postea coquentes, & in aceto (dum habuerint) ponentes mitunt inuicem ad conuiuia pro extremo ferulo: dumque ipsi in bellis arte fugam simulant, periculosum est eos insequi, quoniam acie iaciunt sagittas à tergo, quibus equos & homines occidere norunt. Et quando in prima acie comparant ad bellandum, mirabiliter sese confringunt, vt media pars numeri eorum vix credatur.

Generaliter noueritis, omnes Tartaros habere paruos oculos, & modicam vel raram barbam: In proprijs locis rarè inter se litigant, contendunt, aut pugnant, timentes legi pergrauas emendas, Et inuenitur ibi rarius vilpilio, latro, fur, homicida, iniuriās, adulter, aut fornicarius, quia tales criminatos inuestigatione sollicita requiruntur, & sine redemptione aliqua perimuntur.

Dū quis decumbit in firmis figitur lancea iuxta illic in terra, & cū appropinquauerit morti, nullus remanet iuxta ipsum, cū verò mortuus esse scitur, confestim in campis, & cum lancea sepelitur.

C A P Y T. 39.

Imperator Grand Can postquam eius cognita fuerit defunctio, desertur mox à paucis viris in Iparco palatij, ad præuisum locū vbi debeat sepeliri. Et nudato prius toto illo loco à graminibus cum cespite figitur ibi tentorium, in quo velut in folio regali de ligno corpus defuncti residens collocatur, paratūq; mensa plena coram eo cibarijs præciosis, & potu de lacte iumentorum. Instabulatur ibi & equa cum suo pullo, sed & ipse albus, nobiliter phaleratus, & ornatus certo pondere auri & argenti. Et est totum Tentorij pavementum de mundo stramide stratum.

Tuncque effodiunt in circuiu fossam latam valde, & profundam vt totum tentorium cum omnibus contentis descendat in illam. Eoq; facto ita equaliter terram planificantes adoperiunt graminibus, vt in omni tempore locus sepulchri non valeat reparare. Et quoniam ignorantia nubilo turpiter excecati putant in alio seculo homines delectationibus frui, dicunt quòd tentoriū erit ei pro hospicio, cibi ad edendū, lac ad potandū, equus ad equitandū, aurum & argentū ad respiciendū, sed & equa lac semper præstabit, & pullos equinos successiue generabit.

CAPVT. 40.

De multis regionibus Imperio Tartaria subieclit.

Reuiter & nunc intendo cursum describere aliquarum magnarum regionum & Insularum Imperij Tartariz. Et primò illas quæ descendunt à prouincia Cathay per septentrionalem plagam, usque ad fines Christianitatis Prussiz, & Russiz.

Ergo prouincia Cathay descendens in sui oriente à regno Tharsis iungitur ab occidente regno Turquescen, in quo & sunt plurimæ ciuitates, quaru formosior dicitur Ocloupar. Ipsum autem Turquescen regnu iungitur ad occidentem sui regno seu Imperio Persiz, & ad septentrionem regno Corasine, quod spaciosum est ualde, habens uersus orientem sui ultra centum digtas deserti : hoc regnu est multis bonis abundans, & appellatur eius melior ciuitas etiam Corasine.

Isti quoq; longum iungitur in occidentem uersus partes nostras regnum Commanorum, quod & similiter longum est, & latum, sed in paucis sui locis inhabitatum : Nam in quibusdam est frigus nimium, in alijs nimius calor, & in nonnullis nimia muscarum multitud.

De istis Commanis uenit olim fugata quædam pluralitas populi usque in terram Egypti que ibidem succreta nunc ita inualuit, ut suppressis indigenis uideatur regnare : Nam & de ipsis constituerunt hunc, qui modo est Soldanus, Melech Mandibron. Per Commanorum regnum decurrit Grandis fluius Echil, qui omni hyemali tempore in magna spissitudine gelatur : in superioribus quoq; parte huius regni inter duo freta Caspiæ, & Oceanii, mons sublimis est ualde Chocas. Nota quod à nostris partibus non possit usque in Indiam superiorem duci magnus exercitus per terras, nisi per tres tantummodo transitus, quorum iste est unus, qui tamen non ualet transiri nisi tempore glacie, & hic appellatur est Lodekone.

Alter per Turquescen, & per Persiam, tamen ibi sunt deserta plurium digitarum, in quibus nisi esset exercitus bene prouidus, posset perire.

Tertius ad primos fines regni Commanorum, transfretando tamen mare usque in regnum Abchaz : principalis ciuitas Commanorum dicitur Sarach.

Ab hoc regno uersus partes nostras inuenitur regio Laiton quæ est uicima paganismi, iungitur iste finis terræ Christianitatis regno Prussiz, & Russiz.

Post potestatem Imperij Tartariz descendendo à prouincia Cathay in Australem plagam uenitur uersus Persiam, Syriam, & Greciam. Uersus terram Christianorum possum aliquater in summa (quantum conuenit huic scripto) cõnotare. Dixi supra iam prouinciam Cathay iungi regno Turquescen ad occidentem, & illud quoq; iungi regno seu Imperio Persiz. Ad quod sciendum, quamuis rex Persiz habet etiam ab olim nomen Imperatoris ; quia (cũ tenet aliquas terras sui Imperij ab Imperatore Tartarorum) necesse est ut in tanto subiectus sit illi.

Sunt autem in Persia duæ regiones : una altera Persiz, quæ à regno Turquescen descendens, iungitur ad occidentem sui fluuii Pyson. In ista habentur renominatæ ciuitates, quaru meliores duæ dicuntur Bocura & Seonargant, quam aliqui appellant Samarkand : Et altera Regio bassæ Persiz, descendens à flumine Pyson, qui ad sui occidentem iungitur regno Mediz, & terræ minoris Armeniz, & ad Aquilonem mari Caspio, & ad Austrum terræ minoris Indiz.

In hac bassa Persia tres principales ciuitates sunt Aessabor, Saphaon, Sarmasale. In terra autem maioris Armeniz quondã habebantur quatuor regna, quæ nunc dicuntur subiecte Imperio Persiarum.

Perfarum, habetque famam terrarum nobilissimam, & ad occidentem sui iungitur Regno Turciae.

Hæc Armenia multas valde bonas continet ciuitates, quarum famosior est Taurisa, Regnum Mediarum quod subest Regi Perfarum quamuis non latum est, tamen longum est, & ad occidentem sui regno Chaldeæ coniunctum. In Media meliores duæ ciuitates sunt, Seras, & Keremien.

Hinc ad occidentem sui iuncta est regio Georgiae, quæ modo constat diuisa in duo regna. Nam pars superior, quæ iungitur Mediæ, referuauit sibi nomen Georgiae, sed inferior pars dicitur regnum Abchaz. Ambo hæc regna, & reges eorum, sunt de fide Christiana, & homines ita deuoti vt ad minus semel in hebdomada comunicent sacramentis, iuxta ritum Græcorum confectis. Et quidem regnum Georgiae subiacet imperio Grandis: sed Abchaz nunquam ab ipso Imperatore Tartaricæ, neque Perfarum, neque Medorum domino subditi potuit, eo quod munitum est aquis & iuribus & alijs prouisionibus contra impugnationes hostiles.

Iuxta hoc regnum Abchaz habetur vnus mirum & mirabile, nam magnus est territorij locus dictus Hamson, & continens in circuiu spaciū viæ quatuor dietarum: videtur semper opertus tenebris densis vt nemo audeat illic intrare profundè, quoniam si qui presumpserint, non sunt visuri reuerti. Attamen fatentur vicini sub illis se tenebris audisse nonnumquam clamores hominum, hinnitus, mugitus, rugitus, & boatus pecudum, & bestiarum, sed & cantus gallorum, vt per hæc & alia signa constet ibi habitare gentes: nam & fluius decurrens monstrat signa sepe certissima in suo exitu: ignoratur tamen si tenebræ per totum territorium sint eiusdem densitatis, an forte sint in circuiu per aliquod spaciū, & intrinsecus plus luminosum.

Dicuntur autem tenebræ istæ olim per diuinum miraculum aduenisse. Saboere enim Imperatore Perfarum, circa annum Gratiæ ducentesimum quinquagesimum in persecutione Christianorum tendente cum pleno exercitu per hunc locum, & Christianis tyrannidem eius fugientibus, contigit ex improbitate eos ita arctari, vt se effugere desperarent, quapropter statim ad orationis refugium omnes se stementes clamauerunt ad Christum auxiliatorem suum: Et deus, qui pro puro corde Christianos ad se orantes semper exaudit, expleuit illic literam vaticinij Isaiæ: quia ecce tenebræ operient terram & caligo populos, monstrans per tenebram terrenam, quam eis superduxit, quas passuri essent inimici nominis Christi tenebras infernales, indicansque per temporalem vitam, quam sibi fidelibus conseruauit, eam quam possidaturi sunt viri Christiani vitam perpetuam, & cælestem.

Itaque hoc regnum Abchaz ad occidentem sui iungitur regno Turciae, quod in longo & lato valde extensum multas continet prouincias scilicet Iconiæ, Cappadociæ, Saure, Brike, Bescion, Patan, & Gennoch; hij omnes Turci, cum tota Syria & Arabia vsque; ad Galliziam Hispaniæ, sub sunt Imperatori Babylonice Soldano, & sunt in singulis prouincijs & regionibus ciuitates magnæ, ac multæ nimis. Consequenter huic regno Turciae ad occidentem sui in ciuitate Cathasa iungitur per mare Græciæ superior pars potestatis Imperatoris Constantinopolitani, & quasi ad Aquilonem contiguatur regno Syriæ: cuius vna prouincia est terra promissionis, prout hoc satis dictum est supra. Sunt & aliæ terræ, & Insulæ, & patriæ latæ, & spatiose, continentes in se multa regna, & reges, & gentes diuersas, de quibus nunc per singula pertractare non est consilij.

Ad suprascriptam Chaldeam iungitur Mesopotamia, & minor Armenia, & velut ad Austrum eius Ethiopia, Mauritania, Lybia alta & bassa, & Nubia. Excepto ergo duntaxat districtu Imperij Persicæ & potestate Soldani, omnes sepe pertractatæ terræ, regiones, regna, & Insulæ descendendo rursus per Aquilonem, quæ ad Austrum à prouincia Cathay, vsque; ad Christianitatem sunt de Imperio Tartaricæ Grandis. Et notandum de spacio distantia, quod insulatores de Roma, vel Venetia festinantes non per terras, quàm per mare, expendant de tempore 11 menses, & quandoque duodecim, priusquam in Cathay valeant peruenire.

Hij itaque visis describani saltem aliquas à prouincia Cathay in orientem terras Imperij Tartarorum. Illic habetur regio Cadilla spaciosa multum, simul & speciosa: crescunt namque in ea fructus ad quantitatem magnorum Cawardorum, in quibus inuenitur vna bestiola, in carne & sanguine ad formam agnelli absque lana, & manducatur: totus fructus cum bestiola. Sunt & alij plures diuersi fructus, quorum penes nos non est respectus nec usus. Nam & sunt ibi nonnullæ speciales vites ferentes botros incredibiliter magnos, quorum vnum vix virilis vir valet in hasta portare.

Et deinde in meridiem per aliquas diuitas, potest perueniri ad primas Caspicæ alpès, quæ descendendo descendunt vsque ad Amazoniam, insulam mulierum, de qua tractatum est. Inter has Alpes retinetur maxima multitudo Iudeorum decem tribuum Israel, per Dei voluntatem ita inclusa, vt in copiosa numerositate non possint à nostra parte exire, quamuis aliqui pauci nonnumquam sunt visis transisse. Habent autem competentem exitum circa insulam Amazoniæ, sed illum diligenter regina obseruat.

crudeles habitant homines, nec est securum icinerare per illam, quod ad modicam occasionem (si Deus non conseruaret) occiderent viatorem & manducarent. Illic sunt arbores ferentes lanam velut ouium, ex qua texunt pannos ad vestimenta. Hyppocentauri sunt ibi pro media superiori parte in forma humana, & pro inferiori figura equorum, seu taurorum, venantes in terris, & piscantes in aquis quod comedunt, & super omnia carnes hominū, quos capere possunt.

Nec non & gryphi illie apparent pro media posteriori parte in forma leonis, pro anteriori in forma aquilę. Sed sciatis, corpus magni gryphi maius esse octo leonibus de partibus illis. Nam postquā equum, bouem vel hominem, etiam asinum occiderit, leuat & aportat pleno volatur: tanquā cornua bouis aut vacę sunt illi vngulę, de quibus etiam fieri solent cippi ad bibendum, qui plurimum reputantur preciosi. Fiunt quoq; de pennis alarum eius arcus rigidi, & fortes, ad iaciendum missilia & sagittas. Ad istius regni Baccarię extremitates in Oriente finitur terra potestatis Grand Can: Et iungitur ei terra potestatis magni Imperatoris Indię, qui semper vocatur Presbyter Ioannes. Notandum, quoties per prouincias totius Imperij Grand Can, quicquam accidit, quod Imperatorē non oportet latere, confestim nuntuntur per reges aut barones nunciij in dromedarijs aut equis, qui celerrimē festinant ad certa hospitia, ad hoc ipsum, velut absque numero per imperium instituta: Isque nuncijs hospitio appropinquans, & cornu resonans, dum auditur paratur nuncijs alter, qui de manu suscipiens literas, per recentem dromedarium festinat ad aliud hospitium, & sic in breui tempore perferuntur ruinosæ ad curię aures. Similique modo nunciij pedites permutantur de hospitio in hospitium, vt citius percipiatur negotium huius nunciij: appellantur sua lingua Chidibo.

Ergo per premissa satis elucet magna esse nobilitatem, potestatem, reuerentiam, & dominationē Imperatoris Tartarię Grand Can de Cathay, & quod nullus ab ista parte Imperator, nec Persę, nec Babylonię, nec Grecię, sed nec Romę est illi comparandus. Vnde & multū miserandū est, quia ipse cum toto Imperio nec est fide Catholica illustratus, nec salutari lauacro regeneratus: & hoc oremus vt in breui eueniat, per Iesum Christum Dominum nostrum.

Explicit pars secunda huius operis.

CAPVT. 41. De magnificentia Imperatoris Indię & preciositate Palatii.

Vm in præcedentibus Imperator Indię dictus sit magnus, restat de illius magnificentia aliquid poni hoc loco: cuius vtiq; gloria, nobilitas, & potestas, dici non habetur minor, quā dicti Imperatoris de Cathay: nam etsi in aliquibus videatur forsitan minor, est tamen in aliquibus satis maior, quia omne equale nō est idem cum illo cui equatur: itaq; a finibus regni Bacharię supradicti vbi contiguatur Imperio Indię, eundo per multas dietas intratur in regnum Pentoxorię quod est magne latitudinis, & abundantē in multis bonis: huius nominator ciuitas, dicitur Nyse, & in ea habet Imperator palatiū Imperiale, in quo residet dum sibi placet. Imperator iste semper vocitatus est Presbyter Ioannes, cuius nominis causam audiveram quandoq; non veram: sed in illis partibus accepi rationem indubitātā, quam breuiter hic enarro. Circa annū ab incarnatione Domini octingentesimū, dux Ogerus de Danemarchia, cum quindecim cognationis sue baronibus, & armatis viginti milibus transiit mare Grecię, & fauente sibi Deo conquifuit Christianitati per multa prælia penē omnes terras, regiones, & insulas, quas esse de potestate Grād Can prædixi, nec non & omnes, que sunt de potestate Imperij huius Imperatoris Indię. Eratq; inter Barones vnus denominatus Ioannes filius Goudebuc, regis Frisonū qui dictus Ioānes Deo deuotus fuit, & dū licuit Ecclesiariū limina inuiuit, vnde & barones ei dabant quasi per iocum Presbyter Ioannes vocabulum. Dum ergo Ogerus dietas regiones expugnatas diuideret in hijs quindecim suis cognatis, & quemlibet eorū in suo loco constituit regem, quatenus Christiana religio in illa orbis superficie semper stabilis permaneret, tradidit illi Presbytero Ioanni superiore Indiā, cū 4000. insulis, regionibus, & ipsū præfecit Imperatorē super reliquos cognatos, vt ei certa tributa impenderent, & in omnibus obedirent, atq; ex tunc omnes successores Indię sunt vocati Presbyter Ioannes, & vsq; in hodiernū tempus boni mālērunt Christiani, & religionis æmulatores. Interim cum causā matrimoniorum aut procurationis filiorum dispersa est primi Imperij integritas, & multę de insulis conuerse vel potius peruerse retrocesserunt ad vetustum squalorem paganismi primi. Nota. Recedens a Cambalu versus orientem posit 50. dietas ad terram Presbyteri Ioannes, principalis ciuitas terrę vocatur Cofan, satis parua sicut Vincentia: habet etiam sub se multas alias ciuitates, Ex pacto semper habet in vxorem vnam de filiabus Grand Can.

Per multas peruenit ad prouinciam Casan, que est secunda melior de mundo, vbi subtilior est, habet dietas 50. longior, 60. & est vna de duodecim partibus Imperij Grand Can. Oderi-cus. Vide infra capitulo 49. de Cassan, & de Epulone. Deinde venitur in Thebeth prouincia, quæ Indix est confinis. Itaque Rex & Imperator iste tenet spatiofissimum Imperium plenum valde multis Regionibus & Insulis amplis, diuisum inter quatuor flumina magna de Paradiso terrestri descendente, Pyson, Gyon, Tygrum, & Euphratem. Nam vltta fines orientales eius Imperij, & terrestrem Paradisum, nullus hominum habitat vel dominatur.

Insulæ Orientales.

Præterea imperat multis alijs regionibus & Insulis quæ distinguuntur per brachia maris Occani, & in quibus singulis continentur grandis numerositas ciuitatum ac villarum, & multitudo innumera populorum præ abundantia & præciositate omnium terrenorum bonorum.

Imperium Indix habetur famosum per vniuersum orbem. Sed & famosus haberetur si mercatores mundi communiter possint & auderent adire sicut Cathay. Noltrabitus enim perarum est illic accessus, tam præ longinquitate, quam præ marinis periculis. Nam exceptis alijs sunt ibi quamplures Adamantini colles, ad oram maris, & intra mare, qui sua virtute attrahunt sibi naues ferrum continentes. Quoniam & mihi nauiganti monstrabatur per nauas à remotis quasi parua Insula in mari, quam asserbant totaliter ab antiquis temporibus paulatim ibi cumulatam de nauibus per Adamantes retentis.

Latitudo Imperij præbyteri Ioannis est 4. milium iter.

Duodecim reges prouinciales.

Suse sedes Imperialis.

Estimatur autem latitudo huius Imperij per dietas quatuor mensium, sed longitudini non datur estimatio, eo quod tenditur vsque Paradisum vbi nullus accedit.

Distinguitur est Imperium per duodecim prouincias, quibus totidem præsumunt reges principales seu prouinciales, & quorum singuli habent sub se Reges, Duces, Marchiones, & Barones, præstantes atque reddentes præbytero Ioanni promptam obedientiam, & certa tributa. Sæpius & cõmunitè tenet sedem Imperator in palatio vrbis Imperialis Suse. Hoc autem Palatium tale & tantum est, vt per me non credatur debite estimandum. Istud tamen dico audentè in summa, quod grandius, nobilius, preciosius, & placidius est, in auro, gemmis, structuris, & schemate supra descripto palatio Grand Can in Caydo, Et ex speciali sciatis, istius palatij principales portas esse de Sardonico, vndiq; in ebore circumclusas: sed & transfuersæ linearum sunt omnes Eburnæ, aularum & cubiculorum fenestras chrySTALLINÆ, Menfarum quædam Smaragdine, aliquæ Hæmatistina, & æterorumque lapidum preciosorum per aurum sibiinet coniuictorum. Et nonnullæ in toto aureæ vel gemmunculis disseminatæ, & vnaquæque de mensis cum stabilimento proprij generis. De throni quoque preciositate, quia mæx demonstrationis excellit modum, solummodo dico, singulos ascensionis gradus esse singulorum lapidum preciosorum: Primum onychis, secundum christalli, tertium iaspidis, quartum hæmatisti, quintum sardij, sextum cornelij. Et septimus qui est sub sedentis Imperatoris pedibus, ipse est, chrysolitus, omnes circumfusi, & inclusoria arte formati, auro splendido relucens. Sed & ambo throni reclinatoria ex smaragdine auro combinatis, eoque distincto nobilissimis granis, & gemmis: cuncti pariter in camera Regis dormitoria consistunt de auro luluo, disseminati bacis, & quampluribus carbuncolorum rubetis, totum de nocte habitaculum illustrantibus.

Et nihilominus in ea chrySTALLINA lampas plena balsamo pistico sed ardens & lucens, tam pro augendo lumine, quam pro corrigendo aere, tamen etiam pro ministrando optimo odore.

Forma lecti Imperatoris compacta est de puris & nobilissimis Saphyris, conclusi vtiq; aureis vel eburneis ligaturis, vt virtute lapidum capiat suauem somnum, motusq; carnis inhonesti stimuli, in eo refrenentur. Nunquam enim iungitur mulieri nisi soli coniugi propriæ, sed nec illi nisi quatuor quindenis anni videlicet in capite hyemis, veris, æstatis, & autumnii causa sobolis generandæ.

Vtiq; breuiter transcam de multa huius palatij nobilitate, mirabile hoc solummodo præmissis super addo. Quia circa medium illius in summo apice turris maioris, duo sunt nodi seu pomella de decoctissimi auri metallo miræ magnitudinis, & serene resplendentis, & in ipsis formati duo carbunculi: grandes, & lati, sua virtute tenebras effugantes, & velut splendorem plenilunij nocturno tempore mentientes.

CAPVT. 42.

De frequentia palatij &amp; comitatu Imperatoris.

Seruiunt & præsto sunt iugiter Domino Imperatori septem reges, qui in capite singulorum mensium, alijs septem regibus pro illis palatii ingredientibus recedunt ad propria, donec reuoluitur eis tempus statutum. Nam isti sunt Imperatoris Cubicularij, isti Camerarij, isti scindunt Regi morsellos: alij de apponendis curam gerunt ferulis & deponendis, de afferendis, de asportandis, alij pincernæ, Archimandritæ, ostiarij, & sic de singulis.

De quibusdam miris per regiones India.

Licet plurima mira habeantur in terra Imperij Presbyteri Ioannis, ne materiam operis nimium proteletur, multa tægo silentio: & solum de quibusdam in principalibus Intulis narro.

Ergò in primis dico vidisse me magnum mare arenosum, quod est solum minuta arena sine vlla aqua cum lapillorum granellis currit, & fluit per altas eleuationes, & depressiones ad similitudinem maris aquæ, nec vnquam quiescit: & quòd ipse non cesso stupere, inueniuntur pisces ad litus proieciti, qui cum sint alterius formæ & speciei, quàm de nostro mari, videntur ta-men gustui in edendo delicatioris. Nullo tamen humano ingenio videtur hoc mare transada-ri, aut nauigari, aut illo piscari, sed nec propter sui longitudinem, & plura impedimenta de pro-pè circūiri.

Item: ab hoc latere maris per tres dietas habentur magnæ montium alpes, inter quas venit quasi oriens de Paradiso fluuius decurrentibus petris, nihil penitus habens aquæ, in quibus æsti-mandæ sunt plurimum magnarum esse virtutum, quamuis de singulis humanæ scientiæ constare non potest.

Hic petranim fluuius currit ad interitum tempus, quasi in tribus septimanæ diebus, per spa-tium deserti Indix plurimum dietarum, vel fluuius, quousque tandem se perdat in mare arenosum prædictum, atque ex tunc ipsi lapides penitus non comparent. Tempore autem sui cursus nullus appropinquare præsumit, præ strepitu eius & motu: sed tempore quietis adit sine periculo vitæ.

In Orientem versus fluuij originem ad ingressum deserti magni inter quosdam de monti-bus, cœmitur grandis terræ planicies tanquam spatiosi campi totalitèr arenosi, in quo videntur ad Solis ortum exurgere de arena, & secundum eleuationem Solis excrecere quædam virgula-ta, atque in seruore meridiei producere fructum. Ac de illo in Solis declinao fructus cum arbustulis paulatim minui, & in oc calu penitus deperire, vnde & nullus hominum audet illorum vti fructibus, ne sit quid fantasticum & nociuum.

In huius deserti interioribus, vidi homines in toto syluestres, qui etsi in superioribus formam prætere videantur humanam, descendunt in subterioribus ad formam bellix alicuius.

Horum quidam frontes gerunt comibus asperatas, grinientes vt feræ vel apri: alij nonnulla vti videntur loquela, quam nemo rationalium nouit, & quibusdam signis concepta depromunt. Est et illic pluralitas syluestrium canum, qui dicuntur papiones, quibus postquam ede-

Est & copiositas papigonum avium viridium in colore quas appellant phicake, & quarum diuersa sunt genera, nobiliores habent latas in rostro linguas, & in vitroque pede digitos duos. Et quædam ex istis naturaliter loquuntur verba aut prouerbia, seu salutationes, in patris idiomate, vt euidenter salutes concedant, & reddant viatoribus, & nonnunquam debitum iter errantibus per desertum ostendant. Minus autem nobiles non loquuntur ex natura, sed si latas habent linguas, & non sunt vltra duorum annorum ætatis, possunt per assiduitatem instrui ad loquelam.

Aliæ nec loquuntur, nec erudiuntur, sed solum clamitant pro voce milui, & nisi tres digitos habent in pede.

Nota: in quarta orientali Deus dedit fratribus minoribus magnam gratiam, vnde in magna Tartaria ita expellunt ab obsessis dæmones, sicut de domo canes: vnde quandoque per decem dietas ad eos adducuntur dæmoniaci alligati, & statim fratribus præcipientibus in nomine Iesu Christi, exeunt, & liberati baptizantur, & comburunt idola, & plures credunt, & quandoque exeunt idola de igne, & fratres projiciunt aquam benedictam, & clamat dæmon, Vide, de meo habitaculo expellor propter fratres miores. Ita multi credunt, & baptizantur. Odericus.

Item nota: dum recederem de terra Præsbyteri Ioannis versus occidentem, applicui ad contratan vnam, quæ dicitur Melescorde, quæ pulchra est, & multum fertilis: inter montes duos huius contratæ fecerat quidam murum circumdantem mœrem, & in eo fontes nobilissimos, & omne delectabile. Et hunc locum dicebant paradysum, sicut hic ferè continetur. Ideo Odericus, qui postea narrat de valle infausta in hoc se terminat.

Mischorach.

Ad suprædictum Indiæ regnum Pentexoriæ satis propè, & lata est & longa Insula, Mischorach, bonis copiosè referta, sic qua vnum scribo præteritum mitum.

Ante paucos hos annos, villanus ditissimus, sibi valde preciosum construxerat palatum, quasi pro Paradiso terrestri, circumdatum, munitum fortalitijs, ac repletum omnibus corporalibus delicijs.

Illic aræ, turres, camere, cubicula, cum alijs ædificijs, in multo numero, & gloria permagnifica, ac historiarum picturis, inter quas, nonnunquam prodigioso artificio bestiarum & bestiolarum, & auiculæ discurrebant, volitabant, & per pugnas, garritus, collisiones, metebantur viuere.

Illic prata, & pometa, & seruatoria circa delicosi collis congestum, distincta velut omni genere florum, arborum, & herbarum, cum multis fontibus & riualis, quorum perspiciuitas, & fluxus in glariis suauem & auditum præstabant refectionem; & super aliquos fuerunt exceptioris artificij, circumstructi auro, & argento, & geminis, & tres principales fontes emittentes ad palatum Domini per occultas conductas, riualos vini, lactis, & mellis.

Copiosus quoque numerus formosorum puerorum, & puellarum, ætatis inter decem & sex decem annos, inditorum torquibus, & cycladibus exauratis, exercentium inter iocos cantus & spectacula, ac seruentium suo Domino prope nutum. Audiebantur ex turrim costodibus, nec non videbantur dulcisonæ symphoniarum, generum diuersorum, vt certissimè putares, non hominum, sed Angelorum: & in istis, ac similibus, deliciebatur iste villanus.

Sed & aurum liuido nil iuuat, imò nocet: quia enim hic inuidiæ & otij facibus super ingenuitatem mentis omnium generaliter nobilium principum verebatur in corde: (ingenuitas enim, & iusticia nunquam cohabitât in cordis vno domicilio) Composuerat ista sibi in hunc finem, vt per se singulos aduocaret aliquos vasallos corpore robustos, mentesq; audaces, atq; ad omnem proteritiam benè proclius: & cuiuslibet pro placitis muneribus commisit vt illum seu illum principem seu Baronem, quem dicebat sibi aduersariu, clam per insidias vel impetu occideret, promittens quenquam post factum ad se recepturum perpetuò in hunc locum: sed & velut vaticinans pseudopredicant: si quem illorum pro his flagitijs contingeret corporaliter tradi morti, nihilominus animam eius in hunc amœnum Paradysum recipi, & viuere in æternum.

Per hunc igitur modum nonnullis nobilibus occisis, & interfectis, tandem nudabatur eius nequitia tanta, & congregati regionis Barones miserum occiderunt, eius opera destruentes. Ipse ego inibi ductus, vidi fontium loca, & multa rei vestigia.

Est illic in alpihus vallis infausta, quatuor ferme leucarum: longitudo vallis, quasi ad quatuor milliaria Lombardica, appellata vallis incantationis, seu periculosa, seu proprius dæmoniosa: intrā quam diebus ac noctibus resonant boatus & tumultus tonitruorum, tempestatum, clamorum, & stridorum, diuersique generis sonituum terribilium, quos illic exercet multitudo spirituum malignorum.

Propè ad vallis medium sub vna rupium, apparet omni tempore visibiliter integrū ac maximum caput dæmonis vsque ad humeros tantum, cuius speciem præ horrore nullus pleno intuitu humanus audet diu oculus sustinere: nam respicientes contrā aspiciunt truculentè, agitans oculos minaciter, tanquam ex palpebris eicturus (quæ & scintillant) flammam in altum. Totūque caput sese rotat ad minas, & variat terribiliter modum & continentiam sub repente diuersis manieribus. Exitque de illo per totum ignis obscuratus fumo, & fætor tantus, quod per magnum spatium viz pessimam vallem infectat.

Ingredi autem volentibus, apparet semper ad introitum vallis, magna copia auri, argenti, vasorum, vestium, & rerum pretiosarum, quas proculdubio ibi dæmones confingunt, quibus & ab olim multi insipientium hominum concupiscentia tracti intrarunt, & vsque nunc intrant pro colligendo thesauro: sed de Infidelibus paucissimi reuertuntur, imò nec de Christianis, qui auaritia causa ingrediuntur: per vallis autem semitam, quæ inter montes & monticulos, tortuosa & aspera est, gradientes vident, & audiunt, dæmoniacos spiritus multos volutantes, & imaginibus corporum visibilium, serpentum, volucrum, vlularum, lamiarum, & huiusmodi specierum horribilium dentibus ininitantes, vngulas erigentes, incognitos sibilos spirantes propè super capita ad aures transgredientium. Sempèrque minuitur lumen acris, donec ventum fuerit ad terribilissimum locum capitis anedicti.

Si quis autem sincerè fidei Christianus per contritionē verā & confessionē, se posuerit in statu saluationis, munitus corporis Christi mysterijs, ac signo crucis, cum intentione ibidem agendi penitentiam de admissis, & cauendi de admittendis, putatur posse hanc transire vallem securus quidem à morte, non tamen liber à laboribus, horroribus, & tormentis, & extire, de omnibus culpis præteritis corruptis, ac de futuris magis solito cautus, sicut scriptum est, territi purgabuntur.

Nota aliud mirabile magnum. Vidi cum irem per vnam vallem positam iuxta flumen quod egreditur de paradiso, vidi in ea multa corpora mortuorum, in qua etiam audiui multa genera Musicorum, qui ibi mirabiliter pulsabant: tantus erat ibi tinnitus Musicorum, quod inculsit mihi timorem horribilem.

Est autem longitudo illius vallis quasi ad quatuor milliaria Lombardica, in qua si vnus Infidelis intrat, nunquam egreditur, sed sine mora moritur: Et licet sciu, quod intrantes moriuntur, tamen acceptaui intrare, vt viderem quid ibi esset. Dum intrassem tot humana cadauera ibi vidi, quod nisi quis videret, credere non posset.

In hac valle, ab vno eius latere, vidi faciem hominis valdè horribilem, qui tantum horrorem mihi inculsit, quod putauim me spiritum exhalare, propter quod sæpè repetij verbum vitæ, scilicet, verbum Caro factum est.

Ad illam faciem non audebam accedere, nisi ad distantiam octo passuum: postea iui ad caput vallis, & ascendi super montem arenosum, in quo vndique circumspiciens, nihil videbam, nisi instrumenta musicalia, quæ audiebam fortiter pulsare. Cum fuisset in capite montis, repertum multum argentum congregatum ibi in similitudinem squammarum piscium, vnde posui in gremio, sed quod de ipso non curabam, dimisi illud, & sic illæsus transiui Deo concedente.

Sarraceni cum hoc scirent, reuerebantur me esse baptizatum, & sanctum: mortuos nunc in valle dicebant, homines infernales.

Odericus ad literam hic renninat suum librum: non fuit tot perpeffus in valle, sicut ego. Anno Domini 1331. Ianuarij nono, migravit ad Christum, in conuentu Minorum: cuius vitam statim in fine, & vsque claris miraculis diuina prouidentia approbat, & commendat, prout continebatur in quaterne, à quo concordantias hic superseminauit.

CAPVT 45.

De periculo &amp; tormentis in valle eadem.

Itaque dico vobis, cum ego cum sodalibus, qui simul eramus, quatuordecim diuersarum nationum ante ingressum huius tanti periculi peruenissemus, nos tractatu longo, & deliberatione acuta consiliabamur, vtrumnam ingredi deberemus, & quidam affirmabant, alij verò negabant. Erat autem in numero duo deuoti fratres, de religione beati Francisci, natione Lombardi, qui videbantur pro seipsis non multum curare ingressum, nisi quia uoluerunt nos animare ad ingressum, ingressum, dicentes, si qui nostrum per confessionem, & Eucharistia susceptionem se ibidem praeunirent, ingrederentur cum illis: quo, ab omnibus mediante debita prouisione, quam ipsi fratres penes se gerebant peracto, parauimus mentes nostras cum pedibus ad intrandum.

Sed ecce quinque de nobis, duo Graeci & tres Hispani, semetipsos ab alijs segregantes, visi sunt alium requirere introitum nos praecedere cupientes, & certe nos illos exinde non vidimus, & quid eis acciderit an periculum subierint, vel ne ignoramus.

Nos autem nouem per vallem processimus in silentio, & cum cordis ea deuotione, quam quisque sibi potuerit obtinere: & ecce in breui transacto spatio apparuerunt cumuli massiarum auri & argenti, & preciosorum copia vasorum. Sed dico vobis pro parte mea, quia nihil horum tetigi, reputans id fallaciam daemorum confinxisse ad mittendum concupiscentiam in cor nostrum, imò sine intermissione conabar cor meum custodire ad deuotionem inceptam.

Procedentibus igitur nobis lux caeli minuebatur paulatim & augebatur horror, quoniam prope nos vndique etiam sub pedibus nostris apparebant iacere cadauera mortuorum hominum penitus defuncta: alia adhuc spirantia, & nonnulla semiuia, super quae dum nos aliquando calcare contingeret, conquerebantur, ac dolorose submurmurabant.

Et licet non certum id habebam, estimauimus hoc fieri in parte vel in toto fitione daemorum, reputans in breui tempore tantam multitudinem hominum spontaneè vallem intrasse, & si à longo tempore in ea perissent putrefactos fuisse.

Ergò in initio nostri processus quasi prope leucam inuenitur iter sub pedibus satis promptum, sed lumine tanquam ad medium nobis sufficiente, via torquebatur nimis, & asperabatur: & ecce figurae daemorum, circum & supra in aere se ferentium, ad imagines horribilium luporum, leonum, iuarum, megerarum, iuxta cuiuscunque genus, vltantium, rugentium, stridentium, gannientium, hiantes ore, intentantes dentibus, rotis, ac vnguibus, nos terrete, mordere, discerpere, deglutire.

Quapropter pro breui interdum soluto silentio nos inuicem hortabamur, ne quis pro pusillanimitate terrori cederet, & tanto deficeret in agone. Hoc igitur modo per secundam leucam expirante nobis vsque ad tenebras lumine, quouique quis vix vmbrae proximi agnoscere possit, praeter praedicta in aere tormenta, iucurrerant nobis ad tibias, & pedes pluralitas quasi porcorum, vrsorum, & caprarum grinnientium, & impellentium nos ad lapsum, quod vel ad tertium, vel quartum, aut sextum passum solatenus cadebamus in palmas, seu genua, vel prosternebamur in faciem, aut supini.

Ac superuenere praeter hoc ventorum turbines, fulgurum conuulsiones, tonitruorum boatus, grandinum calus & exundatio pluuiarum, quantas & quales nunquam accepimus in hoc mundo, quibus iactabamur, ruebamur, quassabamur, & periclitati fuimus extra narrandum.

Interdum quoque sensimus tanquam graues baculorum ictus, per humeros, dorsa, latera, & ad reas, alij quidem grauiores, alij vt puta secundum demeritum vniuscuiusque. Et certe dum per tanta tormeta, quasi exhaultis totis viribus, iam prope medium locum vallis erat ventum, accidit repente, sub vnico instanti temporis, quibusdam nostrum expalatio ita dura, vt omnes pariter collisi, & prostrati iaceremus in extasi per vnam vel duas forsitan horas.

Et isto defectu vidit quilibet suo modo spiritualem visionem supermirabilem, & excedentem omne dictum, & scriptum.

Ego verò de visione mea nihil ausus sum scribere, vel loqui, quia & fratres singuli inhibuerunt, nisi de his, quae corporaliter intuebamur, & palsi fuimus.

Grauisimum singuli sustinuumus ictum per corporis loca diuersa, vnus in facie, alius in pectore, ad costas, in dorso, vel ad humerum, & mansit cuique signum percussurae nigerrimum, ad formam virilis manus humanae:

Mirabilis ictus

Ictum autem meum in colli ceruice tali ac tanta passione, vt putabam caput abscissum de corpore auolare: & hinc ad octodecimū annum mansit mihi in prima magnitudine signum: sed & vique nunc variato colore locus ille demonstrat plenissimè cicatricem, donec cum cadauere tota mutabitur in sepulchro: porro vbi nos ab extasi in his tenebris separauimus singuli per diuinam gratiam respirando, loquendo, palpando, erigendo nos ipsos mutua humanitate, vt potuimus, recolle gemus, & cohortabamur, cum subito nobis apparuit sub tenebroso lumine, vel potius fumosa caligine, locus ille spatiosus mediae vallis, continens antedictum horribile caput daemonis, plenus furore inextimabili, & iugi occupatus exercitatione innumerorum spirituum malignorum.

Hunc ergò locum ineptū cum vitare vellemus, in toto nequiuimus extremitatem eius, quocunque girantes, nullus nostrorum perfecte aspectu audebat respicere quae gerebantur ibidem, quia

Per quartam autem leucam (ductrice gratia) leuuis transeuntes, sustinimus tamen sub pedibus hominum cadauera mortuorum, propè vallis exitum rerum tentamina preciosarum.

Nunc itaque obsecro magno cordis affectu, hæc legentes & audientes ego, qui in illa hora quid erga me agebat misericordissimi Dei pietas ignorabam, vt velitis pro me, simul & mecum ex inuentis incimo collaudare ipsum Dominum, qui tunc de potestate tenebrarum illarum eripuit me indignum, & prout confido, à delictis iuuentutis me purgavit, quatenus de postea commissis, & committendis, mihi propitius fore dignetur, cum iam lenior sim effectus. Quoniam etsi ex tunc proposui mores corrigere, ex nunc statuo in melius emendare, per filium eius Iesum Christum Dominum nostrum.

Ad hoc addo breuiter, quòd non suderem hortari quenquam, me consulentem, vt spontaneè ingrederetur hanc vallem insuam, quamuis ego curiosus intraui. Venientes posthac ad proximas habitationes, necesse fuit vobis intendere ad recreandum corpora cibarijs, & balneis, & ad medendum vulneribus, & quassaturis, donec per aliquod tempus vnusquisque acciperet deliberationem super suo futuro.

CAPVT. 46.

De quibusdam alijs aduersandis per Insulam insulas.

VT modò procedam in tractatu. Scietis ad paucas inde dietas grandem insulam haberi gigantium, ad staturam altitudinis vincti quinque pedum nostrorum, de quibus ipse vidi nonnullos, sed extra terram eorum, & audiui esse intrinsecus quosdam triginta pedum, & vltra: hi operiuntur non vestibus, sed bestiarum pellibus vt cunque sibi appensus, comedentes animalium carnes crudas, & lac pro potu sorbentes, atque appetentes super omnem esum carnes humanas.

Istorum nos curauimus intrare insulam: nam & audiui quòd ad maris litus solent insidari nauigantibus, nauisque submergere, nisi interdum redimantur tribus aut quatuor per sortem hominibus sibi datis.

Versus Austrum hinc in mari Oceano, habetur inter alias insulas, vna, vbi crudelibus quibusdam mulieribus nascitur in oculis lapis rarus, & malus, quæ si per iram respexerint hominem, more Basilisci interficiunt solo visu.

Et vltra hanc insulam alia maior & populosior, vbi cura multi sunt vltus nobis insueti, vnum descibo.

Dum desponsauerit vir puellam, virginem, mandat hominem in compositum, velut ribaldum, qui sua idonea clauis per expertos super hoc diligentèr considerata, si reputatur idonea reseret & vestiget sub nocte vnica virginalem conclauem, pro mercede sibi tradita competentis. Et si postera nocte accedens sponsus ita non inuenerit, poterit, & confuevit hominem impetere ad mortis iudicium indeclinabile. Cuiusque huius moris discere voluissim causam, ac cepi responsum, pro certis temporibus apud eos, virginem habuisse in matricibus paruos serpentes, quibus nocebantur primum ad illas intrantes.

Ex hac, apparet Insula in qua inter alios vsus, peruersæ sunt matres contra naturam & scripturâ, cum pepererint contristantur, & dum proles meretur iocundantur, iactantes in magno igne cum coniugio & exultatione, dumque maritus ante vxorem decedit, patebit vxoris plena dilectio, si cum corpore mariti, quod rogo traditur se iactat cremandam, vt quia in isto seculo steterunt amoris vinculo colligati, non sint alio separati.

Nec tamen intelligunt illud seculum, nisi quod sibi consingunt terrestrem Paradisum. Puerum aut minoræ annis, trahet mater secum si placet, sed ætatis puer perfectæ, eligit pro proprio placito viuere superstes, aut mori iuxta parentes.

Hic etiam non succedunt Reges per generationem sed per electionem, vt assumatur non nobilior, aut fortior, sed morigeratior, & iustior, 30 ad minus annorum, nullam habens sobolem aut vxorem, seruaturque illic iusticiæ rigor in plena censura, in omnibus & contra omnes, etiam si forte fecerit ipse Rex, qui nec eximitur a traditis legibus pro concupiscentia vel contemptione quarumlibet personarum.

Veruntamen Rex si peccauerit non occiditur ob reuerentiam, sed quoddam sub pena mortis, publicè inhibetur, ne quispiam in Regione ei verbo vel vilo factò communicet, & quoniam sui loco alter rex constituitur, necesse est illi breui vita degere vel perpetuè exulare.

Cæterarum verò bestiarum & animalium licitè vescuntur carnibus pro victu, & lacte pro potu. Ibi quisq; vir licitè potest coniungi cuique mulieri, quantumcùnque propinquet, exceptis progenitoribus, patre & matre. Nam cohabitatio, & commixtio omnium virorum ad singulas mulieres apparet ibi communis, vnde mater natum parvulum suum, adicit pro sui placito cuiuscunq; viro, qui circa generationis tempus secum dormierit, nec valet vllus virorum esse certus de proprio generato, quem modum ex legem arbitror & turpeni.

Sicut ergò præfatus sum, multa mira videntur per Regiones Indorum, mira quidè nobis, sed illis assueta, quibus si nostra recitarentur assueta, audirent pro miris. Nam & dum quibusdam dixi aucas viuas apud nos nasci in arboribus, admirati sunt satis. In multis locis feminatur singulis annis sementum de ¶ Cothon, quod nos dicimus lanam arboream, exurgunt ei modica arbutula, vel potius arbutula de quibus talis lana habetur: est arbor Iuniperus, de cuius ligno deficcato, si carbones viuos sub proprijs cineribus tenueris diligenter opertos, igniti seruabuntur ad annum.

Est & genus Nucum incredibilis magnitudinis ad quantitatem magni capitis: & bestia vocata, oraffans, vel serfans, corpore in nostrorum altitudine caballorum, & collo in 20 longitudine cubitorum ad prospiciendum vltra domos & muros, quorum posteriora apparent vt hincniculi siue lerni.

¶ Vel Cothon.

Descriptio arboris Bombasum ferentis.

Nux Indica. Oraffans bestia.

Cameliones.

Genus est etiam Camelionum ad formam hynnulorum, qui semper patulo tendunt ore, vel nil manducantes. Viuunt de aere, quæ etiam ad suum libitum videntur sibi variare colorem, exceptis (vt dicitur) albo vel rubeo.

Maximi quoq; serpentes, inuicem qualitate, & genere differentes atq; colore.

Aliqui cristam in capite gerunt, quidam more hominum ad duos pedes erecti incedunt, & nonnulli qui dicuntur Reguli, venenum per ora distillare non cessant, nec non quam plures codrilli, de quibus aliquid in præcedentibus retuli: & apri in nostrorum magnitudine boum, spinosi ericij, in quantitate porcorum, leones albi in altitudine dextrariorum. Louheraus, seu Edouches per Indiam habentur, quod ferarum genus satis est maius nostris communibus equis, gerens in fronte tetri capitis tria longa cornua, ad formam pugionis, ex verâque parte sciendæntia, vt eis nonnunquam interficiant Elephantes.

Apri Ingentes. Leones albi. Louheraus.

Aliæ quoq; bestie crudeles vt vrsi cum capitibus ferè aprorum & habentes pedes senos, qui finduntur latis vngulis bis acutis, & cum caudis leonum siue pardorum.

Et quod vix credetur, mures pro quantitate, 10, aut 12, nostrorum & vespertiliones ad modum coruorum.

Sed & aucas in triplo maiores nostris, plumis induræ rubris, nisi quod in pectore & collo apparet nigredo.

Et breuiter tam ibi quàm alibi, habentur pisces, bestie, volucres, aut vermes diuersorum generum, aut specierum, de quibus hoc loco, vel inutilis, vel proluxa posset fieri narratio, quod nec illis qui nunquam propria exierunt, credibilis videretur.

De Bracmannorum &amp; aliorum Insula.

BRacmannorum Insula quasi ad medium Imperij cõsistit: Præsbyteri Ioannis, Hij licet Christiani non sunt, viuunt tamen naturali optimo more. Rudes enim & incomparati, simplices, & insciji omnis artis apparent. Non cupidi, superbi, inuidi, iracundi, gulosi, aut luxuriosi nec iurantes, fraudantes, aut mentiantur. Laborant corpore, sed intendunt animo implere quoad valent naturalem mandatum, hoc facias alijs quod tibi vis fieri credentes & adorantes omnium creatorem Deum, & sperantes ab ipso simpliciter Paradisum.

Sobrijs quoque sunt, quapropter & longo tempore viuunt: & si quis ab eorum moribus degenerat, proferbitur perpetuo sine mora, omnibus nulla posita differentia personarum, vnde & in iusto Dei iudicio, quod naturalem exercere iustitiam contendunt, Elementa eis naturaliter obleguntur, & raro eos tangit tempestas, aut fames, pestilentia aut gladius.

Magna riparia dicta Chene currit per Insulam, ministrans piscium & aquarum copiam: Istos olim Alexander rex Greecorum debellare cupiens, misit eis literas comminationis, cui inter cetera notabilia remandauerunt, nihil se habere curiosi, quod Rex tantus deberet concupiscere, nihilque ita se timere perdituros sicut pacem bonam, quam hæcenus habuerunt incõcussam: si que diuino nutu est actum vt Rex truculentus ad alia se verteret, atque in breui postmodum eaderet, quia dissipat Dominus eos, qui bella volunt, & istis manet pax multa diligentijs eam.

Pytae Insula breuis continet paucos & breues habitatores, Pygmaeis modico longiores, qui decoris vultibus nullo vnquam cibo vescentes, specialis pomi quod secum portant sustentant odore, quo si carerent ad parum, color in vultu marcesceret, & die tertia vita periret.

Discretio & rationalitas ijs adeo est modica, nec enim habent laborare nisi pro vestitu, quem sibi circa arbusta colligunt: Et conficit vniuersisq; pro 12. annis vite suæ.

Vltra hanc Insulam siluestres, & fortes habentur homines, sed bestiales, vestiti per totum corpus proprijs capillis & pilis, exceptis palmis, & faciebus, qui videntur penitus gubernatione & polita carere: venantur carnes per filias, & discurrunt piscantes in aquis, omnia cruda vorantes.

Hinc ad terræ metas manat suuius Briemer latitudinis duarum leucarum, & semis, quem nos transire nequiuimus, nec ausi sumus. Quoniam illo transmissio instant deserta 15. aut plurius dierum inhabitata nõ temporis (prout audieramus) diuersis & nobis ignotis generibus bestiarum, serpentum, draconum, gryphiu, aspidum, dyrsarum, & colebrorũ in multitudine tanta, vt centum millia armatorum simul pertingere vsque ad arbores, quæ ibi dicuntur solis & lunæ, vix possent. Attamen suo tempore Alexander magnus scribitur pertigisse, & quedam ab arboribus ficticia suscepisse responsa.

Circa has arbores excolitur Balsamum, cuius liquoris comparatio nusquam scitur contineri sub cælo. Nam ibidem homines, de istarum arborum fructibus & Balsamo vrentes dicuntur illorum virtute quadringentis aut pluribus annis viuere.

Peruenit autem & Dux Danus Ogerus, ac manducauit de illis, vnde & nonnulli præ sensus soliditate vel fidei lenitate putant ipsum adhuc alibi viuere in terris. Ego autem quia tantum pro dilatanda Christianitate laborauit arbitror magis, eum regnare cum Christo in cælis.

Versus orientales partes Indorum consistit magna regio Taprobane exuberans optimis terrenorum bonorum, in quam nauigio intrantibus in octo vel circa diebus per aquam satis tenuem, haud profundam, ibi, sicut & in alijs multis Insulis, rex non nascitur sed eligitur per partes terræ: & est hæc vna de quindecim nominatis Regionibus conquisitionis Ogeri. Ista, cum modicum declinet à circulo terræ sub Equatore, patitur in anno duas æstates, & duas hyemes, si tamen hyems aliqua dici debeat, & non magis æstas, quia nullus hic dies anni caret fructu, flore, germine.

Habitatores sunt discreti, & honesti, vnde & mercatores, de remotis partibus libenter cum ijs communicant: & sparsim per regionem habitant plurimi diuites Christiani.

Hij iunguntur due insule (quas nos vocamus, Orilla, & Argita,) quanquam illa lingua aliter nominentur. In quarum prima sunt multe minere auri, in secunda argenti, & propter quandam crassitudinem aëris continuam, per pauca apparent sydera, præter vnum quod dicunt Canopũ, quod æstimo planetam Venerem. Et quod mirum est valde, de omni lunatione ijs apparet nisi 2. quarta. Cuius rei probabilis ratio effugit etiam Astronomos valde peritos. Atque per has Insulas quoddam rubrum mare à mari Oceano segregatur.

Itaq; in Orilla in locis multis effoditur, colligitur, & conflatur optimum auri metallum, per viros, mulieres, & paruulos in hoc instructos, sed & in nonnullis ibi montibus monstrantur congrega-congregationes bestiarum in quantitate nostrorum catulorum, in formicarum forma ac natura totali: qui pro suis viribus effodiunt, purificant, & colligunt cum intenta occupatione aurum minutias, eas reponentes, & repositas retrahentes de cavernis & specubus in cavernas & specus. Et in conferuando sunt diligentes & acres, vt nemo audeat de facili propinquare, nisi quod interdum ab illis paufantibus, seu ab astu se occultantibus, aliqui non sine periculo in dromedaris & veredarijs rapiunt, vel furantur.

Solet etiam ab eis obtineri, quod excoigato ingenio super equam quæ nuper factum & diderit, imponentes homines duas de ligno cistulas seu cophinos nouos, vacuos, & apertos à lateribus dependentes propè terram: hanc famelicam dimittunt vt se pascat ad herbas in montem: Quam formicæ videntes solam, salientes & iocantes, colludunt ad eam & ad eius con fines pro nouitate: & quoniam eis est naturale, vt circa se omne vacuum implere conentur comportant certatim aurum suum in vasculis suis mundis. Cumque homines à remotis tempus obserauerint, emittunt pullum equæ vt videat matrem, cuius aspectu iam diu stetit priuatus, ad cuius hinnitum protinus equa reuertitur onusta de auro. Hys ergo & similibus modis homines aurum diripiunt à formicis.

CAPVT. 48.

A Finibus Imperij Indiz recta linea in orientem nihil est habitatum vel habitabile, propter arripium, & montium altitudinem, & asperitatem, & propter aeris inter Alpes diueritatem: nam in multis locis, licet quandoque aer sit serenus, nunc sit spissus nunc fumosus, vel venenosus, & frequenter die medio tenebrosus. Durantque aut potius aggrauescunt huiusmodi difficultates, vsque ad illum amzissimum Paradisi locum, quem protoplauti per inobedientiam sibi & posteris perdidisse noscuntur, quod spacium si metiri posset, est multarum vtiq; diatarum. Quia iam non vltius processi, nec procedere quiuui, pauca duntaxat de illo loco referam verisimilia, quæ didici per auditum.

Paradisus terrestris dicitur locus spaciosus ad amplitudinem quasi quinque: Inularum nostrarum, Angliz, Nonnanniz, Hiberniz, Scotiz, & v. regiz, aut forsan latius plurium. Cuius situs est pertingens in altitudine ad aeris supremam superficiem, eò quod illic terra vel terre orbis sit multum spissior quam alibi per modum excentricum à vero centro mundi, nec valet hoc deinde ab aliquo experto refelli, scriptura veritatis clamante, quòd ibi sit fons irrigans vniuersam superficiem terræ: aquæ enim est natura semper fluere ad ima.

Exeunt autem ab illo fonte versus nostri partes hemispherij, hoc est nobis de illo loco in occidentem quatuor flumina, Pyion, Gyon, Tygris, & Euphrates, ab ista dimidia parte terræ circa Equatoris circulum terræ influentes, quapropter & merito credendum videtur, exire de eodem fonte & alia quatuor flumina irrigantia terram oppositam, quæ est circa alteram dimidiam partem circuli Equatoris, quamuis nos eorum fluminum loca, virtutes, & nomina ignoramus, quòd homines habitant ab alia parte Equinoctij.

Hoc tamen volo sciri pro verò & audiu, illic terræ faciem inhabitatam in maxima multitudine ciuitatum, vrbium, & regionum, quoniam & eorum institores Indiam frequentant, & nunciant sibi inuicem gentes & principes per literas, ac alijs modis destinare sunt visi.

Vnus nostrorum fluuiorum Pylon currit per Indiam, & per eius deserta quandoque sub terra, sed sæpius supra, qui & Ganges illic appellatus est, ab illo vltimo Paganitatis rege, quem Dux Ogerus deuictum cum baptizari renueret in ipso flumine proiectum submersit.

Ad litus huius reperiuntur multi lapides præciositatis immensæ & metalli grana carissimi, nec non & auri mineræ, multumque descendit in eo natans lignum Aloes ex Paradiso, quod rebus miræ virtutis inserit Salomon in Canticis.

Hinc secundus fluuius Gyon, currit per Aethiopiam, vnde dum venit in Ægyptû, accipit nomen Nilus. Tertius Tygris veniens per Assyriam influit maiorem Armeniam & Persiam: tandemque fluuij singuli per loca singula se iactant in mare per quòd desflunt vsq; ad Nador, id est, ad oppositum diametrum paradisi: Ideoq; merito estimantur omnes vniuerso orbe æque dulces originè capere, à supradicto paradisi fonte, quamuis secundum distatiam maiorem vel minorem, & secundum naturas rerum per quas meant diuersos habere inueniuntur sapores, atq; virtutes.

Porrò ipsum Paradisi locum audiui à tribus plagis, orientali, meridionali, & septentrionali, inaccessibilem tam hominibus quam bestijs, eo quòd apparet ripis perpendiculariter abscissa, tanquam inestimabilis altitudinis. Et ab occidente idest nostra parte tanquam super omnium humanorum intuitum rogas ardès, qui in scripturis rumphea flamma appellatur, vt nulli creature terrene ascensus in eò credatur nisi quibusdam volatilibus, prout decreuit iusti iudicij Deus.

In reuertendo de Cassan, & Riboth, & de diuinit Epulone.

EXhinc de illis quæ in reuertendo vidi scribo cursim pauca, ne modum excedere videatur Emateria, Reuertebat itaque quasi per Aquilonare latus Imperij Presbyteri Ioannis, & nunc terræ, non in mari nos commendantes, transiuimus Deo Ductore, multas Insulas in multis diartis, & peruenimus ad regionem magnam Cassan: hæc cum sit vna de quindecim habens longitudinem diartarum 60. & latitudinem propè 30. posset esse nominatio omnibus ibi circa prouin-cijs, si a nostris frequentaretur.

Via per quam Mandeuillus rediit in Angliam.

Cassan.

Notandum. Cassan (secundum Odericum) est melior prouincia de mundo, vbi strictior est, habet diartas 50. vbi longior 60. & est vna de 12. prouincijs Imperij Grand Can. est ista populosa, distincta ciuitatibus, vt quisque à quacunq; plaga de vna exeat ciuitate nouerit aliam in media diarta propinquam. Teneque istam regionem Cassan rex diues & potens, pro parte de Imperio Presbyteri Ioannis, & pro parte de Imperio Grand Can.

De ista in reuerfione nostra venimus ad regnum Riboth, quod similiter est vnum de quindecim, latum, & speciosum, in quo de multis bonis, habetur plena copia. Hoc tenetur in toto de Imperio Tartarorum.

Riboth.

Vna est ibi inter & super omnes ciuitas Sacerdotalis, & Regia, in qua Rex habet suum mag-nificum palatium, & summus idolorum Pontifex quem Labassi appellant, cui omnes Regni obediunt, & populi sicut Domino Papæ nos Christiani, quoniam & iubet, & benedicit, ac con-fert sacerdotibus beneficia idolorum.

Labassi, summus idolorum pontifex.

Ciuitatis vndique muri sunt compacti albis & nigris lapidibus conuadratis ad modum scakarij, omnesque contractæ simili pavimento sunt strætæ, Tanta est illic reuerentia sacrifi-cium vt si quis vel in modica quantitate, sanguinem hominis, seu immolatiæ pecudis fu-disse deprehensus fuerit, nequaquam iudicium mortis euadet. Et inter innumeras superstitiones est illic vna talis.

Hæres cuius pater defungitur, si alicuius vult esse reputationis, mandat cognatos, amicos, Relligiosos, & sacerdotes pro posse, qui certo Die conuenientes sub magno Symphoniz sesto, comportant defuncti castrauer, in montis sublime cacumen. Ibi accedens dignior Præla-torum, funeris caput abscondit, tradens hæredi in aureo disco decantanti sub deuotione suas orationes cum suis in propria lingua. Atque interim aues regionis rapaces, & inimundæ, vt corui, vultures, & aquilæ, quæ pro consuetudine optimè morem norunt, aduolant magno numero in aère: Tuncque Relligiosi cum sacerdotibus detruncant corpus in frustra velut in macello, projicientes pecias in altum auibus, ac decantantes certam ad hoc compositam orationem, tanquam si nostri sacerdotes cantarent. Subuenite sancti Dei. &c.

Et habet eorum oratio, hunc sensum in sua lingua. Respice quam iustus & sanctus exiit homo iste, quem Angeli Dei coueniunt accipere & in Paradisum deferre. Taliq; diabolico errore delusi, putant filius, & amici, quod defunctus sit in Paradisum translatus, viuat illic sem-piternè beatus, quoniam, vbi plures conuenerent volucrum, ibi maiorem lætantur & iactant fuisse numerum Angelorum.

Hinc deinde reuertentes, cum choris, & resonantia Musicorum, filius paratum præstat omnibus conuiuium, in cuius fine pro extremo serculo, tradit singulis particulam, de patris capite summa cum deupione. Hanc etiam capitis caluariam filius facit postmodum debite fornari & poliri sibi pro cypho, in quo bibit in conuiuijs, ob recordationem amantissimi patris.

Ab hoc Regno decem dietis per potestatem Imperatoris Grand Can, inuenitur Insula delectabilis, & speciosa satis: cuius Rex est præpotens in gloria, & in diuitijs superabundans, & de multis quæ illic geruntur admirandis vnum recito solum.

Diues Epulo.

Quòd est ibi homo quidam ditissimus nullius dignitatis nomine honoratus, sed bysso, ac serico adornatus, & splendide omni tempore epulatus: non ergo vult dici princeps, Dux, comes, miles, aut huiusmodi, licet superioritatem habeat super marchiones aliquos & barones.

Eius possessionis valor æstimatur in anno 30. cum an de assinarijs bladi, & risi, nec quærni nisi delitiosè viuere in isto seculo, vt cum diuite Epulone sepeliatur in inferno. Cum etiam sibi derelictus sit, iste viuendi modus a retrogentoribus, eum & ipse posteris derelinquet. Hic tanquam Imperiali residet palatio, cuius muri ambitus ad tractum leucæ tenditur, continens arbutta, vinea, riuulos, fontes & stagna, aulas, & cubicia auro strata depictaque mirè, & sculptura artificiosè, vltra quam vales explicare, & inter omnia ad medium palatium in cello vertice atrium amœnum, valdè tamen modico, sed cunctis præciosius, ædificio, quasi ad scema nostrarum Ecclesiarum, cum turribus, pilarijs, & colummis, in quibus nihil prominet indignus auro. Nunquam vel rarè hic exit de suo palatio cum solis pulchris quos sibi conuocat & conuariat paruis pueris & puellis, non excedentibus 16. annos ætatis. Tendit dum libet pedibus, quandoque veftatur equo, interdum ducitur vehiculo, nonnunquam vult ferri gestatorio, vel cerè puellaribus brachijs, & visitat sæpissimè præfatum præciosius ædificium: atque hijs & modis alijs excogitat delectare visum pulchris, auditum suauibus, olfactum redolentibus, tactum lenibus, & gustum pascere delicatis. Electas semper habet præsto 50. puellas ei, & de proximo exquisitissimè ministrantes tam ad mensam quàm ad cubiculum, & ad omne libitum.

De compositione huius tractatus in nobili cimitate Leodiensi.

renouabatur antiqua notitia, quam quondam habueramus in Cayr Aegypti apud Melech Mā-dibron Soldanum, prout supra tetigi in 7. capitulo libri.

Qui cum in me experientiam artis suæ excellenter monstret, adhortabatur ac præcabatur instanter, vt de hijs quæ videram tempore peregrinationis, & itinerationis meæ per mundum, aliquid digererem in scriptis ad legendum, & audiendum pro vtilitate.

Sicque tandem illius monitu & adiutorio, compositus est iste tractatus, de quo certè nil scribere proposueram, donec saltem ad partes proprias in Angliā peruenissem. Et credo præmissa circa me, per prouidentiam & gratiam Dei contigisse, quoniam à tempore quo recessi, duo reges nostri ¶ Angliæ, & Franciæ, non cessauerunt inuicem exercere destructiones, deprædatio-nes, insidias, & interfectiones, inter quas, nisi à Domino custoditus, non transissem sine morte, vel mortis periculo, & sine criminum grandi cumulo. Et ecce nunc egressionis meæ anno 33. constitutus in Leodij ciuitate, quæ à mari Angliæ distat solum per duas diætas, audio dictas Do-minorum inimicitias, per gratiam Dei consopitas: quapropter & spero, ac propono de reliquo

Priores Anthropophagos, quos ad Septentrionem esse diximus decem dierum itinere supra Borysthenem amneni, ossibus humanorum caput bibere, cutibûsque cum capillo pro mantelibus ante pectora uti, Ifigonus Nicænsis, Idem in Albania gigni quosdam glauca oculorum acie, à puenitia statim canos, qui noctu plulquam interdiu cernant. Idem itinere dierum x. supra Borysthenem, Saurognatas tertio die cibum capere semper. Crates Pergamenus in Hellesponto circa Parium, genus hominum fuisse tradit, quos Ophiogenes vocat serpentum ictus contactu leuare solitos, & manu imposita venena extrahere corpori. Varro etiam nunc esse paucos ibi, quorum saluæ contra ictus serpentum medeantur. Similis & in Africa gens Pŷllorum fuit, ut Agatharchides scribit, à Pŷllo rege dicta, cuius sepulchrum in parte Syrtium maiorum est. Horum corpori ingenitum fuit virus exitiale serpentibus, ut cuius odore sopirent eas. Mos verò, liberos genitos protinus obijciendi sæuissimis earum, eoque genere pudicitiam coniugum experiendi, non profugientibus adulterino sanguine natos serpentibus. Hæc gens ipsa quidem prope intermitione sublata est à Nasamonibus, qui nunc eas tenent sedes: genus tamen hominû ex his qui profugerant, aut cum pugnatum est, abfuerant, hodiè que remanent in paucis. Simile & in Italia Marfotum gentis durat, quos à Circes filio ortos ferunt, & ideo in esse ijs vim naturalem eam. Et tamen omnibus hominibus contra serpentes inest venenum: ferunt que ictus saluæ, ut feruentis aquæ contactu fugere. Quod si in fauces penetrauerit, etiam mori: idq; maxime humani ieiuni oris, Supra Nasamonas confinèsq; illis Machlyas, Androginos esse vtriuŷque naturæ, inter se vicibus coeuntes, Calliphanes tradit. In eadem Africa familias quædam effascinantium, Ifigonus & Nymphodorus tradunt quarum laudatione intereat probata, areŷcant arbores, emoriantur infantes. Esse eiuŷdem generis in Triballis & Illyrijs, adijcit Ifigonus, qui visu quoque effascinant, interimantque quos diutius intueatur. In ijs præcipue oculis: quod eorum malum facilius sentire puberes, Notabilis esse quod pupillas binas in oculis singulis habeant, Huius generis & feminas in Sythia, quæ vocantur Bithyz, prodit Apollonides. Philarchus & in Ponto Thibiorum genus, multoque alios eiuŷdem naturæ: quorum notas tradit in altero oculo geminâ pupillam, in altero equi effigiem. Eiuŷdem prætereà non posse mergi, ne veste quidem de grauat. Haud dissimile ijs genus Pharnacum in Æthiopia prodidit Damon, quorum sudor tabem cõtactis corporibus afferat. Fœminas quidem omnes vbique visu nocere, quæ duplices pupillas habeant, Cicero quoque apud nos autor est. Ad eod nature, cum ferarum morem vescendi humanis visceribus in hominè genuisset, gignere etiam in toto corpore & in quorundam oculis quoque venena placuit: ne quid vsquâ mali esset, quod in hominè non esset. Haud procul vrbe Roma in Faliscorum agro familiæ sunt paucæ, quæ vocantur Hirpie: quæ sacrificio annuo, quod fit ad montem Soractem Apollini, super ambustam ligni struem ambulantes non aduruntur. Et ob id perpetuo senatusconsulto militiæ omniumq; aliorû numerum vacationem habent. Quorundam corpore partes nascuntur ad aliqua mirabile sicut Pyrrho regi pollex in dextero pede: cuius tactu lienosis medebatur. Maxima in India gignuntur animalia, Indicio sunt canes grandiores cæteris. Arbores quidem tantæ proceritatis traduntur, ut sagittis superari nequeant. Hæc facit vberitas soli, temperies cœli, aquarum abundantia (si libeat credere) ut sub vna ficu turmæ condantur equitum. Arundines verò tantæ proceritatis, ut singula internodia aluco nauigabili ternos interdum homines ferant, Multos ibi quina cubita constat longitudine excedere: non expuere: non capitis, aut dentium, aut oculorum villo dolore affici, raro aliarum corporis partium: tam moderato Solis vapore durari. In monte cui nomen est Milo, homines esse auerfis plantis, octonos digitos in singulis pedibus habentes, autor est Megasthenes. In multis autem montibus genus hominum capitibus caninis, ferarum pellibus velari, pro voce latratum edere, vnguibus auctum venatu & aucupio vesci. Horum supra centum viginti millia fuisse prodente se, Ctesias scribit: & in quadam gente Indiæ, feminas semel in vita parere, genitofque confestim canescere. barie, putting many thousands of them to the sword, and he tooke their Citie which was very mightie, seated vpon the sea, which is called Ceur in their language.

The voyage of Macham an Englishman, wherein he first of any man, discovered the Iland of Madera, recorded verbatim in the Portugall historie, written by Anthonio Galuano.

Macham first discovered by one Macham an Englishman.

Macham made there a chappell, naming it Iesus Chappell.

In the yeere 1344. King Peter the fourth of that name, reigning in Arragon, the Chronicles of his age, write, that about this time the Iland of Madera, standing in 32. degrees, was discovered by an Englishman, which was named Macham, who sayling out of England into Spaine, with a woman that he had stolne, arrived by tempest in that Iland, and did cast anker in that haven or baye, which now is called Machico, after the name of Macham. And because his lover was sea sicke, he went on land with some of his companie, and the shippe with a good winde made faste away, and the woman died for thought. Macham, which loued her deere, built a chappell, or heremitage, to bury her in, calling it by the name of Iesus, and caused his name and hers to be written or grauen vpon the stone of her tombe, and the occasion of their arrivall there: And after ward he obtained a boate made of one tree, (for there be trees of a great compasse about) and went to sea in it, with those men that he had, and were left behinde with him, and came vpon the coast of Africke, without saile or oare. And the Spoones which sawe it, tooke it to be a maruiculous thing, and presented him vnto the King of that Countrey for a wonder, and that king also sent him and his companions for a miracle vnto the King of Castile.

In the yeere 1395. King Henry the third of that name, reigning in Castile, by the information which Macham gaue of this Iland, and also the shippe of his companie, moued many of France and Castile to goe and to discover it, and also the great Canaria, &c.

In the yeere 1417. King Iohn the second, reigning in Castile, and his mother Ladie Katherine being Regent, one Monsieur Ruben of Bracamont, which was Admirall of France, demanding the conquest of the Ilands of the Canaries, with the title of King, for a kinsman of his named Monsieur Iohn Betancourt, after that the Quene had giuen him them, and holpen him, he departed from Shupl with a good armie. And they affirme also, that the principall cause which moued him to this, was to discover the Iland of Madera, which Macham had founde, &c. ibidem pag. 2. of Anthonio Galuano.

The Ambassage which King Iohn the second, King of Portugall sent to Edward the fourth King of England, which in part was to stay one

John Tintam, and one William Fabian Englishmen, from proceeding in a voyage which they were preparing for Ginnee, 1481. Taken out of the Booke of the workes of Garcias de Refende, which inuiceth of the life and acts of Don Iohn the second King of Portugall. Chap. 33.

Afterwards the king sent as ambassadours from the towne of Montemaior to king Edward the fourth of England, Ruy de Soufa, a principall person, and a man of great wisdom, and estimation, and in whome the King reposed great trust, with Doctor Iohn Deluas, and Ferdinand de Pina, as Secretarie. And they made their voyage by sea very honorably, being very well accompanied. These men were sent on the behaile of their King, to confirme the auncient leagues with England, wherein it was conditioned, that the new king of the one and of the other kingdome, should be bound to send to confirme the olde leagues. And likewise they had order to shew and make him acquainted with the title which the King held in the seigneurie of Ginnee, to the intent that after the King of England had seene the same, he should give charge through all his kingdome, that no man should arme of six footed ships to Ginnee: and also to request him, that it would please him to give commandement to dissolue a certaine flecte, which one Iohn Tintam, and one William Fabian, Englishmen, were making, by commandement of the Duke of Medina Sidonia, to goe to the aforesaid partes of Ginnee. With which ambassage the King of England seemed to be very well pleased, and they were receiued of him with very great honour, and he condescended vnto all that the Ambassadours required of him, at whose hands they receaued authenticall writings of the diligence which they had perfourmed, with publication thereof by the Herolds: and also ppositors of those confirmations which were necessarie. And hauing dispatched all things well, and with the Kings good will, they returned home into their countrey.

The first cause of this ambassage. The second cause.

The third cause.

The manner of the entring of Solyman the Great Turke, with his armie into Aleppo in Syria, marching toward Persia against the Great Sophie, the fourth day of Nouember, 1553, noted by Master Anthonie Jenkinson, present at that time.

Here marched before the Grand Signior, other wise called the Great Turke, 6000. Esquiers, other wise called light horsemen very braue, clothed all in scarlet.

After, marched 10000. men, called Nortans, which be tributaries to the Great Turke, clothed all in yellow veluet, and hats of the same, of the Tartarie fashion, two foot long, with a great robe of the same colour about their foreheads, richly decked, with their bowes in their hands, of the Turkish fashion.

After them marched foure Captaines, men of armes, called in Turkish Saniaques, clothed all foure in crimlon veluet, euery one hauing vnder his banner twelue thousand men of armes well armed with their morions vpon their heads, marching in good order, with a short weapon by their sides, called in their language, Simiterro.

After came 16000. Janizaries, called the slaves of the Grand Signior, all afoote, euery one hauing his barquebuthe, who be his gard, al clothed in violet silke, and apparelled vpon their heads with a strange forme, called Cuocullucia, fashioned in this sort: the entring in of the forehead is like a skull made of white veluet, & hath a traine hanging downe behinde, in manner of a French hood, of the same colour, and vpon the forehead of the saide skull, just in the midwes of his forehead there is standing bolt vpright like a trunk of a foot long of silver, garnished most richly with Goldsmiths worke, and precious stones, and in the toppe of the saide trunk, a great bush of feathers, which waucth by and downe most hauely when he marcheth.

After this, there came 1000. pages of honour, all clothed in cloch of golde, the halfe of them carrying barquebuthes, and the other halfe Turkish bowes, with their stulles of arrows, marching in good order.

Then came three men of armes well armed, and vpon their harnesse coats of the Turkes fashion, of Libard skimes, and murions vpon their heads, their speares charged, and at the ende of their staffe bard by the head of the speere, a horse talle dier in a bloody colour, which is their ensigne: they be the challengers for the Turkes olde person.

After them came seven pages of honour in cloch of silver, vpon seven white bowes, which horse les were covered with cloath of siluer, all embroidered and garnished with pretious stones, emeralds, diamonds, and rubies most richly.

After them also came six more pages of honour, clothed in cloath of golde, every one having his bowe in his hand, and his falchion of the Turkes fashion by his side.

Immediately after them came the Great Turke himselfe with great pompe, & magnificence, being in his countenance and gesture a wonderfull Spectacle, having onely on each side of his person one page clothed with cloath of golde: he himselfe was mounted upon a goodly white horse, adorned with a robe of cloath of golde, embroidered most richly with the most pretious stones, and upon his head a goodly white turke, containing in length by estimation fifteene yards, which was of silke and linnen wouen together, resembling something Callicut cloath, but is much more fine and rich, and in the toppe of his crowne, a little pinnach of white ostrich feathers, and his horse most richly appavelled in all points correspondent to the same.

After him followed six goodly young Ladies, mounted upon fine white hackneys, clothed in cloath of siluer, which were of the fashion of mens garments, embroidered very richly with pearle, and pretious stones, and had upon their heaves caps of Goldsmiths worke, having great shackets of beare hanging out on each side, dyed as red as blood, and the nailles of their fingers dyed of the same colour, every of them having two eunuches on each side, and little bowes in their hands, after an Antike fashion.

After marched the Great Bascha, cheefe conductor of the whole armie, clothed with a robe of Dolliman crimlon, and upon the same another short garment very rich, and about him sixtie Janizaries afoote, of his owne gard, all clothed in crimlon veluet, being armed as the Great Turkes owne Janizaries.

Then after ensued three other Baschas, with slaues about them, being afoote, to the number of thre thousand men.

After came a companie of horsemen very haue, and in all pointes well armed, to the number of foure thousand.

All this aforesaid armie, most pompous to behold, which was in number foure score, and eights thousand men, encamped about the citie of Aleppo, and the Grand Signior himselfe was lodged within the towne, in a goodly castle, situated upon a high mountaine: at the foot whereof runneth a goodly riuer, which is a branch of that famous riuer Euphrates.

The rest of his armie passed ouer the mountaines of Armenia, called now the mountaines of Camarpe, which are foure daies tourney from Aleppo, appointed there to carie the coming of the Grand Signior, with the rest of his armie, intending to march into Persia, to giue battell to the Great Sophie. So the whole armie of the Grand Signior, containing as well those that went by the mountaines, as also those that came to Aleppo, in companie with him, with horsemen and footemen, and the conductors of the camels and victuals, were the number of 300000 men.

The camels which caried munition and victuals, for the said armie, were in number 200000.

A note of the presents that were giuen at the same time in Aleppo, to the Grand Signior, and the names of the presentors.

First the Bascha of Aleppo, which is as a Viceroy, presented 100. garments of cloath of golde, and 25. horses.

The Bascha of Damasco, presented 100. garments of cloath of golde, and twentie horses, with diuers sortes of commodities, in great quantitie.

The Bascha of Amante, presented 100. garments of cloath of gold, 20. horses, and a cup of gold, with two thousand buckets.

The Saniaque of Tripolis, presented six camels, charged all with silkes, 20. horses, and a wale cloath of golde, garnished with pretious stones, esteemed worth two hundred buckets.

The Consul of the companie of the Venetians in Tripolis, came to kisse the Grand Signiors hand, and presented him a great bagen of golde, and therein 4000. buckets Venetians.

A voyage made out of England into Guinea in Affricke, at the charges of certaine Merchants aduenturers of the Citie of London, in the yeere of our Lorde. 1553.

Being desired by certaine of my friends, to make some mention of this voyage, that some memorie thereof might remaine to our posteritie, if either iniquitie of time, consuming all things, or ignorance creeping in by barbarousnes and contempt of knowledge, should hereafter bury in obliuion so worthy attempts, so much the greater to be esteemed, as before neuer enterprised by English men, or at the least so frequented, as at this present they are, and may be, to the great commoditie of our Merchants, if the same be not hindered by the ambition of such, as for the conquering of 40. or 50. miles here and there, and erecting of certaine fortresses, thinke to be Lords of halfe the world, enuying that other should enioy the commodities, which they themselves can not wholly possesse. And although such as haue bene at charges in the discouering & conquering of such landes, ought by good reason to haue certaine priuiledges, preeminences, and tributes for the same, yet (to speake vnder correction) it may seeme somewhat rigorous, and against good reason and conscience, or rather against the charitie that ought to be among Christian men, that such as violently invade the dominions of other, should not permit other friendly to vse the trade of merchandise in places neerer, or selborne frequented of them, wherby their trade is not hindered in such places, wher they themselves haue at their owne election appointed the market of their traffike. But forasmuch as at this present, it is not my intent to accuse or defend, approoue or improoue

proove, I will cease to speake any further herof, and proceede to the description of the first voyage, as briefly and faithfully as I was advertised of the same, by the information of such credible persons, as made diligent inquisition to knowe the truth hereof, as much as shall be requisite, omitting to speake of many particular thinges, not greatly necessarie to be knowen: which neuerthelesse, with also the exact course of the navigation, shall be more fully declared in the second voyage. And if herein favour or friendship shall perhaps cause some to thinke that some haue bene sharply touched, let them lay apart favour and friendship, and give place to truth, that honest men may receive praise for well doing, and leude persons reproch, as the iust displeasur of their euil deserts, whereby others may be deterred to doe the like, and vertuous men encouraged to proceede in honest attempts.

But that these voyages may be more plainely vnderstoode of all men, I haue thought good for this purpose, before I intreat hereof, to make a briefe description of Affrica, being that great parte of the worlde, on whose West side beginneth the coast of Guinea at Cabo Verde, about twelue degrees in latitude, on this side the Equinoctiall line, and two degrees in longitude from the measuring line, so running from the North to the South, and by East in some places, within foure, four, and three degrees and a halfe into the Equinoctiall, and so forth in manner directly East and by North, for the space of thirtie six degrees, or there about, in longitude from the West to the East, as shall more plainely appeare in the description of the second voyage.

A briefe description of Affrike, gathered by Richard Eden.

Affrica the lesse are these kingdomes: the kingdome of Tunes and Constantina, which is at this day vnder Tunes, and also the region of Bugia, Tripoli, and Ezzah. This part of Affrike is very barren by reason of the great deserts, as the deserts of Numidia and Barcha. The principall portes of the kingdome of Tunes, are these: Goletta, Bizerta, Potofarnia, Boua, and Stora. The chiefe cities of Tunes, are Constantina, and Boua, with diuers other. Under this kingdome are many Ilands, as Zerbi, Lampadola, Pantalarea, Limoso, Beit, Camelara, and Malta, where at this present is the great Master of the Rhodes. Under the South of this kingdome, are the great deserts of Lybia. All the nations in this Affrica the lesse, are of the secte of Mahomet, and a rusticall people, liuing frattered in villages. The best of this part of Affrike, is Barbaria, lying on the coast of the sea Mediterraneum.

Mauritania (now called Barbaria) is diuided into two partes, as Mauritania Tingitana, and Cesarientis. Mauritania Tingitana, is now called the kingdome of Fes, and the kingdome of Marrocco. The principall cite of Fes, is called Fessa: and the chiefe cite of Marrocco, is named Marrocco.

Mauritania Cesarientis, is at this day called the kingdome of Tremisen, with also the cite called Tremisen or Telenin. This region is full of deserts, and reacheth to the sea Mediterraneum, to the cite of Oram, with the port of Massaquiber. The kingdome of Fes reacheth vnto the Ocean sea, from the West to the cite of Argilla: and the port of the sayde kingdome is called Sala.

The kingdome of Marrocco is also extended aboue the Ocean sea, vnto the cite of Azamor and Azafi, which are aboue the Ocean sea, toward the West of the saide kingdome. In Mauritania Tingitana (that is to say, in the two kingdomes of Fes, and Marrocco) are in the sea, the Ilands of Canarie, called in olde time, the fortunate Ilandes. Toward the South of this region, is the kingdome of Guinea, with Senega, Ialoso, Gamba, and many other regions of the blacke Moores, called Aethiopiens, or Negros, all which are watered with the riuer Negro, called in olde time Niger. In the said regions are no cities, but onely certaine lowe cottages made of boughes of trees, plattered with chauke, and couered with strawe. In these regions are also very great deserts.

The kingdome of Marrocco hath vnder it these seuen kingdomes: Hea, Sus, Guzula, the territorye of Marrocco, Duchala, Hazchora, and Telde. The kingdome of Fes hath as many: as Fes, Temesne, Azgar, Elabath, Errifi, Gare, and Elcauz. The kingdome of Tremisen hath these regions: Tremisen, Tenez, and Elgazaet, all which are Machometistes. But all the regions of Guinea are pure Gentiles, and idolatrous, without profession of any religion, or other knowledge of God, then by the lawe of nature.

Africa

Africa the great, is one of the three partes of the world, knowne in olde time, and severed from Asia, on the East by the riuer Nilus, on the West, from Europe by the pillars of Hercules. The better part is now called Barbarie, and the people Hooyes. The inner part is called Libya and Ethiopia. Africke the lesse, is in this wise bounded: On the West it hath Mauritania: On the East Cyrenaica: On the North, the sea called Medicerraneum. In this countrey was the noble cite of Carthage.

In the East side of Africke, beneath the red sea, dwelleth the great and mightie Emperour and Christian King the most John, well knowne to the Portugals in their voyages to Calicut. His dominions reach very farre on every side: and hath vnder him many other kinges both Christian and heathen that pay him tribute. This mightie prince is called Dauid the Emperour of Ethiopia. Some write that the king of Portugall sendeth him yeerly eight shippes laden with marchandise. His kingdom consisteth with the red sea, and reacheth farre into Africke toward Egypt and Barbarie. Southward it consisteth with the sea toward the Cape de Bona Speranza: and on the other side with the sea of sand, called Mare de Sabione, a very dangerous sea, lying betwene the great cite of Alcayer, or Cairo in Egypt, and the countrey of Ethiopia: In the which way are many inhabitable deserts, continuing for the space of five dayes journey. And they affirme, that if the said Christian Emperour were not hindered by those deserts (in the which is great lacke of victuals, and especially of water) he would of now haue invaded the kingdom of Egypt, and the cite of Alcayer. The chief cite of Ethiopia, where this great Emperour is resident, is called Amacaiz, being a faire cite, whose inhabitants are of the colour of an Olive. There are also many other cities, as the cite of Saau upon the riuer of Nilus, where the Emperour is accustomed to remaine in the Sommer season: There is likewise a great cite named Barbaregaf, and Alcon, from whence it is said that the Queene of Saba came to Hierusalem to heare the wisdom of Salomon. This cite is but little, yet very faire, and one of the chief cities in Ethiopia. In the said kingdom is a prouince called Manicoogo, whose king is a Hooye, and tributarie to the Emperour of Ethiopia. In this prouince are many exceeding high mountaines, upon the which is said to be the earthly Paradise: and some say that there are the trees of the Summe and Hooye, whereof the antiquitie maketh mention: yet that none can passe thither, by reason of great deserts of a hundred dayes journey. Also beyond these mountaines, is the Cape of Bona Speranza. And to haue said thus much of Africke it may suffice.

The first voyage to Guinea, and Benin.

In the yeere of our Lord 1482, the twelfth day of August, sailed from Portugall with two goodly shippes, the first whereof was the Lion, with a pinelle called the Hooye, being all well furnished with men of the best sort, to the number of seven Croys, as also with victuals and necessaries requisite for such a voyage: having also two captaines, the one a stranger, called Antony Anus Pinteado, a Portugall, borne in a towne named the Port of Portugall, a wise, discrete, and sober man, who for his cunning in sailing, being as well an expert pilot as a politicke captaine, was sometime in great fauour with the king of Portugall, and so whom the coastes of Brasile and Guinea, were committed to be kept from the Frenchmen, to whom he was a terror on the sea in those partes, and was furthermore a gentleman of the king his maisters house. But as fortune in manner neuer fauorably bestoweth, neuer promiseth, but deceiveth, neuer vaileth but catcheth downe againe: and as great wealth and fauour hath at times companions emulation and envie, so as after many adventures and quarrels made against him, inforced to come into England: where in this golden voyage he was still matched with an unequal companion, and unlike match of most fortunate qualities & conditions, with verities few or none aduanced. Thus departed these noble shippes into their voyage: But first captaine Windam, putting forth of his ship at Portsmouth a kinsman of one of the head merchants, and the young heron a minister of the tragicall partes he had conceiued in his heart, and with such small beginnings made the monstrous abyss, that more happie, yea and blessed was that young man being left behind, their if he had beene taken with them, as some doe with he had done the like by theirs. Thus sailed they on their voyage, until they came to the Islands of Maidera, where they cooke in certain times for the sake of their shippes, and paid for them as they agreed of the price. At these Islands they met with a great Galion of the king of Portugall, full of vittall and ordnance: yet such as could not haue perceived if it had attempted to withstand or resist our shippes, for the which cause it was set forth, and onely to let and surrump the four shippes of their purposed voyage: but all other that should attempt the like: yet chiefly to frustrate our voyage. For the king of Portugall was strictly enjoined, that our shippes were armed to his call of Mina in these partes, whereas nothing less was meant.

After that our Ships departed from the Island of Madera forward on their voyage, began this worthy captain Pinteado to say, as a man contented with the company of a terrible Hydra, who hitherto flattered with him, & made him a faire countenance and shew of love. Then did he take upon him to command all alone, setting nought both by captain Pinteado, and the rest of the merchant factors: sometimes with opprobrious words, and sometimes with threatening, most shamefully abusing them, taking from Pinteado the service of the boies and certaine mariners that were assigned him by the order and direction of the worshipfull merchants, and leaving him as a common mariner, which is the greatest despite and griefe that can be to a Portugale or Spaniard, to be diminished their honour, which they esteeme above all riches. Thus sailing forward on their voyage, they came to the Islands of Canarie, continuing their course thence until they arrived at the Island of S. Nicholas, where they victualed themselves with fresh meate of the flesh of wild goats, whereof is great plenty in that Island, and in manner of nothing els. From hence following on their course and carrying here and there at the desart Islands in the way, because they would not come so timely to the countrey of Guinea for the beate, and carrying somewhat too long (so) what can be well ministered in a common wealth, where inequality with tyrannie will rule alone, they came at the length to the first land of the countrey of Guinea, where they fell with the great river of Sesto, where they might for their merchantozes have laden their ships with the graines of that countrey, which is a very good fruite, and much like unto a fig as it groweth on the tree. For as the figs are full of small seedes, so is the said fruit full of graines, which are loose within the cob, having in the midst thereof a hole on every side. This kind of spice is much used in cold countreys, & may there be sold for great advantage, for exchange of other wares. But our men by the persuasion or rather imposition of this tragical Captain, not regarding and setting light by that commodity, in comparison of the fine gold they thirsted, sailed an hundred leagues further, until they came to the golden land: where not attempting to come neere the Castell pertaining to the king of Portugall, which was within the river of Mina, made sale of their ware onely on this side and beyond it; for the gold of that countrey, to the quantitie of an hundred and fiftie pounds weight, there being in sale that they might have dispatched all their ware for golde, if the intaimed tyrant of Wyndam had; or could have given care to the counsell and experience of Pinteado: For when that Wyndam not satisfied with the gold which he had (and more might have had if he had sailed about the Mina) commanding the said Pinteado (so) to beooke upon him) to lead the ships to Benin, being under the Equinoctiall line, and an hundred and fiftie leagues beyond the Mina, where he looked to have their ships laden with pepper: and being counselled of the said Pinteado, considering the late time of the yeere, for that time to goe no further, but to make sale of their wares such as they had for gold, whereby they might have bene great gainers: Wyndam not listening hereunto, fell into a sudden rage, reviling the said Pinteado, calling him Jew, with other opprobrious words, saying, This wicked Jew hath promised to bring us to such places as are not, or as he cannot bring us unto: or but if he doe not, I will cut off his eares, and naile them to the maste. Pinteado gave the foresaid counsell to goe no further for the safeguard of the men and their lives, which they should put in danger if they came too late, for the rosia which is their winter, not for cold, but for smothering heat, with close and cloudie ayre, and stopping weather, of such putrifying qualitye, that it rosted the coates off their backs: or els for coming to soone for the loosing bene of the tyme, which caused them to linger in the way. But of force and not of will, brought he the shippes before the river of Benin, where standing at an Anchor, sent their pinnelle by into the river fiftie or threescore leagues, thence certaine of the merchants with Captain Pinteado, Francisco a Portugale, Nicholas Lambert gentleman, and other merchants, were conducted to the count where the king remained, ten leagues from the river side, whither when they came, they were brought with a great company to the presence of the king, who being a blacke Hoore (although not so blacke as a blacke) sat in a great huge hall, long & wide, the walls made of earth, without windows, & roofe of thyn boordes, set in sundry places, like unto louers to let in the ayre. And here to speake of the great reverence they gave to their king, it is such, that if wee would give as much to our Saviour Christ, we should remoue from our heads many plagues which we daily deserve for our contemp and impietie.

So it is therefore, that when his noble men are in his presence, they never looke him in the face, but sit cowering, as we upon our knees, so they upon their buttocks, with their elbows upon their knees, and their hands before their faces, not looking up until the king command them. And when they are comming to ward the king, as far as they doe see him, doe they shew such reverence, sitting on the ground with their faces covered as before. Likewise when they depart from him, they turne not their backs toward him, but goe creeping backward with like reverence.

And now to speake somewhat of the communication that was betwene the King and our men, you shall first understand that he himselfe could speake the Portuguese tongue, which he had lea-red of a child. Therefore after he had commaunded our men to stand up, and demanded of them the cause of their continuing into that countrey, they answered by Pinteado, that they were merchants, trauffling into those parties for the commodities of his countrey, for exchange of wares which they had brought from their countreys, being such as should be no lesse commodities for him and his peopple. The King then hauing of olde lying in a certaine slope house thirtie or fourtie kin-dals of pepper (euery kindall beyng an hundred weight) willed them to looke upon the same, and agayne to bring him a sight of such merchandises as they had brought with them. And thereupon sent with the Captaine and the merchants, certaine of his men to conduct them to the waters side, with other to bring the ware from the pin nelle to the court. Who when they were returned and the wares seene, the king grew to this ende with the merchants, to prouide in thirtie dayes the lading of all their ships with pepper. And in case their merchandises would not extend to the value of so much pepper, hee promised to credite them to their next returne: and thereupon sent the countrey round about to gather pepper, causing the same to be brought to the court: so that within the space of thirtie dayes they had gathered fourescore aune of pepper.

In the meane season, our men partly hauing no rule of themselves, but eating without measure of the fruites of that countrey, and drinking the wine of the Palme trees that dropeth in the night from the eue of the branches of the same, and in such extreame heate running continually into the water, not vsed before to such sudden and vsurment alterations (then the which nothing is moze dangerous) were thereby brought into swellings and agues: in somuch that the latter time of the peere comming on, caused them to die sometimes thye, and sometimes foure or fise in a day. Then Windam perceiving the time of the thirtie dayes to be expired, and his men dying so fast, sent to the court in post to captaine Pinteado, and the rest, to come away and to cary no longer. But Pin-teado with the rest, wrote backe to him againe, certifying him of the great quantitie of pepper they had already gathered, and looked daily for much moze: desiring him furthermore to remember the great paye and name they should winne, if they came home prosperously, and wist shame of the contrary. Which answer Windam noe satisfied, and many of their men dying daily, wiled and commaunded them agayne either to come away forthwith, or els threatened to leaue them behind. Which Pinteado heard thus answer, thinking to persuade him with reason, hee took his way from the court toward the ships, being conducted thither with men by the kings commandement.

In the meane season Windam all ragging, brake by Pinteados Cabin, brake open his chestes, spoiled such provision of cold stilled waters and suckets as hee had prouided for his health, and left him nothing, neither of his instruments to saile by, nor yet of his apparell: and in the meane tyme falling sicke himselfe, died also. Whose death Pinteado comming aboard, lamented as much as if he had bene the dearest friend he had in the world. But certaine of the mariners and other officers did speer in his face, some calling him Jewe, saying that he had brought them thither to kill them: and some drawing their swords at him, making a shew to slay him. Then he perceiving that they would needes away, desired them to cary that he might fetch the rest of the merchandises that were left at the court, but they would not graunt his request. Then desired he them to giue him the ship boate, with as much of an olde saile as might serue for the same, promising them therewith to bring Nicholas Lambert and the rest into England, but all was in vaine. Then wrote he a letter to the court to the merchants, informing them of all the matter, and promising them if God would to leaue him life, to returne with all haste to fetch them. And thus was Pinteado kept a boordship against his will, shutt among the voyes of the ship, not vsed like a man, nor yet like an honest boy, but glad to find sauiour at the cookes hand. Then departed they, leauiug one of their ships behind them, which they sunke for lacke of men to cary her. After this, within fise or seuen dayes sayling, died also Pin-teado for decayment and thought, that strooke him to the heart: A man voyce by co. some day pince, and most delyciously. And of seuen some men came home to winnowsb. scarcely forty, and of them many died. And that no man should suspect these wordes which I haue said in commendation of Pinteado, to be spoken upon fauour otherwise then truth, I haue thought good to adde hereunto the copie of the letters which the king of Portugale and the infant his voycher wrote vnto him to reconcile him, at such time as vpon the king his maisters displeasure (and not for any other crime or offence, as may appeare by the said letters) hee was onely for porraye indyced to come into England, where hee first perused our merchants to accept the said hostages to Guinea: But as the king of Portugale so late repented him that he had so punished Pinteado, vpon malicious informations of such as enuied the mans good fortune: even so may it hereby appeare, that in some ca-

Seven hundred reys are not sufficient. Allcayes is but a buttel.

The king do giue you to vnderstand lord Frances Desleosa, one of my counsell, and ouerseeer of my house, that in consideration of the good seruice which Anthonie Anes Pinteado, the soune of John Anes, dwelling in the towne called the Hoyt, hath done vnto me, my will and pleasure is, to make him knight of my house, allowing to him in pension seuen hundred reys monethly, and euery day one alcaze of barley, as long as he keepeth a hoyle, and to be paid according to the ordinaunce of my house. Providing alwayes that he shall receiue but one marriage gift: And this also in such condition, that the time which is excepted in our ordinaunce, forbidding such men to marry for getting such children as might succeed them in this allowance, which is fixe yeeres after the making of this patent, shall be first expired before he do marry. If therfore command you to cause this to be entered in the booke called the Matricula of our houholde, vnder the title of knights. And when it is so entered, let the Clarke of the Matricula, for the certentie thereof, write on the backe side of this Aluala, or patent, the number of the leafe wherein this our grant is entered, which done, let him returne this writing vnto the said Anthonie Anes Pinteado for his warrant.

Diego Henriques haue written this in Almarin the twenty and two day of September, in the yeere of our Lord 1551. And this beneuolence the king gaue vnto Anthonie Anes Pinteado the twentieth and five day of July this present yeere.

The secretaries declaration written vnder the kings grant.

Your Maiestie hath vouchsafed in respect and consideration of the good seruice of Anthonie Anes Pinteado, dwelling in the port, and soune of John Anes, to make him knight of your house, with ordinarie allowance, of seuen hundred reys pension by the moneth, and one alcaze of barley by the day, as long as he keepeth a hoyle: and to be paid according to the ordinaunce of your house, with condition that he shall haue but one marriage gift: and that not within the space of fixe yeeres after the making of these letters patents. The secretaries note. Entered in the booke of the Matricula. fol. 683.

The copie of the letter of Don Lewes the infant, and brother to the king of Portugall, sent into England to Anthonie Anes Pinteado.

Anthonie Anes Pinteado, If the infant brother to the king, haue me heartily commended vnto you, Peter Gonçalues is gone to seek you, desiring to bring you home againe into your countrey. And for that purpose, hath with him a safe conduct for you, granted by the king, that thereby you may freely and without all feare come home. And although the weather be foule and stormie, yet faile not to come: for in the time that his Maiestie hath giuen you, you may do many thinges to your contentation and gratifying the king, whereof I would be right glad: and to bring the same to passe, will do all that lieth in me for your profit. But soasmuch as Peter Gonçalues will make further declaration hereof vnto you, I say no more at this present. Written in Lisbon the eight day of December. Ann. 1552.

The infant Don Lewes.

All these foresaid writings I saw vnder seale, in the booke of my friend Xpoual de Lese, with whom Pinteado left them, at his vnsuonate departing to Guinea. But notwithstanding all these friendly letters and faire promises, Pinteado durst not attempt to goe home, neither to take company with the Portugalls his countrey men, without the presence of other: soasmuch as he had secret admonitions that they intended to slay him, if time and place might haue serued their wicked intent.

The

The second voyage to Guinea, set out by Sir George Barne, Sir John Yorke, Thomas Locke, and Edward Castelyn, in the yeere 1554.

In the first voyage I haue declared rather the order of the hypothesis, then the course of the navigation, whereof at that time I could haue no perfect information: so in the description of this second voyage, my chiefe intent hath bene to shew the course of the same, according to the obseruation and ordinary custome of the Mariners, and as I receiued it at the hands of an expert Pilot, being one of the chiefe in this voyage, who also with his owne hands wrote a briefe declaration of the same, as he found and tried all things, not by coniecture, but by the art of sailing, and instruments pertaining to the mariners facultie. Not therefore slinking to my selfe the commendations due vnto other, neither to bolde as in any part to change or other wise dispose the order of this voyage, so well obserued by art and experience, I haue thought good to set forth the same, in such sort and phrase of speech as is commonly vsed among them, and as I receiued it of the said Pilot, as I haue said. Take it therefore as followeth.

In the yeere of our Lord 1554. the eleuenth day of October, we departed the riuer of Thames with three goodly Shippes, the one called the Trinitie, a Ship of the burden of seuen hore tunne, the other called the Bartholomew, a Shippe of the burden of iiii tunne, the third was the John Euangelist, a Ship of seuen hore tunne. With the said Shippes and two pinnelles (whereof the one was bound on the coast of England) we went forward on our voyage, and said at Douer foureteene dayes, we said also at Rie three or foure dayes. Whereouer last of all we touched at Dartmouth.

The first day of November at nine of the clocke at night, departing from the coast of England, we set of the Start, bearing South west all that night in the sea, and the next day all day, and the next night after, vntill the third day of the said month about noone, making our way good, did runne threescore leagues.

Item from twelue of the clocke the third day, till twelue of the clocke the fourth day of the said month, making our way good South west, did runne euery three houres two leagues, which amounteth to thirtene leagues the whole.

Item from twelue of the clocke the fourth day, to twelue of the clocke the fifth day, running South west in the sea, did runne twelue leagues.

Item from twelue of the clocke the fifth day, vntill twelue of the clocke the sixth day, running South west, did runne eightene leagues.

And so from twelue of the clocke the sixth day, vntill twelue of the clocke the seventh day, running South south west, did run euery houre two leagues, which amount to eigheteene leagues the whole.

Item from twelue of the clocke the seventh day, till three of the clocke the eighth day, South south west running in the sea, did runne thirtie leagues.

Item from three of the clocke the eighth day, vntill three of the clocke the ninth day, running South south west, did runne thirtie leagues.

Item from three of the clocke the ninth day, till three of the clocke the tenth day, in running South southeast in the sea, did run the summe of foure and twentie leagues.

Also from three of the clocke the tenth day, vntill twelue of the clocke the eleuenth day, did runne South south west the summe of twelue leagues, & from twelue of the clocke, till fixe of the said day, did runne fixe leagues.

Running South and by west in the sea, from fixe of the clocke the eleuenth, till fixe of the clocke the twelfth day, did runne fixe and thirtie leagues.

From fixe of the clocke at after noone the twelfth day, till fixe of the clocke the thirtieenth day at after noone, did runne thirtie leagues.

Item from fixe of the clocke the thirtieenth day, till fixe of the clocke the foureteenth day after noone, we were becalmed, that we could lie South west with a saile. And the fiftieenth day in the morning, the wind came to the East and East North east.

The fiftieenth day in the morning, we had sight of the isle of Madera, which doth rise to him that cometh in the North north east part vpright land in the west part of it, and very high: and to the South south east a low long land, and a long point, with a cawle thowto the middell of it, standing in two and thirtie degrees: and in the West part, many springs of water running downe from the mountaine, and many white fieldes like vnto corne fieldes, and some white houses to the South east part of it: and the toppe of the mountaine sheweth very ragged, if you may see it, and in the North east part there is a bigge or bay as though it were a harborow: Also in the said part, there is a rocke a litle distance from the shoore, and over the said bight, you shall see a great gap in the mountaine.

The life of Palmeis.
Teneriffa.
The Canaries.
The nineteenth day at twelve of the clocke, we had sight of the isle of Palmeis and Teneriffa and the Canaries. The isle of Palmeis is round, and lieth Southeast and Northwest, and the Northwest part is lowest. In the South is a round hill over the head land, and an other round hill above that in the land. There are betwene the Southeast part of the isle of Madera and the Northwest part of the isle of Palmeis seven and fiftie leagues. This isle of Palmeis lieth in nine and twentie degrees. And our course from Madera to the isle of Palmeis was South, and South and by West, so that we had sight of Teneriffa and of the Canaries. The Southeast part of the isle of Palmeis, & the Northwest part of Teneriffa, lieth Southeast & Northwest, & betwene them are twentie leagues.

Gracianaria.
Forcuentura.
The island of Gomera.
Teneriffa and the great Canarie, called Gracianaria, and the West part of Forcuentura standeth in seven and twentie degrees and a halfe. Gomera is a faire island but very ragged, & lieth Northwest off Teneriffa. And whosoever will come betwene them two islands, must come South and by East, and in the South part of Gomera is a towne and a good roade in the said part of the island: and it standeth in twentie and seven degrees and three partes. Teneriffa is an high land, and a great high pike, like a sugar loafe: and vpon the said pike is snow throughout all the whole yeere. And by reason of that pike it may be knowne about all other islands, and there we were becalmed the twentieth day of Nouember, from sixe of the clocke in the morning, vntill foure of the clocke at after noone.

The coast of Barbarie.
Cape blanke.
The two and twentieth day of Nouember, vnder the Tropike of Cancer, the Sunne goeth downe West and by South. Vpon the coast of Barbarie five and twentie leagues by North Cape blanke at three leagues off the maine, there are fiftene cadomes, and good shelly ground, and sand among, and no streames, and two small islands standing in the two and twentie degrees and a parte.

The river
de Oro.
From Gomera to Cape de las Barbas is an hundred leagues, and our course was South and by East. The said Cape standeth in two and twentie and a halfe: and all that coast is flatte, sixene or seuentene cadome deepe. Seven or eight leagues off from the riuer de Oro to Cape de las Barbas, there be many Spaniards and Portugals to trade for silber, during the moneth of Nouember: and all that coast is very low lands. Also we went from Cape de las Barbas Southsouthwest, and Southwest and by South, till we brought our selues in twentie degrees and a halfe, reckoning our selues seven leagues off: and that was the least shoales of Cape Blanke.

of crocke bars.
Then we went South, vntill we brought our selues in thirtene degrees, reckoning our selues twentie and five leagues off. And in fiftene degrees, we did reare the Crossers, and we might haue reared them sooner if we had looked for them. They are not right a crosse in the moneth of Nouember, by reason that the nightes are short there. Neuerthelesse we had the sight of them the nine & twentieth day of the said moneth at night.

Rio Grande.
The first of December being in thirtene degrees, we set our course South and by East, vntill the fourth day of December at twelve of the clocke the same day. Then we were in nine degrees & a parte, reckoning our selues thirty leagues of the shoales of the riuer called Rio Grande, being Northwest of them: the which shoales be thirtie leagues long.

The fourth of December, we began to set our course Southeast, we being in sixe degrees and a halfe.

The ninth day of December we set our course Eastsoutheast: the foureteenth day of the said moneth, we set our course East, we being in five degrees and a halfe, reckoning our selues thirtie and five leagues from the coast of Guinea.

The nineteenth of the said moneth, we set our course East and by North, reckoning our selues seuentene leagues distant from Cape Mensurado, the said Cape being Eastnortheast of vs, and the riuer of Sesto being East.

Cape Mensu-
rado.
The riuer of Sesto.

The one and twentieth day of the said moneth, we fell with Cape Mensurado to the Southeast, about two leagues off. This Cape may be easily knowne, by reason the rising of it is like a Doy pole head. Also toward the South, all there are three trees, whereof the Eastermost tree is the highest, and the middlemost is like a tie flacke, & the Southermost like vnto a gibet: and vpon the maine, are foure or five high hilles rising one after another like round hommockes or hillocks. And the Southeast of the three trees, handiervise: and all the coast along is white sand. The said Cape standeth within a lile in five degrees.

The two and twentieth of December, we came to the riuer of Sesto, and remained there vntill the nine and twentieth day of the said moneth. Here we thought it best to stand before vs the pinnelle shall see a great gap in the almes and Teneriffa and North-west and the North an other round hill above Cordera and the North-west by a nine and twentie degrees South and by West. So of the isle of Palmae, & the them are twentie leagues, of Forteuicntura, standeth very ragged, & lieth in Islands, must come South in the said part of the Africa is an high land, and about all the whole peere, there we were becalmed all foure of the clocke at afternoon, the Sunne goth twentie leagues by North good shelly ground, and and twentie degrees and to the river Dulce, called Rio Dulce, that they might have the beginning of the market before the coming of the John Evangelist.

As the river of Setto, we had a ranne of graines. This river standeth in five degrees, lacking a terce. From the river of Setto to Rio Dulce, are five and twentie leagues. Rio Dulce standeth in five degrees and a halfe. The river of Setto is easie to be knowne, by reason there is a ledge of rocks on the Southeast part of the Rode. And at the entering into the haven, are five or six trees that beare no leaves. This is a good harborow, but very narrow at the entrance into the river. There is also a rocke in the haven's mouth right as you enter. And all that coast betwene Cape de Monte, and Cape de las Palmas, lieth Southeast and by East, North-west & by West, bring three leagues off the shore. And you shall have in some places rocks two leagues off; and that betwene the river of Setto and Cape de las Palmas.

Betwene the river of Setto and the river Dulce are five and twenty leagues; and the high land that is betwene them both, is called Cackado, being eight leagues from the river of Setto. And to the Southeastward of it, is a place called Shawgro, and an other called Shyawe or Shaou, where you may get fresh water. Off this Shyawe lieth a ledge of rocks; and to the Southeastward, lieth a headland called Croke. Betwene Cackado and Croke, are nine or ten leagues. To the Southeastward off, is a harborow called saint Vincent: Right over against saint Vincent, is a rocke under the water, two leagues and a halfe off the shore. To the Southeastward of that rocke you shall see an island about three or foure leagues off; this island is not past a league off the shore. To the Eastward of the island, is a rocke that lieth about the water, and by that rocke goeth in the river Dulce, which you shall knowe by the said river and rocke. The North-west side of the haven, is flat sand, and the Southeast side thereof, is like an island, and a bare plat without any trees, and so is it not in any other place.

In the Rode, you shall ride in thirteene or fouretene fadomes good ower & sand, being the marks of the Rode to bring the island and the North-east land together, and here we anchored the last of December.

The third day of January, we came from the river Dulce.

Note that Cape de las Palmas, is a faire high land, but some low places thereof by the water side looke like red cliffs with white strakes like the waves; a cable length a piece, and this is to the East part of the Cape. This Cape is the Southemmost land in all the coast of Guineae, & standeth in foure degrees and a terce.

The coast from Cape de las Palmas to Cape Trepoyntes, or Tres Puntas, is faire and cleare without rocke or other danger.

Twentie and five leagues from Cape de las Palmas, the land is higher then in any place, but all we come to Cape Trepoyntes. And about ten leagues before you come to Cape Trepoyntes, the land riseth still higher and higher, until you come to Cape Trepoyntes. Also before you come to the said Cape, after other five leagues to the North-west part of it, there is certaine broken ground, with two great rockes, and within them in the bight of a bay, is a castell called Arca, pertaining to the king of Portugall. You shall knowe it by the said rockes that lie off it: for there is none such from Cape de las Palmas to Cape Trepoyntes. This coast lieth East and by North, West and by South. From Cape de las Palmas to the said castell, is fourestoye and sixtene leagues. And the coast lieth from the said castell to the Westemmost point of Trepoyntes, Southeast and by South, North-west and by North. Also the Westemmost point of Trepoyntes, is a low land, lying halfe a mile out in the sea; and upon the innermost necke to the land ward, is a tuft of trees, and there we arrived the cleventh day of January.

The twelfth day of January, we came to a towne called Samma or Samua, being eight leagues from Cape Trepoyntes toward Eastward. Betwene Cape Trepoyntes and the towne of Samua, is a great ledge of rocks a great way out in the sea. We continued foure dayes at that towne, and the captaine thereof would needs have a pledge a shore. But when they received the pledge, they kept him still and would traffike no more, but shot off their ordinance at vs. They have two or three pieces of ordinance and no more.

The thirteenth day of the said month, we made reckoning to come to a place called Cape Corea, where captaine Don John dwelleth, whose men entertained vs friendly. This Cape Corea is foure leagues Eastward of the castell of Mina, otherwise called La mina, or Castello de mina, where we arrived the eighteenth day of the month. Here we made sale of all our cloth, saving two of three packes.

The five and twentieth day of the same month we weighed anchor, and departed from thence to the Crinitie, which was seven leagues Eastward of vs, where she solde her wares. Then they of the

The Crinitie willed vs to go Eastward of that eight or nine leagues, to sell part of their wares, in a place called Perecow, and another place named Perecow Grande, being the Eastermost place of both the West, which you shall know by a great round hill nere by it named Monte Rodondo, lying Westward from it, and by the water side are many high palme trees. From hence did we set forth homeward the thirteenth day of February, & pleavoy along till we came within seven or eight leagues to Cape Trepointes. About eight of the clocke the fifteenth day at afternoon, we did cast about to seaward: and beware of the currents, for they will deceiue you soe. Whosoeuer shall come from the coast of Mina homeward, let him be sure to make his way good West, untill he reckon himselfe as farre as Cape de las Palmas, where the current setteth alwayes to the Eastward, And within twentie leagues Eastward of Cape de las Palmas, is a riuer called De los Potos, where you may haue fresh water and halast enough, and plentie of iuoy of Elephants teeth. This riuer runneth in foure degrees, and almost two tercies. And when you reckon your selfe as farre shot as Cape de las Palmas, being in a degree, or a degree and a halfe, you may go West, and West by North, untill you come in thre degrees: and then you may go Westnorthwest, and Northwest and by West, untill you come in five degrees, and then Northwest. And in five degrees, we met Northerly winde, and great ruffling of tides. And as we could iudge, the currents went to the Northnorthwest. Furthermore betweene Cape de Monte, and Cape verde, go great currents which deceiue many men.

The two and twentieth day of April, we were in eight degrees and two tercies: and so we ranne to the Northwest, hauing the winde at Northeast and Eastnortheast, and sometimes at East, untill we were at eightene degrees and a terce, which was on May day. And so from eightene and two tercies, we had the winde at East and Eastnortheast, and sometimes at Eastfourtheast: and then we reckoned the islands of Cape verde Eastsoutheast of vs, we iudging our selves to be eight and forty leagues off. And in twentie and one and twentie degrees, we had the winde more Easterly to the Southward then before. And so we ran to the Northwest and Northnorthwest, and sometimes North and by West and North, untill we came into one and thirte degrees, where we reckoned our selves a hundred and fourescore leagues Southwest, and by South of the island de Flores, or de los Flores, and there we met with the winde at Southsoutheast, and set our course Northeast.

The Isle
de Flores.

In three and twentieth degrees, we had the winde at the South and Southwest, and then we set our course North northeast, and so we ran to forty degrees, and then we set our course Northeast, the wind being at the Southwest, and hauing the Isle de Flores East of vs, and xvii leagues off.

The Isle

In the one and forty degrees, we met with the winde at Northeast, and so we ran Northwestward, then we met with the winde Westnorthwest, & at the West within five leagues, running toward the Northwest, and then we cast about, and lay Northeast, untill we came in two and forty degrees, where we set our course Eastnortheast, iudging the Isle de Coruo South and by West of vs, and five and thirte leagues distant from vs.

A remembrance, that the one and twentieth day of May we communed with John Rafe, and hee thought it best to goe Northeast, and iudged himselfe five and twentie leagues Eastward to the Isle de Flores, and in nine and thirte degrees and a halfe.

Note, that on the fourth day of September, vnder nine degrees, we lost the sight of the North Starre.

Note also, that in five and forty degrees, the compass is varied eight degrees to the West.

Item, in forty degrees, the compass did varie fiftene degrees in the whole.

Item, in thirte degrees and a halfe, the compass is varied five degrees to the West.

Be it also in memory, that two or three dayes before we came to Cape Troispoints, the pinnelle went along the shore, thinking to sell some of our wares, and so we came to anker thre or foure leagues West and by South of the Cape Troispoints, where we left the Crinitie.

The Pin-

Then our pinnelle came aboard with all our men, the pinnelle also tooke in more wares. They told me moreover that they would goe to a place where the Spaniards was, and had receiued much gold at the first voyage to these parties, and told mee furthermore that it was a good place: but I fearing a brigantine that was then vpon the coast, did wey and follow them, and left the Crinitie about foure leagues off from vs, and there we rode against that towne foure dayes: so that Martine by his owne desire, and assent of some of the Commissioners that were in the pinnelle, went a shore to the towne, and there John Berin went to traffique from vs, bring three unles of traffiquing at an other towne. The towne is called Samma or Samua, for Samma and Sammatera, are the names of the two first towne, where we did traffique for gold, to the Northeast of Cape Trepointes.

I will speake somewhat of the countrey & people, and of such things as are brought from thence.
They brought from thence at the last voyage, foure hundred pound weighte and odde of golde, of two and twentie carraes and one graine in linnenell: also five & thirtie buttes of graines, and about two hundred and fiftie Elephants teeth of all quantities. Of these, I saw & measured some of nine spannes in length, as they were crooked. Some of them were as bigge as a mans thigh about the knee, and weped about foure score and ten pound weighte a piere. They say that some one hath bene seene of an hundred and five and twentie pound weighte. Other there were which they call the teeth of calves, of one or two or three yeeres, whereof some were a foot and a halfe, some two foot, & some three, or more, according to the age of the beast. These great teeth of tusks, grow in the upper iaw downeward, and not in the nether iaw upward, wherein the Painners and Aras workers are de-ceiued. At this last voyage was brought from Guinea the head of an Elephant, of such huge bignesse, that onely the bones of crang in thereof, beside the nether iaw and great tusks, weighed about two hundred weighte, and was as much as I could well lift from the ground: insomuch that considering also herewith the weighte of two such great teeth, the nether iaw with the lesse teeth, the tongue, the great hanging eares, the bigge and long snout or troonke, with all the fleshy, vaines, and skime, with all other parts belonging to the whole head, in my iudgement it could weigh little lesse then five hundred weighte. This head diuers haue seene in the house of the woorthie merchant sir Anze in Iude, where also I saw it, and beheld it, not onely with my bodily eyes, but much moze with the eyes of my minde and spirit, considered by the worke, the running and wise dome of the workemaster: without which consideration, the sight of such strange and woonderfull things may rather seme curiosities, then profitable contemplations.

The Elephant (which some call an Elephante) is the biggest of all foure footed beastes, his foze-legges are longer then his hinder, he hath ancles in the lower part of his hinder legges, and five toes on his feet vndiuided, his snout or troonke is so long, & in such forme, that it is to him in the stead of a hand: for he nether eateth nor drinkech but by bringing his troonke to his mouth, the which he helpeth by his maister or keeper, therewith he ouerthoweth trees. Beside his two great tusks, he hath on euery side of his mouth foure teeth, where with he eateth and grindeth his meat: either of these teeth, are almost a spanne in length, as they grow along in the iaw, and are about two inches in heigte, and almost as much in thicknesse. The tuskes of the male are greater then of the female: his tongue is very litle, and so farre in his mouth, that it cannot be seene: of all beastes they are most gentle and tractable, for by many sundry wayes they are taught, and doe understand: insomuch that they learne to doe due honoz to a king, and are of quicke sense and sharpnesse of witte.
When the male hath once seasoned the female, he neuer after toucheth her. The male Elephant li-ueth two hundred yeeres, or at the least one hundred and twentie: the female almost as long, but the floure of their age, is but threescore yeeres, as some write. They cannot suffer winter or colde: they loue rivers, and will often goe into them by to the snout, where with they blow and snuffe, and play in the water: but swimme they cannot, for the weighte of their bodies. Plinie and Soline write, that they vse none adulterie. If they happen to meet with a man in wilderness being out of the way, gently they will goe before him, and bring him into the plaine way. Joined in battell they haue no small respect vnto them that be wounded: for they bring them that are hurt or weary into the middle of the army to be defended: they are made tame by drinkeing the milke of barley. They haue continuall warre against Dragons, which desire their blood, because it is very colde: and therefore the Dragon lying await as the Elephant passeth by, windeth his taile (being of exceeding length) about the hinder legges of the Elephant, & so slaying him, thrusteth his head into his troonke and exhauesth his breath, or else biteth him in the eare, whereunto he cannot reach with his troonke, and when the Elephant waereth same, he falleth downe on the serpent, being now full of blood, and with the waite of his body breaketh him: so that his owne blood with the blood of the Elephant, runneth out of him mingled together, which being colde, is congealed into that substance which the Apothecaries call Sanguis Draconis, (that is) Dragons blood, otherwise called Cinnabaris, although there be an other kinde of Cinnabaris, commonly called cinoper or vermilion, which the painters vse in certaine colours.

They are also of three kindes, as of the marshes, the plaines, and the mountaines, no lesse differing in conditions. Philostratus writeth, that as much as the Elephant of Libya in bignesse passeth the horse of Nysea, so much doe the Elephants of India exceede them of Libya: for of the Elephants of India, some haue bene seene of the heigte of nine cubites: the other doe so greatly feare them, that they dare not abide the sight of them. Of the Indian Elephants, onely the males haue tuskes, but of them of Echiopia and Libya, both males and females are tusked: they are of diuers heigths, as of twelue, thirtene, and foure score spannes, euery doynant being a measure of nine inches. Some much that an Elephant is bigger then three wilde Oxen or Buffes. They of India are blacke, of the colour of a moule, but they of Ethiope or Guinea, are brown: the hide or skinne of them all is very hard, and without haire or hystles: their eares are two doynants broad, and their eyes very litle. Our men saw one drinking at a river in Guinea, as they sailed into the land.

Of other properties and conditions of the Elephant, as of their marvellous docillitie, of their sight and use in the warres, of their generation and chastitie, when they were first seene in the theaters and triumphes of the Romans, how they are taken and tamed, and when they cast their tusks, with the use of the same in medicine, who so desireth to know, let him reade Plinie, in the eight booke of his naturall historie. He also writeth in his twelfth booke, that in olde tyme they made many goodly workes of iuoy of Elephants teeth: as tables, trestles, postes of houses, railes, lattices for windows, images of their gods, and diuers other things of iuoy, both coloured and uncoloured, and intermixt with sundry kindes of precious woods, as at this day are made certaine chaires, lutes, and virginnalles. They had such plenty thereof in olde tyme, that (as far as I remember) Iosephus writeth, that one of the gates of Hierusalem was called Porta Eburnea, (that is) the Iuoy gate. The whitenesse thereof was so much esteemed, that it was thought to replicate the naturall fairnesse of mans skinn: in so much that such as went about to set footed (or rather comely) naturall beautie with colours and painting, were reppoued by this pouvere, Ebur atramento candidificare, that is, To make iuoy white with inke. The poets also, describing the faire necks of beautifull virgins, call them Eburnea colla, that is, Iuoy necks. And to haue said thus much of Elephants and iuoy, it may suffice.

The people of Africa.

Now therefore I will speake somewhat of the people and their manners, and manner of liuing, with an other briefe description of Africa also. It is to be vnderstood, that the people which now inhabit the regions of the coast of Guinea, and the mid parts of Africa, as Libya the inner, and Nubia, with diuers other great and large regions about the same, were in olde tyme called Ethiopes & Nigrites, which we now call Spoones, Spoones, or Negroes, a people of beauly liuing, without a God, law, religion, or common wealth, and so scorched and bereft with the heat of the sunne, that in many places they cutte it when it riseth. Of the regions and people about the inner Libya (called Libya Interior) Gemma Phrysius writeth thus.

Libya Interior.

Libya Interior, is very large and desolate in the which are many horrible wildernes and mountaines, replenished with diuers kindes of wilde and monstrous beastes and serpens. First from Mauritania or Barbarie toward the South is Gerulia, a rough and saluage region, whose inhabitants are wilde and wandering people. After these follow the people called Melanogetuli and Pharusij, which wander in the wilderness, carrying with them great gourdes of water. The Ethiopians, called Nigrites, occupie a great part of Africa, and are extended to the West Ocean, Southward also they reach to the river Nigritis, whose nature agreeth with the river of Nilus, forasmuch as it is increased and diminished at the same time, and breedeth such the like beastes as the Crocodile. By reason whereof, I thinke this to be the same river which the Portugals call Senega: For this river is also of the same nature. It is furthermore marvellous and very strange that is said of this river: And this is, that on the one side thereof, the inhabitants are of high stature and blacke, and on the other side, of brown or tawny colour, and low stature, which thing also our men confirme to be true.

Garamantes,
People of Libya.

There are also other people of Libya called Garamantes, whose women are common: for they contract no marriage, neither haue respect to chastitie. After these are the nations of the people called Pyrei, Sachiodaphnie, Odrangi, Mimaces, Lynxamat, Dolopes, Aganging, Leuci Ethiopes, Xilice, Ethiopes, Calcei Ethiopes, and Nubi. These haue the same situation in Ptolomie that they now haue to the Kingdome of Nubia. There are certaine Christians vnder the dominion of the great Emperour of Ethiopia, called Prester John. From these toward the West, is a great nation of people called Aphricerones, whose region (as farre as may be gathered by conjecture) is the same that is now called Regnum Orguene, containing vpon the East parts of Guinea. From hence Westward, and somewhat toward the North, are the kingdomes of Gambia and Budome, not farre from the river of Senega. And from hence toward the inland regions; and along by the sea coast, are the regions of Ginea or Guinea, which we commonly call Guinee. On the West side of these regions toward the Ocean, is the cape or point called Cabo verde, or Capur viride (that is) The greene cape, to the which the Portugals first direct their course when they saile to America, or the land of Brasile. Then departing from hence, they turne to the right hand toward the quarter of the which is called Garbino, which is betwene the West and the South. But as speaks somewhat more of Ethiopia: although there are many nations of people so named, yet is Ethiopia thereby diuided into two parts, whereof the one is called Ethiopia vnder Egypte, a great and rich region. To this pertaineth the island Meroc, embraced round about with the streames of the river Nilus. In this island women reigned in olde time. Josephus writeth, that it was sometime called Sabea: and that the queene of Saba came from thence to Hierusalem, to heare the wise-dome of Salomon. From hence toward the East, reigneth the said Christian Emperour Hystor John, whom some call Papa Iohannes, and other say that he is called Pean Iuan (that is) great John, whose Empire reacheth farre beyond Nilus, and is extended to the coastes of the red sea and Indian sea. The middle of the region is almost in threeforse and sixe degrees of longitude, & twelue degrees of latitude. About this region inhabite the people called Clodi, Risophagi, Babylonij, Axionite, Molili, and Moliba. After these is the region called Troglodytica, whose inhabitants dwell in caues and denes: for these are their houses, and the flesh of serpents their meat, as writeth Plinie, and Diodorus Siculus. They haue no speech, but rather a grinning and chattering, There are also people without heades, called Blemines, hauing their eyes and mouth in their breast. Like wise Strucophagi, and naked Ganphantes: Satyrs also, which haue nothing of men but onely shape. Moreover Oripei, great hunters. Mennones also, and the region of Sniyrnophora, which bringeth forth myrrh. After these is the region of Azania, in the which many Elephants are found. A great part of the other regions of Africa that are beyond the Equinoctiall line, are now ascribed to the kingdome of Melinde, whose inhabitants are accustomed to traffike with the nations of Arabie, and their king is ioynd in friendship with the king of Portugall & payeth tribute to Hester John.

The other Ethiopie, called Ethiopia Interior (that is) the inner Ethiopie, is not yet knowne for the greatnesse thereof, but onely by the sea coastes: yet is it described in this maner. First from the Equinoctiall toward the South, is a great region of Ethiopians, which bringeth forth white Elephants, Eggers, and the beastes called Rhinocerontes. Also a region that bringeth forth plenty of cyamome, lying betwene the branches of Nilus. Also the kingdome of Habesh of Habasia, a region of Christian men, lying both on this side and beyond Nilus. Here are also the Ethiopians, called Ichchiophagi (that is) such as liue onely by fish, and were sometimes subdued by the waues of great Alexander. Furthermore the Ethiopians called Rhapsij, and Anthropophagi, that are accustomed to mans flesh, inhabite the regions neere vnto the mountaines called Montes Lunæ (that is) the mountaines of the Moone. Gazatia is vnder the Tropike of Capricorne.
 After this, followeth the front of Africa, the Cape of Buena Speranza, or Caput Bonæ Spei, (that is) the Cape of good hope, by the which they passe that saile from Spaine to Calicut. But by what names the Capes and gulfs are called, so farre as the same are in euery globe and card, it were here superfluous to rehearse them.

Some write that Affrica was so named by the Grecians, because it is without colde. For the Greeke letter Alpha or A, signifieth yuation, void, or without: and Phrice, signifieth colde. For in beeh although in the head of Winter, they haue a cloudie and tempestuous season, yet is it not colde, but rather smothering hotte, with hotte showres of raine also; and somewhere such scorching wiyses, that what by one meanes and other, they seeme at certein times to liue as it were in forma-res, and in maner already halfe way in Purgatorie or hell. Gemma Phrisus writeth, that in cer-teine partes of Affrica, as in Atlas the greater, the aye in the night season is seene shinning, with many strang: fires and flames rising in maner as high as the Moone: and that in the clement are sometime heard as it were the sound of pipes, trumpets and drummes; which noises may perhaps be caused by the vehement and sundry motions of such fire: exhalations in the aye, as we see the like in many experiences wrought by fire, aye, & wind. The hollownesse also, and diuers r-flections and breaking of the clouds, may be great causes hereof, beside the vehement colde of the middle region of these aye, whereby the said fire exhalations, ascending thither, are suddenly stricken backe with great force: for euery common and daily experience teacheth vs, by the whistling of a burning torch, what noise fire maketh in the aye, and much more where it strieth when it is inclosed with aye, as appeareth in gunnes, and as the like is seene in only aire inclosed, as in Organ pipes, and such other instruments that go by winde. For winde (as say the Philosophers) is none other then aye vehemently moved, as the see in a paire of bellows, and such other.

Some of our men of good credit that were in this last voyage to Guinea, affirme earnestly that in the night season they felt a sensible heat to come from the beames of the moone. The which thing, although it be strange and insensible to vs that inhabite colde regions, yet doth it stand with good reason that it may so be, so farre as the nature of starres and planetes (as writeth Plinie) consisteth of fire, and consisteth in it a spirit of life, which cannot be without heat.

And that the Moone giueth heate vpon the earth, the Prophet Dauid seemeth to confirme in his 121 Psalm, where speaking of such men as are defended from euill by Gods protection, he

he saith thus: Per diem Sol non exuret te, nec Luna per noctem. That is to say, In the day the Sunne shall not burne thee, nor the Moone by night.

They say furthermore that in certaine places of the sea, they saw certaine streames of water, which they call spoures, falling out of the aire into the sea, and that some of these are as bigge as the great pillars of Churches: in somuch that sometimes they fall into shippes, and put them in great danger of downing. Some saie that these should be the Cataracts of heauen, which were all opened at Noes floud. But I thinke them rather to be such furious and eruptions as Aristotle in his booke de Mundo saith, to chance in the sea. For speaking of such strange things as are seene often times in the sea, he writeth thus. Oftentimes also euen in the sea are seene euaporations of fire, and such eruptions and breaking forth of springs, that the mouthes of riuers are opened, Whirlpooles, and furions are caused of such other vehement motions, not onely in the middest of the sea, but also in creekes and streights. At certaine times also, a great quantitie of water is suddenly lifted vpp and carried about with the Moone, &c. By which wordes of Aristotle it doth appeare that such waters be lifted vpp in one place at one time, and suddenly fall downe in another place at another time. And herunto perhaps pertaineth it that Richard Chancellor tolde me that he heard Sebastian Cabot report, that (as farre as I remember) either about the coastes of Brasile or Rio de Plata, his shippe or pinnelle was suddenly lifted from the sea, and cast vpon land, I wot not howe farre. The which thing, and such other like wonderfull and strange workes of nature wold I consider, and call to remembrance the narrowness of mans understanding and knowledge, in comparison of her mightie power, I can but cease to maruell and confesse with Plinie, that nothing is to her impossible, the least part of whose power is not yet knowen to men. Many things more our men saw and considered in this voyage, too much to be noted, wherof I haue thought good to put some in memorie, that the reader may as well take pleasure in the varietie of things, as knowledge of the hypothesis. Among other things theretofore touching the maners and nature of the people, this may seeme strange, that their princes and noble men vse to pounce and case their skinnes with yette knots in diuers formes, as it were branched damaske, thinking that to be a decent ornament. And albeit they goe in maner all naked, yet are many of them, and especially their women, in maner laden with collars, hyslets, hoopcs, and chaines, either of golde, copper, or iuoy. I my selfe haue one of their hyslets of iuoy, weighing two pound and the ounces of Troy weight, which make eight and thirtie ounces: this one of their women did weare vpon her arme. It is made of one whole pier of the biggest part of the tooth, turned and somewhat carued, with a hole in the middest, wherein they put their hands to weare it on their arme. Some haue of euery arme one, and as many on their legs, where with some of them are so galled, that although they are in maner made lame thereby, yet will they by no means leaue them off. Some weare also on their legs great shackles of bright copper, which they thinke to be no lesse comely. They weare also collars, hyslets, garlands, and girdles, of certaine blew bones like beates. Likewise some of their women weare on their bare armes certaine yocshewes, made of the plates of beaten golde. On their fingers also they weare rings, made of golden wires, with a knot or wreath, like vnto that which children make in a ring of a rush. Among other things of golde that our men bought of them for exchange of their wares, were certaine doggs chaines and collers.

They are very warie people in their bargaining, and will not lose one sparke of golde of any value. They vse weights and measures, and are very circumspect in occupying the same. They that shall haue to do with them, must vse them gently: for they will not traffike or buy in any wares if they be euill vsed. At the first voyage that our men had into these parties, it so chanced, that at their departure from the first place where they did traffike, one of them either stole a muske catte, or tooke her away by force, not mistrusting that that should haue hindered their bargaining in another place whither they intended to go. But for all the haste they could make with full sailes, the fame of their misusage so preuened them, that the people of that place also, offended thereby, wou to bring in no wares: in somuch that they were enforced either to restore the cat, or pay for her at their price, before they could traffike there.

Their houses are made of foure postes or trees and covered with boughes.

Their feeding. Their common feeding is of rootes, and such fishes as they take, wherof they haue great plenty.

Fleeing fishes. There are also such fleeing fishes as are seene in the sea of the West Indies. Our men sailed of their fishes, hoping to youde store thereof: but they would take no sale, and must therefore be eaten fresh, which as some say. Notwithstanding, other affirme that if they be salted immediately after they be taken, they will last vncorrupted ten or twelue dayes. But this is more strange, that part of such flesh as they carried with them out of England, and gunned there, became sweet againe at their returne to the climate of temperate regions.

They use also a strange making of bryad, in this maner. They grinde betwene two stones with their handes as much soyn as they thinke may suffice their family, & when they haue thus brought it to flour, they put thereto a certaine quantitie of water, and make thereof very thynne dough, which they sticke vpo some post of their houses, where it is baked by the heat of the sunne: so that when the matter of the house is any of his family wil eat thereof, they take it downe & eat it.

Then bryad.

They haue very faire tobacco, the earre whereof is two handfulls in length, and as bigge as a great Bulrush, and almost foure inches about where it is biggest. The stemme of straw seemeth to be almost as bigge as the litle finger of a mans hand, or litle lesse. The graines of this tobacco are as big as our prason, round also, and very white, and somewhat shining, like pearles that haue lost their colour. A most of the substance of them turned into flour, & maketh litle bryanne or none. I told in one eare two hundred & threescore graines. The eare is inclosed in three blades longer then it selfe, & of two ynches broad a piece. And by this fruitfulness the Sunne seemeth partly to recompence such grieues and molestations as they otherwile receiue by the feruent heate thereof. It is doubtlesse a worthy contemplation to consider the contrary effects of the Sunne: or rather the contrary passions of such things as receiue the influence of his beames, either to their hurt or benefite. Their drinke is either water, or the iuice that droppech from the cut branches of the barren Date trees, called Palmites. For either they hang great gourdes at the said branches euery evening, and let them so hang all night, or els they set them on the ground vnder the trees, that the droppech may fall therein. They say that this kinde of drinke is in taste much like unto wybe, but somewhat sweeter, and more ypleasant. They cut the branches euery evening, because they are feared by in the day by the heate of the Sunne. They haue also great Peanes as bigge as chestnuts, and very hard with a shell in the head of a huske.

Spay things more might be saide of the maners of the people, and of the wonders and monstrous things that are engendred in Affricke. But it shall suffice to haue saide thus much of such things as our men partly saue, and partly brought with them.

And whereas before speaking of the fruite of graines, I described the same to haue holes by the hole (as in beede it is, as it is brought hither) yet was I afterwarde enbourned, that those holes were made to put stringes or twigges through the fruite, thereby to hang them by to dry at the Sunne. They grow not past a foote and a halfe, or two foote from the ground, and are as redde as blood when they are gathered. The graines themselves are called of the Portugals Grana Paradis.

Grana.

At their comming home, the keeles of their shippes were maruelously ouergrowne with certaine shelles of two ynches length and more, as thicke as they coude stande, and of such bignesse that a man might put his thumme in the mouthes of them. They certainly affirme that in these there groweth a certaine slimie substance, which at the length slipping out of the shell and falling in the sea, becommeth those foules which we call Barnacles. The like shelles haue bene seene in shippes returning from Ireland, but these shels were not past halfe an inch in length. Of the other that came from Guinea, I saue the Pyrmose lying in the Docke, and in maner covered with the said shelles, which in my iudgement should greatly hinder her sayling. Their shippes were also in many places eaten with the wommes called Bromas or Bissas, whereof mention is made in the Decades. These creepe betwene the plankes, which they eate though in many places.

Among other things that chaficed to them in this voyage, this is worthy to be noted, that where as they sailed thither in seven weekes, they could returne in no lesse space then twentis weekes. The cause whereof they say to be this: That about the coast of Cabo Verde, the winde is euer at the East, by reason whereof they were enforced to saile farre out of their course into the maine Ocean, to finde the winde at the West to bring them home. There died of our men at this last voyage about twentie and foure, whereof many died at their returne into the clyme of the colde regions, as betwene the Islands of Azores and England. They brought with them certaine blacke slaues, whereof some were tall and strong men, and could wel agree with our meates and drinckes. The colde and moyst ayre doth somewhat offend them. Yet doubtlesse men that are borne in hotte Regions, may better abide colde, then men that are borne in colde Regions may abide heate, for almost as vehement heate resolucth the radicall moysture of mens bodies, as colde constraincth and prestreth the same.

The beach of our men.

Blacke shippes brought into England. Colde may be better abiden then heate.

This is also to be considered as a secret worke of nature, that throughout al Affricke vnder the Equinortiall line, and neere about the same on both sides, the regions are extreme hotte, and the people very blacke. Whereas contrarily such regions of the West Indies as are vnder the same line are very temperate, and the people neither blacke, nor with curlde and thoz wooll on their beaues, as haue they of Affricke, but of the colour of an Olive, with long and blacke beare on their beaues: the cause of which variete is declared in diuers places in the Decades.

It is also worthy to be noted that some of them that were at this voyage take note that in that they outtooke the course of the Spanne, so that they had it from them at noone, the 11th. day of March. And to haue said thus much of these voyages, it may suffice.

The first voyage made by M. William Towrson Merchant of London, to the coast of Guinea, with two Shippes, in the yeere 1555.

September.

Upon monday the 30. day of September we departed from the Isle of Wight, out of the haven of Newport with 2. good shippes, the one called the Hart the other the Hinde, both of London, and the Masters of them were John Ralphe, and William Carter, for a voyage to be made vnto the Riuer de Sellos in Guinea, and to other haunts there about.

October.

It fell out by the varietie of winde, that it was the 14. day of October before we could fetch Dartmouth: and being there arrived we continued in that roade six dayes, and the 20. of October we warpe out of the haven, & set saile directing our course towards the South-west, and the next morning we were runne by estimation 30. leagues.

The 21. we suppose we ranne 36. leagues, the 22. 40. leagues, the 23. 20. leagues, the 24. but 12. by reason of the foule weather, and change of winde.

The 25. day wee ranne about 20. leagues, the 26. about 12. and all the night laye at trie with much raine and foule weather.

The 27. the winde and seas were high, yet we made some way.

The 28. day the Hinde pooye brake with a sea some what about the helme, whereupon William Carter & Richard Gresham with their marchants agreed to set saile, and go backe againe for England, and for that purpose hoysed by their saile, and we seeing it shote off a peere to cause them to tary for vs, and hoysed our fore saile and went to the: and they to lve vs that they would not keepe the seas, and required mee to agree that they might returne, and we also with them to amende the fault, whereunto I would not agree, seeing the fault to bee no worse then it was, and our Master John Ralphe offered them that hee himselfe would goe in her, which thing they hearing saide that they were as able to keepe her as hee, and William Carter made answer, that as long as the company would continue with him, he would not refuse the voyage: so we lay at hull about an houre after, and then it pleased God to sende vs a faire winde at North and by East, and we ranne our course that day by estimation 25. leagues.

The 29. day wee ranne about 40. leagues, the 30. about 50. and the 31. and last of October about 40.

November.

The first of November we found our selues to be in 31. degrees of latitude by the reckoning of our Master. This day we ranne about 40. leagues also.

The 2. day we ranne 36. leagues.

Porto Sancto.

The 3. day we had sight of Porto Sancto, which is a small Island lying in the sea, about three leagues long, and a league & a halfe broad, & is possessed by Portingals. It riseth as we came from the North North-west like two small hilles neere together. The East ende of the same Island is a high land like a saddle with a halley, which makes it to beare that soyme. The west ende of it is lower with certaine small round hillockes. This Island lyeth in thirtie and three degrees. The same day at 11. of the clocke wee rayled the Isle of Madera, which lyeth 12. leagues from Porto Sancto, towards the South-west: that Island is a faire Islande and fruitfull, and is inhabited by Portingals, it riseth afarre off like a great whole lande and high. By thire of the clocke this day at after noone we were thwart of Porto Sancto, and wee set our course South-west to leaue the Isle of Madera to the Eastward, as we did Porto Sancto. These two Islandes were the first land that we sawe since we left the coast of England. About 3. of the clocke after midnight we were thwart of Madera, within three leagues of the West ende of it, and by meanes of the high hilles there, we were becalmed: We suppose we ranne this day and night 30. leagues.

Madera.

The fourth day wee laye becalmed vnder the Isle of Madera, vntill one of the clocke at after noone, and then the winde comming into the East, wee went our course, and ranne that day 15. leagues.

Tenerif.

The 5. day we ranne 15. leagues more.

The 6. day in the morning we rayled the Isle of Tenerif, otherwisse called the Pike, because it is a very high Island with a pike vpon the toppe like a loose of Sugar. The same night we rayled the Isle of Palma, which is a high land also, and to the Westward of the Isle of Tenerif.

The 7. day we perceivd the Isle of Gomera, which is an Island standing betwix Tenerif and Palma, about 12. leagues Eastward from Palma, and 8. leagues Westward from Tenerif: and for feare of being becalmed with the Isle of Tenerif, we left both it, and Gomera to the Eastward of us, and went betwixt Palma and Gomera. We ranne this day and night 30. leagues.

Note that these Islands be 60. leagues from Madera, and that there are 3. Islands more to the Westward of Tenerif, named the Grand Canaria, Forteventura, & Lanceroc, of which Islands we came not in sight: they be inhabited by Spaniards.

This day also we had sight of the Isle of Ferro, which is to the Southward 12. leagues from the other Islands, and is possessed by Spaniards. All this day and night by reason of the winde wee could not double the point of the Isle of Ferro, except wee should have gone to the Westward of it which had bene much out of our course: therefore we kept about, and ranne backe five houres East North-east to the ende we might double it upon the next boopse, the winde continuing South-east, which both we bene often seized upon that coast by any travellers: for the winde contineth there for the most part North-east, and East North-east: so upon the other boopse by the next boopage we were in a manner with the Island, and had room enough to double the same.

The 8. day we kept our course as neere the winde as we could, because that our due course to fetch the coast of Barbary, was South-east and by East, but by the scant winde we could not goe our due course, but went as neere it as we could, and ranne this day and night 27. leagues.

The 9. day we ranne 30. leagues, the 10. 25. leagues, the 11. 24.

The 12. day we saw a faile under our Lee, which was as we thought a fisherman, so that we went downe to have spoken with him, but within one houre there fell such a foggie, that we could not see the shippe nor one of us the other: we shot off divers pieces to the Hinde, but she heard them not: at after noone the shot off a piece which wee heard, and made her answer with another: and within one halfe houre after the foggie brake up, and we were within 4. leagues of the shoare upon the coast of Barbarie, and were sounded and had 24. fathom water. The Barke also came roomie with us and there ancred by reason of the contrary winde. When we fell with the lande, we could not judge justly what part of the land it was; because the most part of that coast is lowe land, and no part to be judged of it but the forepart of the shoare, which is white like chalke or sande, and being deep into the hard shoare: there immediately wee beganne to fish, and founde great store of a kinde of fish which the Portugals commonly fish for upon that coast; which they call Pergosles, the Frenchmen call them Saders, and our men, salt water bycames. Before the clearing up of the foggie, the shippe which we followed shapen us such a course that wee could see her no more, by reason of our shooting off to finde the Hinde againe. This part of the coast of Barbarie, by our Pilots reckoning is about 126. leagues to the Eastward of the rivier del Oro.

Rivier del Oro

The 13. day in the after noone wee spied a saile coming towards us, which wee judged to be the saile that wee sawe the day before, and as soone as wee spied him we raised the Hinde to way her ancre and to goe towards him, and manned out our Schiffe in like case to laye him aboard, to discern what hee was, and we our selves within halfe an houre after wayed also:
but after the saile had espied us, he kept about, and turned backe againe, and shortly after there fell such another foggie, that wee could not see him: which foggie continued all that night, so that we were constrained to leave the chace. This after noone the winde came about, and we went our course South-west, and by West, to goe cleare off the coast, and we ranne that night 16. leagues.

The fourteenth day in the morning was very foggie: but about twelke a clocke wee espied a Caruell of 60. ranne which was fishing, and we sent our Schiffe to him with five men, and all without any weapon saving their Dares. The Caruell for halfe let slippe her ancre, and see saile; and they seeing that, fearing that they should not fetch her, woulde cry for no weapons, and in the ende overtook the Caruell, and made her to strike saile, and brought her away, although they had foureteene or sixteen men aboard, every man his weapon, but they had not the heart to resist our men. After they were come to us, they let fall their ancre, for wee had cast ancre because the winde was not good: I caused then the Schiffe to come for mee, and I went aboard of them to see that no harme should be done to them, nor to take any thing but that which they might spare us for our money. So we tooke of them three Capnets of figges, two small pees of ape, 2. pees of water soure hogged heads of salt fish which they had taken upon the coast, and certaine stey fish which they did not esteeme, because there is such store upon that coast, that in an houre and sometime lesse, a man may take as much fish as will suffice threete men a day.
In these things, and for some wine which wee byanke aboard of them, and ches of foure great cannes which they sent aboard of our Schippes, I payed them twentie and seven Pilsolers, which was twice as much as they willingly would have taken; and so let them goe to their ancre and cable which they had let slippe, and got it againe by our helpe. After this we set saile, but the wind caused us to ancre againe about 12 leagues off the river Del oro, as the Portugals tolde vs. There were 5 Canoes more in this place, but when they came vs, they made all away for feare for vs.

The Tropike of Cancer is 23. and a halfe.

The 15. day we rode still because of the winde. The 16. day we set saile and ranne our course 40. leagues. This day by the reckoning of our Pilots, we were right under the Tropike of Cancer. The 17. day we ranne 25. leagues with in sight for the most part of the coast of Barbarie.

Cape Blanco.

The 18. day we ranne 20. leagues, and at 12. of the clocke by the reckoning of our Pilots we were thwart of Cape Blanco.

Cape Verde.

The 19. day we ranne our course 30. leagues. The 20. day we ranne 26. leagues, the 21. 34. leagues, and the 22. 30. leagues. And this 22. day our Pilots reckoned vs to be thwart of Cape Verde.

8. Degreers and a halfe. December.

The 23. day we ranne our course 28. leagues, the 24. 25. leagues, the 25. 12. leagues, the 26. 12. leagues, the 27. 15. leagues, the 28. by reason we were becalmed, but 3. leagues, the 29. 25. leagues, the 30. 8. leagues; and this day at 12. of the clocke, we found our selues to be in 8. degreers and a halfe of latitude.

The first of December we ranne 20. leagues, the 2. day being becalmed, but 4. leagues, the 3. day 16. leagues.

The 4. day we had terrible thunder and lightning, with exceeding gre at gusts of raine called Ternados, which continued not about halfe an houre; we ranne our course 28. leagues.

The 5. day we ranne 20. leagues, the 6. day 8. leagues by reason of variable winde, the 7. day but 4. leagues.

The 8. day we had more thunder and lightning, and we ranne about 6. leagues. The 9. day we ranne 8. leagues, the 10. day 10. leagues, the 11. day 12. leagues.

The coast of Guinea.

The 12. day we had sight of the land of Guinea, which as soone as we sawe we halled into the lande North-east; and about 12. of the clocke at night we were nere the shoare within less then 2. leagues; and then we kept about and sounded, and founde 18. fadom water. Afterwards we saw a light towards the shoare, which we thought to have bene a shippe, and thereby judged it to be the river de Sestos, which light as soone as we espied, we came to an ancre and armed our toppes, and made al things ready to fight, because we doubted that it might be some Portugall or French man; this night we remained at an ancre, but in the morning we sawe no man, onely we espied 4. rocks about 2. English miles from vs, one great rock, and the three other small ones, which when we sawe, we supposed that the light came from the shoare, and so weaped and set saile East South-east along the shoare, because the Piloter did not well knowe the place, but thought that we were not so farre to the East as the river de Sestos.

This land all along is a low land, and full of very high trees all along the shoare, so that it is not possible to knowe the place that a man doeth fall to, excepte it be by the latitude: In these 24. houres I thinke we ranne 16. leagues, for all the night we had a great gale as we were under saile, and had withall stoye of thunder and lightning.

The 13. day for the most part we ranne East South-east all along the shoare, within 2. leagues alwayes of the same, and founde the land all as at the first, full of woods and great rocks harde above the shoare, and the billowes beating so foze, that the Ras brake upon the shoare as white as snowe, and the water mounted so high that a man might easily discern it foure leagues off in such wise that no boate could land there. Thus we ranne untill twelve of the clocke, and then theyooke I summe after judged them selves to be 24. leagues past the river de Sestos to the Eastward, by reason whereof we halke into the shoare within two English miles, and there ancreed and founde fifteene fadom water, and all off from the shoare the sea so smooth, that we might well have rode by an Hawker. All that after noone we reinnued our boate and made her a saile, to the ende that she might goe along by the shoare to seeke some place to water in; for we could not goe backe againe to the river de Sestos, because the winde blowes alwayes contrary, and the current runneth alwayes to the Eastward, which was also against vs.

The Current sitting Eastward.

The fourteenth day we set saile and went backe againe along the coast, and sent our boates two adooze the shoare to seeke a watering place, which they founde about twelve of the clocke, and we being sure that the sea, twice with divers boates of the Countrey, small, long and narrow, and in every boate one man, and no more, to the game their bread which they beare, and were very glad of it. About foure of the clocke our boates came to vs with fresh water; and this night we

 English mile of the shoare, and there we ancred, in a manner before the mouth of the Riuer, and then we sent our boates into the Riuer for water, which went about a mile within the Riuer, where they had very good water. This Riuer lyeth by estimation eight leagues beyond the Ri-uer de Sefos, and is called in the Carde, Riuer S. Vincent, but it is so harde to finde, that a boate being within halfe a mile of it, shall not be able to discern that it is a Riuer: by reason that at directly before the mouth of it, there lyeth a ledge of rocks, which is much broader then the Riuer, so that a boate must runne in along the shoare a good way betwixt the rocks, and the shoare before it come to the mouth of the Riuer, and being within it, it is a great Riuer and diuers other Riuers falls into it: The going into it is somewhat ill, because that at the entering, the seas doe goe somewhat high, but being once within it it is as calme as the Thames.

There are neere to the sea upon this Riuer diuers inhabitants, which are mightie bigge men and goe all naked except some thing before their priuie partes, which is like a clothe about a quarter of a yerde long made of the barke of trees, and yet it is like a clothe: for the barke is of that nature, that it will spinne small after the maner of linnen. Some of them also weare the like by-on their heades being painted with diuers colours, but the most part of them goe bare headed, and their heades are clipped and shorne of diuers sortes, and the most part of them haue their skiuir of their bodies rased with diuers workes, in maner of a leather Jerkin. The men and women goe so alike, that one cannot knowe a man from a woman but by their heades, which in the most part be very foule and long, hanging downe lowe like the bodde of a goatte,

This same morning we went into the Riuer with our Skiffe, and carried certaine basons, ma-nels, &c. And there we tooke that day one hogthead and 100. li. waight of graine, and two O-lephants teeth at a reasonable good reckoning: We solde them both basons, and Spanellios, and Margarets, but they desired most to haue basons: For the most part of our basons we had by estimation about 30. li. for a peece, and for an Olyphants tooth of 30. li. waight, we gaue them 6.

The 16. day in the morning we went into the Riuer with our Skiffe, and tooke some of euery sort of our Spatchhandie with vs, and shewed it to the Negroes, but they esteemed it not, but made light of it, and also of the basons, Spanellios and Margarets, which yesterday they did buy: howbeit for the basons they would haue giuen vs some graines, but to no purpose, so that this day we tooke not by estimation about one hundred pound waight of graine, by means of their Captaine, who would suffer no man to sell any thing but through his handes, and at his price: hee was so subtil, that for a bason hee would not giue 15. pounde waight of graine, and sometimes would offer vs small distils, whereas before wee had baskets full, and when hee sawe that wee would not take them in contentment, the Captaine departed, and caused all the rest of the boates to depart, thinking belike that we would haue followed them, and haue giuen them their owne askings. But after that we perceiued their fetch, we wayed our Grapnel and went away, and then we went on lande in a small Towne to see the fashions of the Countrey, and there came a threelooke of them about vs, and at the first they were afraid of vs, but in the ende perceiuing that we did no hurt, they would come to vs and take vs by the hande and bee familiar with vs, and then we went into their Townes, which were like to twentie small houels, all covered ouer with great leaues and baggage, and all the sides open, and a scaffolde vnder the house about a yerde high, where they worke many pretie thinges of the barkes of trees, and there they lye also. In some of their houses they worke yon and make faire bartes, and diuers other thinges to worke their boates, and other things withall, and the women worke as well as the men. But when we were there diuers of the women to the we vs pleasure daunced and sung after their maner, full ill to our eares. Their song was thus:
 Sakere, fakere, ho, ho, Sakere, fakere, ho, ho.

And with these wordes they leape and daunce and clappe their handes. Besides wee coulde see none that they had, but two goattes, small dogges, and small heimes: other beastes wee sawe none. After that wee had well marked all thinges we departed and went aboarde our Shippes, which thing the Captaine of the other to wone perceiuing, sent 2. of his seruants in a boate with a basket of graine, and made vs signes that if when we had slepe we would come againe into their Riuer, we should haue store of graine, and so shewed vs his graine and departed.

The 17. day in the morning because we thought that the Negroes would haue done something because the captaine sent for vs, I required the Spatter to goe on shoare, and sent the rest of our Spatchants

merchants with him, and caried aboarde my selfe by reason that the last dayes affirmed our things so litle: so when the Spasser & the rest came into the river, the Capitaine with diuers others came to them, and broughte graines with them, and after that hee sawe that I was not there, hee made signes to know where I was, and they made signes to him againe that I was in the ship: and then he made signes to know who was Capitaine by the name of Diago, for so they call their Capitaine, and they pointed to the Spasser of the Shippe: then hee beganne to shewe his graines, but he held them so vntreasonably, that there was no profite to be made of them: which things the Spasser perceiuing, and seeing that they had no store of graines, came away, and tooke not above 50. pound waighe of graines. Then hee went a shoare to the litle towne where we were the day before, and one of them plucked a godw, wherewith the Negroes were offended, and came many of them to our men with their darts and great targets, and made signes to them to depart: which our men did, hauing but one bowe and 2. or 3. swoodes, and went aboarde the boate and came away from them: and as soon as they were come aboarde we wayed & set saile, but the winde was off the sea, so that we could not get one cleare of certaine rocks, & therefore we came to an ancre againe.

This river is called Riuer S. Vincent, standing in 4. degrees and a halfe, & it ebberth and floweth there euery 12. houres, but not much water when it ebberth the most: while we were there, it ebbed 1. fadome and a halfe of water.

This countrey as farre as we could perceiue is altogether woody, and all strange trees, whereof we know none, and they were of many sorts, with great leaues like great dockes, which bee higher then any man is able to reach the toppes of them.

There are certaine peason by the sea side, which growe vpon great and very long stalkes, one of the stalkes I measured and found it 27. paces long, and doeth grow vpon the sand like to trees, and that so neere the sea, that sometimes the sea floweth into the woods as wee might perceiue by the water markes.

The trees and all things in this place grow continually greene. Diuers of the women haue such exceeding long beastes, that some of them will lay the same vpon the ground and lie downe by them, but all the women haue not such beastes.

At this place all the day the winde bloweth off the sea, and all the night off the lande, but wee found it to differ sometimes, which our Spasser marueled at.

This night at 9. of the clocke the winde came by at the East, which ordinarily about that time was wont to come out of the North North west off the shoare: yet we wayed and halled off South with that winde all night into the sea, but the next morning we halled in againe to the lande, and tooke in 6. Tunnes of water for our Shippe, and I thinke the Hindeooke in as much.

I could not perceiue that here was any golde, or any other good things for people be so wilde and idle, that they giue themselves to seeke out steeching: if they would take paines they might gather great store of graines, but in this place I could not perceiue 2. tunne.

There are many foules in the countrey, but the people will not take the paines to take them. I obserued some of their wordes of speech, which I thought good here to set downe.

The 18. day towards night, as we were sayling along the coast, we met with certaine boats in the sea, & the men shewed vs that there was a riuer thwart of vs, where there were graines to be sold, but we thought it not good to carie there, least the other ships should get before vs. This riuer had lying before it 3. great rocks, and 5. small rocks, one great tree, and a litle creet right by the riuer, which in height exceeded all the rest: we halled this night along the coast 10. leagues.

The 19. day as we coasted the shoare, about twelue of the clocke there came out to vs 3. boates to tell vs that they had graines, & brought some with them for a shew, but we could not carie there.

we could not carie there.

we proceeded along the coast, & ankered by the shoare all the night, and ran this day 10. leagues.

The twentieth day, the Spinde hauing ankered by vs amongst rockes, and soule ground, lost a small anker. At noone, as we passed along the coast, there came forth a Negro to vs, making signes, that if we would goe a shoare, wee should haue graines; and where we ankered at night, there came another to vs, and brought graines, and shewed vs them; and made signes that wee should tarp, and made a fire vpon the land in the night, meaning thereby to tel vs where we should land, and so they did in diuers other places vpon the coast, where they saue vs to anker.

In all the places that we haue ankered, since we came from our toatring place, we haue found the tide alwaies running to the Westwards, and all along the coast many rockes hard aboard the shoare, and many of them a league of the shoare or more, we ran this day twelue leagues.

The 21. day, although we ranne all day with a good gale of winde, yet the tides came so foze out of the coast, that we were not able to runne about six leagues: and this day there came some Negroes to vs, as there had done other times.

The 22. we ranne all day and night, to double a point, called Dos palmas, and ranne sixteene leagues.

The 23. day, about thre of the clocke, we were thwart of the point, and before we came to the westermost part of it, we saue a great ledge of rockes, which lie west from the Cape, about thre leagues, and a league or more from the land. Shortly after, we had sight of the Eastermost part of the Cape, which lieth foure leagues from the Westermost part, and vpon the very corner thereof, lie two greene places, as it were closes, and to the westwards of the Cape, the land parted from the Cape, as it were a Baye, whereby it may well be knowen. Foure leagues more beyond that, there lieth a head land in the sea, and about two leagues beyond the head lande, there goeth in a great Bay, as it were a riuer, before which place we ankered all that night, which we did, least in the night we should ouerrunne a riuer, where the last yere, they had all their Elephants teeth.

This Cape Dos palmas, lieth vnder foure degrees and a halfe, and betwixt the said Cape, and the riuer de Sestos, is the greatest store of graines to be had, and being past the said Cape, there is no great store els where.

Where we ankered this night, we found that the tide, which before ranne alwaies to the westward, from this Cape runneth all to the Eastward: this day we ranne some 16. leagues.

The 24. day running our course, about eight of the clocke there came forth to vs certaine boates, which brought with them small egges, which were soft without shels, and they made vs signes, that there was within the land fresh water, and Goates: and the Spatter thinking that it was the riuer which we sought, cast anker, and sent the boate on shoare, with one that knewe the riuer, and comming neere the shoare, he perceived that it was not the riuer, and so came backe againe, and went along the shoare, with their oares and saile, and wee waied, and ranne along the shoare also: and being thirtene leagues beyond the Cape, the Spatter perceived a place, which he iudged to be the riuer, when we were in deede two miles short past it: yet the boate came from the shoare, and they that were in her, said, that there was no riuer: notwithstanding we came to an anker, and the Spatter and I tooke five men with vs in the boate, and when he came neere the shoare, he perceived that it was the same riuer which he did seeke: so we rowed in, and found the entrance very ill, by reason that the sea goeth so high; and being entred, diuers boates came to vs, and shewed vs that they had Elephants teeth, and they brought vs one about eight pound, and a litle one of a pound, which we bought: then they brought certaine teeth to the riuer side, making signes, that if the next day we would come againe, they would sell vs them: so we gaue vnto two Capitaines, to either of them a manillio, and so we departed, and came aboard, and sent out the other boate to another place, where certaine boates that came into the sea, made vs signes that there was fresh water: and being come thither, they found a towne, but no riuer, yet the people brought them fresh water, and shewed them an Elephants tooth, making signes that the next day they would sell them teeth, and so they came aboard.

This riuer lieth by the Carde thirtene leagues from the Cape Dos palmas, and there lieth to the westwards of the same, a rocke about a league in the sea, and the riuer it selfe hath a point of land comming out into the sea, where vpon groweth five trees, which may well be discerned two or thre leagues of, comming from the westward, but the riuer can not be perceived w'ill such time, as a man be hard by it, and then a man may perceiue a litle towne on each side the riuer, and to each towne there belongeth a Capitaine. The riuer is but small, but the water is good and fresh.

Two miles beyond the riuer, where the other towne is, there lieth another point into the sea, which is greene like a close, and not about six trees vpon it, which growe out of them from the other, other, whereby the coast may well be knowne: for along all the coast that we haue hitherto sailed by, I haue not seene so much bare land.

In this place, and three or foure leagues to the westward of it, all along the shoare, there grow many Palme trees, whereof they make their wine De Palma. These trees may easily be knowne almost two leagues off, for they be very high, and white bodied, and straight, and be biggest in the middes: they haue no boughes, but onely a round bush in the toppe of them: and at the toppe of the same trees, they haue a hole, and there they hang a bottell, and the ioyce of the tree runneth out of the said hole into the bottell, and that is their wine.

*Cape Tres

From the Cape Dos palmas, to the Cape Tres puntas, there are 100. leagues: and to the port where we purpose to make sales of our cloth beyond the Cape Tres puntas, forty leagues.

Note: that betwixt the riuer De Sestos, and the Cape Dos palmas, is the place where all the graines be gathered.

The language of the people of this place, as farre as I could perceiue, differeth not much from the language of those, which dwell where we watered before: but the people of this place be more gentle in nature then y other, & goodlier men: their building & apparel is all one with the others.

Their desire in this place was most of all to haue Spanillios and Spargacets, as for the rest of our things, they did little esteeme them.

The 25. day, being the day of the natiuitie of Christ, we sent our boates and skiffes for water for our shippes, which that day filled as much water, as we had caskes emptye, which was about two tunnes for vs, and one tunne for the Spane.

Their manner of swearing by the water of the sea.

About nine of the clocke, there came boates to vs forth, from both of the places aforesaide, and brought with them certaine teeth, and after they had caused me to swear by the water of the sea, that I would not hurt them, they came aboard our shippe three of foure of them, and we gaue them to eate of all such things as we had, and they did eate and drinke of all things, as well as we our selues. Afterwardes we bought all their teeth, which were in number foureteene, and of those foureteene there were ten small: afterwardes, they departed, making vs signes, that the next day we should come to their towines.

The 26. day, because we would not trifle long at this place, I required the Spaster to goe wth to one of the towines, and to take two of our marchants with him, and I my selfe went to the other, and tooke one with me, because these two towines stand three miles asunder. To these places we caried somewhat of euery kind of marchandize that we had: and he had at the one towine, nine teeth, which were but small, and at the other towine where I was, I had eleuen, which were also not bigger, and we left aboard with the Spaster, certaine manillios, wherewith he bought twelue teeth aboard the shippe, in our absence: and hauing bought these of them, we perceiued that they had no more teeth: so in the place where I was, one brought to me a small goate, which I bought, and to the Spaster of the other place, they brought five small hennes, which he bought also, and after that, we sawe there was nothing els to be had, we departed, and by one of the clocke, we met aboard, and then waied, and went East our course eightene leagues still within sight of land.

The 27. day we ranne twentie leagues,

The 28. the wind varied, and we ranne into the sea, and the wind comming againe off the sea, we fell with the land againe, and the first of the land which we raised, shewed as a great red cliffe round, but not very high, and to the Eastward of that, another smaller red cliffe, and right about that, into the land a round hammoke, and greene, which we tooke to be trees. We ranne in these 24. houres, not about foure leagues.

The 29. day comming neere to the shoare, we perceiued the red cliffe aforesaide, to haue right vpon the top of it a great beape of trees, and all to the westward of it full of red cliffes, as farre as we could see, and all along the shoare, as well vpon the cliffes, as otherwise, full of wood: within a mile of the said great cliffe, there is a riuer to the Eastward, and no cliffes, that we could see, except one small cliffe, which is hard by it. We ranne this day and night, twelue leagues.

The winds that we had in this place, by the reportes of the people, and of those that haue bene there, haue not bene seene often, but in the night, at North off the land, & in the day South off the sea, and most commonly North west, and South west.

The 30. day, we made our way twentie leagues.

The 31. day, we went our course by the shoare Northward: this land is all along a low shoare, and full of wood, as all the coast is, for the most part, and no rockes. This morning came out many boates, which went a fishing, which be greater boates then those which we sawe before, so that in some of them there sate five men, but the fashion of the boates is all one. In the afternoone about three of the clocke, we had sight of a towine hard by the sea side, which our Pilots iudged to be 25. leagues leagues to the westwards of the Cape, Tres puntas. About foure of the clocke we met with many fisher boates, but none of them would come nere to vs, sauing two of whome we bought certaine fish.

Between these two Capes, we haue found the wind freest in the day, and specially about ten of the clocke, with great gales: the nightes we found calmest. In these 24. houres we made way thirteen leagues.

The first day of Januarie in the morning, we perceined the lande to rise higher then it did be- Januarie.
fore, which our Pilots iudged to be the Cape, and halles in as nere to the land as they could:
we ranne this day twenty leagues.

The second day in the morning, when we were come nere to the place, our Pilots perceined that it was not the Cape, as they thought it had bene: we made way this day but eight leagues.

The third day in the morning, we fell with the Cape Tres puntas, and in the night passed, as Cape Tres Puntas.
our Pilots said, by one of the Pointingalls callies, which is eight leagues to the westwards of the Cape: upon the first sight of the Cape, we discerned it a very high land, and all growen over with trees, and comming nere to it, we perceined two head lands, as it were two Bayes betwix them, which opened right to the westward, and the uttermost of them is the Caserne Cape, there we perceined the middle Cape, and the Eastmost Cape: the middle Cape standeth not aboue a league from the west Cape, although the Caroe betwix them to be three leagues one from the other: and that middle Cape hath right before the point of it, a small rocke so nere to it, that it can not be discerned from the Cape, except a man be nere to the shoare, and vpon the same Cape standeth a great beape of trees, and when a man is thwart the same Cape, to the Eastward, there riseth hard by it a round greene hommoke, which commeth out of the maine.

The third Cape is about a league beyond the middle Cape, and is a high land like to the other Capes, and betwix the middle and the third commeth out a litle head or point of a land out of the maine, and diuers rocks hard aboard the shoare.

Before we came to the Capes, being about eight leagues off them, we had the lande Southeast, and by East, and being past the Capes, the land runneth in againe East North-east.

About two leagues beyond the farthest Cape, there is a low glade about two miles long, and then the land riseth high againe, and diuers head lands rise one beyond another, and diuers rocks lie at the point of the first head land. The middell of these Capes, is the nearest to the South-wards, I meane further into the sea, then any of the other, so that being to the Eastward of it, it may be discerned farre off, and being so to the Eastward, it riseth with two small rockes.

This day we anchored for feare of ouerthooting a towne, called S. Johns. We ranne this day not aboue eight leagues. In the afternoon this day, there came a boate of the countrey from the shoare, with five men in her, and went along by vs, as we thought, to discern our flaggs, but they would not come nere vs, and when they had well looked vpon vs, they departed.

The fourth day in the morning, sailing by the coast, we espyed a ledge of rockes by the shoare, and to the westwards of them two great greene hills standing together, so that betwix them it was hollowe, like a saddle, and within the said rockes, the Spatter thought the aforesaid towne had stode, and therefore we manned our boates, and took with vs cloth, and other marchandize, and towe a shoare, but going along by the coast, we sawe that there was no towne, therefore we went aboard againe.

From these two hills aforesaid, about two leagues to the Eastward, lie out into the sea almost two miles, a ledge of rockes, and beyond that a great Bay, which runneth into the North Northwestward, and the land in this place lieth North North-east along the shoare: but the uttermost point of the land in this place that we could see, lay North-east, and by East from vs.

After that we were with a small gale of wind runne past that uttermost head land, we sawe a great red cliffe, which the Spatter againe iudged to be the towne of S. Johns, and then weooke our boate with marchandise, and went thither, and when we came thither, we perceined that there was a towne vpon the toppe of the hill, and so we went toward it, and when we were hard by it, the people of the towne came together a great sort of them, and wauid vs to come in with a peece of cloth, and so we went into a very faire Baye, which lieth to the Eastward of the cliffe, wherupon on the towne standeth, and being within the cliffe, we let fall our graynell, and after that we had carried there a good space, they sent a boate aboard of vs, to shewe vs that they had golde, and they shew vs a peece about halfe a crowne weight, and required to knowe vs our measure, & our weight, that they might shew their Capaine thereof: and we gaue them a measure of two elles, and a weight of two Angels to shew vnto him, which theyooke, and went on shoare, and shew us to their Capaine, and then they brought vs a measure of two elles, one quarter and a halfe, and one

one cruasado weight of golde, making vs signes that so much they would giue, for the like measure, and kille they would not haue. After this, we tarried there about an houre, and when we sawe that they would doe no otherwise, and withall vnderstoode, that all the best places were before vs, we departed to our Shippes, and water, and ranne along the shoare, & went before with our boate, and hauing sailed about a league, we came to a point, where there lay forth a lodge of rocks, like to the others before spoken of, and being past that people, the spasser spere a place, which he said plainly was the towne of Don John: the night was come vpon vs, so that we could not well discern it, but we anchored as neere vnto the place as we could.

Don John.

The first day in the morning, we perceived it to be the same towne in deede, and we manned our boates, and went thither, and because that the last yeere the Portugals at that place tooke a way a man from them, and after shot at them with great bases, and did beate them from the place, wee let fall our grapnell almost a base (that is) of the shoare, and there we laye about two bowes, and no boates came to vs. Then certaint of our men, with the Indies boate, went into a Baye, which lieth to the Eastward of the Towne, and within that Baye, they found a goodly fresh river, and afterwards they came, and issued to vs also to come in, because they perceived the Negroes to come downe to that place, which we did: and immediately the Negroes came to vs, and made vs signes that they had golde, but none of them would come aboard our boates, neither could we perceive any boates that they had to come withall, so that we iudged that the Portugals had spoiled their boates, because we saw halfe of their towne destroyed.

After hauing staied there a good space, and seeing that they would not come to vs, thrust our boates heaves a shoare, being both well appointed, and then the Capitaine of the Towne came downe, being a graue man: and he came with his dart in his hand, and sixe tall men after him, & uery one with his dart, and his target, and their darts were all of yron, faire and sharpe, and there came another after them, which carried the Capitaine's shoule: we saluted him, and put off our caps, and botwed our selues, and he like one that thought well of himselfe, did not moue his cappe, nor scant botwed his body, and face him downe very solemnly vpon his shoule: but all his men put off their caps to vs, and botwed downe themselves.

He was clothed from the loines downe, with a cloath of that Countrey making, wrapped about him, and made fast about his loines with a girdle, and his cap of a certaine cloath of the Countrey also, and bare legges, and bare footed, and all bare about the loines, except his head.

His seruants, some of them had cloath about their loines, and some nothing but a cloath betwixt their legges, and made fast before, and behind, to their girdles, and caps of their owne making, some like a basker, and some like a great wide purse of beastes skinne.

Their weapons

All their cloath, cordes, girdles, fishing lines, and all such like things which they haue, they make of the bark of certaine trees, and thereof they can worke things very prettily, and yron worke they can make very fine, of all such things as they doe occupie, as darts, subookes, hooking yrons, yron heades, and great daggers, some of them as long as a wood kniue, which be of both sides exceeding sharpe, and bended after the manner of Turkie blades, and the most part of them haue hanging at their left side one of those great daggers.

Their targets be made of such pills as their cloath is made of, and very closely wrought, and they be in forme square, and very great, and somewhat longer then they be broad, so that kneeling downe, they make their targets to couer their whole body. Their bowes be short, and of a prettie strength, as much as a man is able to drawe with one of his fingers, and the string is of the bark of a tree, made flat, and about a quarter of an ynche broad: as for their arrowes, I haue not as yet seene any of them, for they had wrapped them vp close, and because I was busie, I coulde not stande about it, to haue them open them. Their golde also they worke very well.

When the Capitaine was set, I sent him two elles of cloath, and two basons, and gave them vnto him, and he sent againe for a waite of the same measure, and I sent him a weight of two Angels, which he would not take, neither would he suffer the towne to buy any thing, but the basons of brasse: so that we solde that day 74. basons, vnto the men of the towne, for about halfe an Angel weight, one with another, and nine white basons, which we solde for a quarter of an Angel a peece, or thereabouts.

We shewed them all our other things which we had, but they did not esteeme them.

About two of the cloath, the Capitaine, who did depart in the morning from vs, came againe, and brought with him to present me withall, a henne, and two great rootes, which I receiued, and after made me signes, that the countrey would come to his towne that night, and bring great store of golde, which in deed about 4. of the cloath they did: for there came about 100. men by day 3.

 Captaines,

Captaines, well appointed with their wares, and bowes, and when they came to vs, every man stiked vnto his wate upon the shoare, and the Captaines had foolcs brought them, and they face downe, and sent a young man aboard of vs, which brought a measure with him of an ell, and one fourth part, and one extreme part, and he would haue that foure times for a waight of one Angell, and twelue graines: I offered him two elles, as I had done before for two Angels weight, which he esteemed nothing, but still stucke at his foure measures of of said: yet in the ende, when it grew very late, and I made him signes that I would depart, he came to foure elles, for the weight abovesaid, and other wise he would not deale, and so we departed. This day we tooke for balons the ounces and a halfe, and one eight part.

The first day in the morning we manned our boates, and the shiffe well, for feare of the Por-tingals, which the last yeere had taken away a man from the other shippes, and went on shoare, and landed, because they had no boates to come to vs, and so the young man which was with vs the night before, was sent aboard, who seemed to haue dealt and bargained before with the Por-tingals, for he could speake a litle Portugall, and was perfect in weightes, and measures: at his coming, he offered vs as he had done before, one Angell, and twelue graines, for foure elles, and more he would not giue, and made signes; that if we would not take that, we should depart, which we did: but before we did in deede depart, I offered him of some rotten cloth three elles for his waight of an Angell, and twelue graines, which he would not take, and then we departed, making signes to him that we would goe away, as in deed we would haue done, rather then haue giuen that measure, although the cloth was ill, seeing we were so neere to the places, which we iudged to be better for sale. Then we went aboard our shippes, which lay about a league of, and came backe againe to the shoare for sande, and balaster: and then the Captaine perceiuing that the boates had brought no marchandise, but came onely for water, and sand, and seeing that we would depart, came vnto them, making signes againe, to knowe together we would not giue the foure elles, and they made signes againe, that we would giue them but three, and when they sawe that the boates were ready to depart, they came vnto them, and gaue them the weight of one Angell, and twelue graines, which we required before, and made signes, that if we would come againe, they would take three elles. So when the boates came aboard, we laid wares in them both, and for the speedier dispatch, I and John Sauill went in one boate, and the Master Iohn Makeworth, and Richard Curllin, in the other, and went on shoare, and that night I tooke for my part, fiftie and two ounces, and in the other boate they tooke eight ounces and a quarter, all by one weight, and measure, and so being very late, we departed, and went aboard, and tooke in all this day three pound.

The seventh day we went a shoare againe, and that day I tooke in our boate three pound, 19, ounces, so that we dispatched almost all the cloth that we caried with vs, before noone, and then many of the people were departed, & those that remained, had kiele golde, yet they made vs signes to fetch them some latten balons, which I would not, because I purposed not to trifle out the time, but goe thence with speede to Don Johns towne. But Iohn Sauill, and Iohn Makeworth, were desirous to goe againe: and I, loth to hinder them of any profit, consented, but went not my selfe:
 so they tooke eighteene ounces of gold, and came away, seeing that the people at a certaine crimade, were departed.

While they were at the shoare, there came a young fellow, which could speake a litle Portu-galle, with three more with him, and to him I solde 39. balons, and two small white sawcers, for three ounces, &c. which was the best reckoning that we did make of any balons: and in the fore-noone, when I was at the shoare, the Master solde five balons vnto the same fellow, for halfe an ounce of golde.

This fellow, as farre as we could perceiue, had bene taken into the Castle by the Portugals, and was gotten away from them, for he told vs, that the Portugals were bad men, and that they made them slaues, if they could take them, and would put yrons upon their legges, and besides he told vs, that as many Frenchmen, or Englishmen, as they could take (for he could name these two very well.) they would hang them: he told vs further, that there were 60. men in the castle, and that every yeere there came thither two shippes, one great, and one small cartuell, and further, that Don Iohn, had wares with the Portugals, which gaue me the better courage to goe to his towne, which lieth but foure leagues from the Castle, where hence our men were beaten the last yeere.

This fellow came aboard our shippe without feate, and as soone as he came, he demanded, why we had not brought againe their men, which the last yeere we tooke away, and could tell vs, that there were five taken away by Englishmen: we made him answer, that they were in England well

well used, and were there kept till they could speake the language, & then they should be brought againe, to be a helpe to Englishmen in this Countrey : and then he spake no more of that matter.

Our boates being come aboard, we landed, and set saile, and a litle after spied a great fire upon the shoare, and by the light of the fire we might discern a white thing, which they took to be the Castle, and for feare of overshooting the towne of Don Iohn, we there anchored, two leagues of the shoare, for it is hard to fetch vpp a towne here, if a shippe over shoot it. This day we tooke seven pound, and five ounces of golde.

This towne lieth in a great Bay, which is very deepe.

The people in this place desired most to haue balons, and cloth. They would bie some of them also, many trinkes, as knives, hoptetailes, hoxnes : and some of our men going a shoare, found a cappe, a dagger, a bat, &c.

They showed vs a certaine course cloth, which I thinke to be made in France : for it was course wooll, and a small rhyed, and as thicke as wollen, and striped with stripes of greene, white, yellow, &c. Divers of the people did weare about their neckes great beades of glasse of diuers colours. Here also I learned some of their language, as followeth :

Sight of the castle of spina.

Don Iohns towne desired best.

The eight day in the morning, we had sight of the Castle, but by reason of a miste that then fel, we could not haue the perfect sight of it, till we were almost at the towne of Don Iohn, and then it cleared vp, and we sawe it, and a white house, as it were a Chappell upon the hill about it : then we halled into the shoare, within two English miles of Don Iohns towne, and there anchored in souen sadom water. Here, as in many other places before, we perceiued that the current went with the winde.

The land here is in some places lowe, and in some high, and full of wood altogether.

The towne of Don Iohn is but litle, of about twentie houses, and the most part of the towne is walled in with a wall of a mans height, made with reede or sedge, or some such thing. Here we staied two or three ho wres after we had anchored, to see if any man would come vnto vs : and looking that none did come, we manned our boates, and put in marchandize, and went, and anchored with our boates nere to the shoare : then they sent out a man to vs, who made vs signes, that that was the towne of Don Iohn, and that he himselfe was in the Countrey, and would be at home at the going downe of the Sunne, and when he had done, he required a reward, as the most part of them will doe, which come first aboard, and I gave him one ell of cloth, and he departed, and that night we heard no more of him.

The ninth day in the morning, we went againe with our boates to the shoare, and there came forth a boate to vs, who made signes that Don Iohn was not come home, but would be at home this day : and to that place also came another boate from the other towne, a mile from this, which is called Don Deuis, and brought with him gold, to shew vs, making signes that we should come thither. I then left in this place Iohn Sauill, and Iohn Makevons, and tooke the Spinde, and went to the other towne, and there anchored, and tooke cloth, and went to shoare with the boate, and by and by the boates came to vs, and brought a measure of foure passos long & a halfe, and the wred vs a weight of an Angell, and twelue graines, which they would giue for so much, and not otherwise : I staied, and made no bargain. And all this day the barke lay at Don Iohns towne, and did nothing, hauing answer that he was not come home.

The tenth day we went againe to the shoare, and there came out a boate with good stoye of gold, and hauing giuen the matter off a long time, and hauing brought the measure to a naile lesse then three elles, and their weight to an Angell and twentie grains, and could not bring them to more, I did conclude with them and solde, and within one quarter of an ho wre, I tooke one pound and a quarter of an ounce of gold : and then they made me signes to carry, till they had parted their cloth upon the shoare, as their manner is, and they would come againe, and so they went away, and layd the cloth all abroad vpon the sand, peere by peere, and by and by one came running downe from the towne to them, and spake vnto them, & forthwith euery man made as much haste as he could away, and went into the woods, to hide his golde, and his cloth : we mistrusted some knowe rie, and being waied by them to come a shoare, yet we would not but went aboard the Hinde, and perceiued upon the hill 30. men which we iudged to be Portingals: and they went by to the toppe of the hill and there mustered and shewed themselves, hauing a flagge with them. They being desirous to know what the Harb did, tooke the Hinde's boate and went towards her, and when it came nere to them, they shot off two pieces of ordnance which I marvelled at: I made as much haste as I could to her, and met her boate & Schiffe coming from the shoare in all haste, and wee met aboard together. They shewed me that they had bene a shoare all that day, and had giuen to the

2. sonnes of Don Iohn, to either of them 3. parces and a halfe of cloth, and 3. balons betwixt them, and had deliuered him more 3. yards of cloth and the waight of an Angel and 12. graines, and being on land did carie for his answer, and in the meane time the Portingals came running from the hill upon them, wherof the Negroes a litle before had giuen them warning, and had them to goe away but they perceiued it not. The sonne of Don Iohn conspired with the Portingals against them, so that they were almost shot upon them, but yet they recouered their boate and set off from the shoare, and the Portingals shot their calkeeters at them, but hurt no man, and then the Shippe perceiuing it, shot off the 2. pieces aforesaid among them. Whereupon, we layed bales in both the boates, and in the Schiffe and manned them well, and went a shoare againe, but because of the winde we could not land, but lay off in the sea about 10. stoye and shot at them, but the hill succoured them, and they from the rocks and from the hilles shot at vs with their halfe bakes, & the Negroes more for feare then for loue stood by them to helpe them, and when we sawe that the Negroes were in such subiection vnto them that they durst not sell vs any thing for feare of them we went aboard, and that night y<sup>e</sup> winde kept at the East, so that we could not with our ship fetch the Hinde, but I tooke the boate in the night and went aboard the barke to see what was there to be done, and in the morning we perceiued the towne to be in like case layd with Portingals, so we wayed & went along the coast. This towne of Iohn de Viso standeth vpon an hill like the towne of Don Iohn, but it hath bene burned, so that there are not passing 6. houses in it: the most part of the golde that comes thither comes out of the coast, & no doubt if the people durst for feare of y<sup>e</sup> Portingals bring forth their golde, there would be had good stoye: but they dare not sell any thing, their subiection is so great to the Portingals. The 1. day running by the shoare we had sight of a litle towne 4. leagues fro the last to tunc that we came from, & about halfe a league from that of another towne vpo a hill, & halfe a league from that also of another great towne vpo the shoare: whither we went to see what could there be done if we would doe nothing, then to returne to the other towne, because wee thought that the Portingals would leaue the towne vpon our departure. Here grew some contention about one Gresham aboard the Hinde, who refused to undertake further paines without further wages: but the matter was quieted, for Packman tooke the charge which he refused, and so wee went towards the shoare, but the winde scanted so that we could not doe it. Along from the castles into this place are very high hilles which may be seene aboue all other hilles, but they are full of wood, & great red cliffs by the sea side. The boates of these places are somewhat large & bigge, for one of them will carry 12. men, but their foyme is alike with the former boats of the coast. There are about these towne's few riuers: their language differeth not fro the language vsed at Don Iohns towne: but euery one can speake 3. or 4. wordes of Portugiue, which they vsed altogether to vs.

We saw this night about 5. of the clocke 22. boates running along the shoare to the Westward, wherupon we suspected some knauierte intended against vs. The 12. day therefore we set saile and went further along the coast, & descried more towne's, wherin were greater houses then in the other towne's, & the people came out of the towne's to looke vpon vs, but we could see no boates.
Two mile beyond the Eastmost towne are blacke rocks, which blacke rocks continue to y<sup>e</sup> bitter-most cape of the land, which is about a league off, & then y<sup>e</sup> land runnes in East northeast, & a sandy shoare againe: vpon these blacke rocks came downe certaine Negroes, which waied vs to a white flag, but we perceiuing y<sup>e</sup> principal place to be nere, would not stay, but bare still along the shoare:
and as soone as we had opened y<sup>e</sup> point of the land, we raised another head land about a league of the point, which had a rocke lying off it into the sea, & that they thought to be the place which we sought. When we came almost thwart the place they knew it, & we put wares into our boate, & the ship being within halfe a mile of the place ancred in y<sup>e</sup> sadom water, and faire ground. We went on shoare with our boate, and ancred about 10. of the clocke in the forenoon: we saw many boates lying vpon the shoare, and diuers came by vs, but none of them would come nere vs, bring as we iudged astrayed of vs: because that foure men were taken perforce the last yeere from this place, so that no man came to vs, wherupon we went aboard againe, and thought here to haue made no sale: yet towards night a great foze came downe to the water side, and waied vs on shoare with a white flagge, and afterwarde their Captaine came downe and many men with him, and late him downe by the shoare vnder a tree: which when I perceiued, I tooke things with me to giue him: at last he sent a boate to call to vs, which would not come neere vs, but made vs signes to come againe the next day: but in fine, I got them to come aboard in offering them things to giue to their captaine, which were two ellcs of cloth, one laxon bason, one white bason, a bottle, a great piece of beete, & 6. bisket cakes, which they receiued making vs signes to come againe the next day, saying, that their Captaine was Grand Capirane as appeared by those that attended vpon him with their darts, and targets, and other weapons.

This towne is very great and stands vpon a hill among trees, so that it cannot well be seen except a man be neere it: to the Eastward of it vpon the hill hard by the towne stand two high trees, which is a good marke to knowe the towne. And vnder the towne lieth another hill lower then it, whereupon the sea beates: and that ende next the sea is all great blacke rocks, and beyond the towne in a bay lieth a nother small towne.

The 13. day in the morning wee tooke our boate and went to shoare, and stayed till came a clocke and no man came to vs: wee went about therefore to returne aboord, and when the Negroes sawe that, they came running downe with a flagge to waite vs againe, so wee adreced againe, and then one shewed vs that the Captaine would come downe by and by: wee sawe a saile in the meane time passe by vs, but it was small, and wee regarded it not. Being on shoare wee made a Tilt with our Dares and saile, and then there came a boate to vs with five men in her, who brought vs againe our bottle, and brought me a henne, making signes by the sunne, that within 2. houres the marchants of the countrey would come downe and buye all that wee had: so I gaue them 6. Spanillios to carry to their Captaine, and they made signes to haue a pledge of vs, and they would leaue vs another man: and we willing to doe so, put one of our men in their boate, but they would not giue vs one of theirs, so wee tooke our man againe, and there carried for the marchants: and shortly after one came downe ataped like their Captaine, with a great traine after him, who saluted vs friendly, and one of the chiefest of them went & late downe vnder a tree, where the last yere the Captaine was wout to sit: and at last we perceiued a great many of them to stand at the ende of a hollow way, & behinde them the Portingals had planted a base, who suddenly shot at vs, but ouerthot vs, and yet we were in a maner hard by them, and they shot at vs againe before we could ship our oares to get away, but did no hurt. When the Negroes came to the rocks hard by vs, and discharged Calceuers at vs, and againe the Portingals shotte off their base twice more, and then our ship shot at them, but the rocks and hills defended them.

Then we went aboard to goe from this place, seeing the Negroes bent against vs, because that the last yere M. Gainsh did take away the Captaines sonne, and 3. others from this place with their gold, and all that they had about them: which was the cause that they became friends with the Portingals, whom before they hated as did appeare the last yere by the courteous intertainment which the Trinitie had there, when the Captaine came aboord the ship, and brought them to his towne, and offered them ground to build a castile in, and there they had good sales.

The 14. day we wayed & pilen backe againe to seeke the Hinde, which in 5. morning we met, and so we turned both backe to 5. Eastwards to see what we could do at that place where the Trinitie did sel her 8. stifles the last yere. The Hinde had taken 18. ounces & a halfe more of golde of other Negroes, the day after that we left them. This day about 1. of the clocke we espied certaine boates vpon the sand & men by them, and went to them with marchandises, and took 3. ounces of gold for 18. suffs of cloth, euery suffe 3. yardes & a halfe after one Angel, and 12. graines the suffe, and then they made me signes that the next day I should haue golde ynough: so the Hatter tooke the Hinde with Iohn Sauil, and Iohn Makeworth, & went to seeke the place aforesaid, & I with Richard Pakeman remained in this place, to see what we could doe the next days: and when the Negroes perceiued our ship to go away, they feared that the other would follow, & so sent forth 2. boats to vs with 4. men in them, requiring vs to carry & to giue them one man for a pledge, and 2. of them should carry with vs for him, so Edward M. Morleis seruant seeing these men so earnest therein offered himselfe to be pledge, & we let him go for 2. of them, one whereof had vs waights and scales, and a chaine of gold about his necke, and another about his arme. They did eate of such things as we had and were well contented. In the night the Negroes kept a light vpon the shoare the west of vs, & about 1. of the clocke we hard & saw the light of a base which shot off twice at the said light, and by 5. by discharged 2. calceuers, which in the end we perceiued to be 5. Portingals, which they followed vs to place to place, to giue warning to the people of the countrey, that they should not deale with vs. The 15. day in the morning the captaine came downe with 100. men with him, and brought his wife, & many others brought their wines also, because their towne was 8. mile by in the Countrey, and they determined to lie by the sea side till they had bought what they would.

When he was come he sent our man aboard, and required to haue two men pledges, and he himself would come aboard, and I sent him 2. of whom he tooke but one, and so came aboard vs, he and his wife, with diuers of his friends, & brought me a goat, and two great rootes, & I gave him againe a lacton balon, a white balon, 6. manillas, and a bottel of Spalmeite, and to his wife a smal raker. After this we began to make our measure and weight: and hee had a waight of his owne which held one Angel and 14. graines, and required a measure of 4. elles and a halfe. In fine we concluded the 8. part for one Angel, and 20. graines, and before wee had done, they tooke mine owne weight and measure.

The 16. day I tooke 8. li. 1. ounce of gold: and since þ departure of the Hinde I had not of her, but when our pledge went into the countrey the first night, he said he saw her cast ancre about five leagues from this place. The 17. day I sold about 17. pierces of cloch, andooke 4. li. 4. ounces and a halfe of gold. The 18. day the captaine desired to haue some of our wine, and offered halfe a bucker of gold for a bottel: but I gave it him freely, and made him and his traine vnder his belides. And this day also I tooke 5. li. 5. ounces of gold. The 19. day we sold about 18. clothes, andooke 4.
li. 4. ounces and one quarter of golde.

The 20. day we tooke 3. li. 6. ounces and a quarter of gold. The 21. we tooke 8. li. 7. ounces and a quarter. The 22. 7. li. 8. ounces & a quarter. And this night about 4. of the clocke the captaine who had layen all this while vpon the shoare, went away with all the rest of the people with him.

The 23. day we were waied a shoare by other Negroes, and solde them cloch, caskets, knives, and a dosen of bels, andooke 1. li. 10. ounces of gold. The 24. like wise we sold bels, sheeres, and shindles, andooke 2. li. 1. ounce, and a quarter of golde. The 25. day we sold 7. dosen of smal bels, and other things, and then perceiving their gold to be done, we wayed & set saile and went to leeward to seeke the Hinde, and about 5. of the clocke at night we had sight of her, and bare with her, and vnderstood that she had made some sales. The 26. day we receiued out of the Hinde 48. li. 3. ounces, & 1. eight part of gold, which they had taken in the time that we were from them. And this day vpon the request of a Negro that came vnto vs from a captaine, we went to shoare with our merchandise, andooke 7. li. and 1. ounce of gold. At this place they required no gages of vs, but at night they sent a man aboard vs, which lay with vs all night, because we might knowe that they would also come to vs the next day. The 27. day in both our Shippes we tooke 8. li. 1. ounce, three quarters and halfe a quarter of golde. The 28. we made sales for the companie, andooke
1. li. and halfe an ounce of golde. The 29. day in the morning we heard 2. saleures shot off vpon the shoare, which we iudged to be either by the Portingals, or by the Negroes of the Portingals: we manned our boates and armed our selues and went to shoare, but could finde nothing: for they were gone. The 30. day we made more sales for the companie, and for the Masters.

The 31. we sent our boate to shoare to take in sand for ballast, and there our men mette the Negroes, with whom they had made sale the day before a fishing, which did helpe them to fill lande, and hauing no gold, sold fish to our men for their handkerchiefs, and nightkerchiefs.

The 1. day of Februarie we wayed and went to another place, andooke 1. li. 9. ounces 3. quarters of gold. The 2. day we made more sales: but hauing bin wred our victuals, we determined to tarie no long time vpon the coast, because the most part of our drinke was spent, and that which remained grew soure. The 3. and 4. dayes we made some sales, though not greatly, and finding the winde this 4. day to come off the shoare, wee set saile & ranne along the shoare to the Westwards: vpon this coast we found by experience, that ordinarily about 2. of the clocke in the night the winde comes off the shoare at Northnortheast, and so continueth untill 8. of the clocke in the morning: and at the rest of the day and night it comes out of the Southwest: and as for the tide of current vpon this shoare, it goeth continually with the winde. The 5. day we continued sayling, and thought to haue met with some English ships, but found none.

The 6. day we went our course Southwest to fetch vnder the line, and ranne by estimation 24. leagues. The 7. day we ranne about 20. leagues, the 8. day, 12. leagues, the 9. day, 16. leagues, the 10. day, 18. leagues, the 11. day, 16. leagues, and so many more the 12. day.

The 13. day we thought our selues by our reckoning to be cleare of the Cape dos Palmas, and ranne 12. leagues.

The 14. day we ranne 16. leagues, the 15. 20. leagues, and so many more the 16. day.

The 17. day in the after noone the winde came by at the Northwest with a Ternado, and soule weather continued all day and night, with thunder & lightning: we ranne this day not about 4. leagues. The 18. day we had another Ternado, the winde being at Northwest, and by West: we ranne this day 12. leagues. The 19. day we ranne 10. leagues. The 20. day not about 5. leagues, by reason of the great change of windes, and soule weather.

Februarie.

They returned for England.

The 21. we ranne our course with a good gale 5. leagues.
 The 22. day Christopher Rawlinsou our Cooper, who had bene sicke for the space of one moneth before, died about 8. of the clocke at night, whose will I made before his death. This night we descried two saile of tal ships, but were content to passe quietly, and therefore went not roome with them. This day by our reckoning we were thwart of the Capede Monte, which is to the Westward of the River de Sestos, about 30. leagues.

Cape de Espir.

The 23. day we received William Lobber for our Cooke, perceiving that the Cooke himselfe was weake and not able to doe that service for which he was shipped.

The 24. day we ranne about 20. leagues, the 25. day 25. leagues, the 26. day 16. leagues.

The 27. day we had a great Ternado out of the South-east with much raine, which continued not about one houre, and then the winde came againe to the South-west with a good gale: and we made way this day 12. leagues.

The 28. day we had another Ternado out of the North, and North-north-west, but continued not long, and so became calme againe presently.

The 29. day we ranne (because of the varietie of winde,) not about 7. leagues.

March.

The first day of March in a Ternado we lost the Hinde, whereupon we set up a light, and shot off a peece but could not heare of her, so that then we strooke our saile and taried for her, and in the morning had sight of her againe, 3. leagues a sterne of vs. We ranne as we accompted this day 6. leagues.

The 2. day we ranne 16. leagues, the 3. 20. leagues, the 4. 20. leagues more.

The 5. day we had sight of a Carnel of about 100. tunnes to the winde wards of vs, and when she was thwart of vs we call about and gaue her the chale breill 4. of the clocke, but coulde not see her.

Cape Verde in latitude 14. degrees and a halfe.

From this day till the 22. of this moneth wee went our course directly. Upon which 22. day we found our selues to be in the height of Cape Verde, which standes in 14. degrees, and a halfe.

From this day till the 29. day we continued our course, and then we found our selues to be in 22. degrees. This day one of our men called William King, who had bene long sicke, died in his sleepe, his apparell was distributed to those that lackt it, and his money was kept for his friends, to be deliuered them at our coming home.

The 30. day we founde our selues to be vnder the Tropike,

The 31. day we went our course, and made way 18. leagues.

April.

From the 1. day of April to the 20. we went our course, and then found our selues to be in the height of the Acores.

May.

The seuenth day of May wee fell with the South part of Irelande, and going on shoare with our boate had fresh vyinke, and two sheepe of the countrey people, which were wilde Kernes, and we gaue them golde for them, and boughte further such other victuals as wee had neede of, and thought would serue vs till we arriued in England.

The 12. of May we fell with the Isle of Lundy in the Chammel of Bristol, which lyeth about 5. leagues from the maine land of England.

The 13. day wee came betwixt the flat Holmes and the steepe Holmes, which are about 7. leagues from Bristol.

Their arrival at Bristol.

The 14. day with the afternoone tide we went into the Port of Bristol called Hungrode, and there ancred in safetie, and gaue thanks to God for our safe arriuall.

with the Tiger of London, a shippe of 120. tunnes, the Hart of London of 60. tunnes, and a Pinneffe of 16. tunnes.

November.

The 14. day of September, the yere abovesaid, at 8. of the clocke in the morning we departed from Harwicke, and directed our course for the Isle of Sillye, to meeete there with the Hart and Pinneffe, which were rigged and victualled at Bristol, but arriuing there the 28. day we founde them not, and therefore after long lying at hull to tarrie for them, but not espyring them, we turned backe to Plimmouth the 12. day of October, and being there, the Hart and the Pinneffe came to vs; so that the 15. of November we all departed together from Plimmouth at one of the clocke clocke for the spare of one mo fore his death. This night therefore went not round them, we turned backe to om Plymouth at one of the clocke

clocke in the afternoone, and the 28. day we had sight of the Isle of Porto Sancto, and the next day in the morning of Madeira.
 The 3. day of December we fell with the Isle of Palma, and the 9. we were shunns of the Cape Blanke, and found there certaine Cattails fishing for Pargoes.
 The 19. we found our selues in the height of Sierra Leona, and all this day we ranne thwatt of certaine Currents, which did set to the West South-westward so fast as if it had bene the over-fall of a sand, making a great noyse like unto a straine of tyde gate when the water is shoalen and to ppoone whether we could finde ground in this place, we founden and had 150. fathoms, and no ground, and so departed.
 The 30. of December we fell with the coast of Guinea, and had first sight of it about 4. leagues off. The best marke that we could take of the place to knowe it, was three hilles, which laye North-east and by East from vs: betwixt the Northmost and the middle, there are two high and great trees standing in sight as if were a sailer by each one from another, and a little more to the North-westward are certaine hommocks. Having sailed somewhat into the shoare, we tooke our selues to be thote somewhat past the River de Sestos, so that we heye about to fetch it. And a little after we had sight of three sailes of shippes, and two pinnelles which were in the weather of vs, and having sight of them, we made our selues ready to meete them, and halled off our shippes to strike the wind as we could: and having sayled about an houre or two, they also went about, and went as we went to make themselves ready, and when we had them in chase, they went away from vs: but when they had made themselves ready, they kept about againe, and came with vs very finely appointed with their streamers, and pendants and ensignes, and noyse of trumpets very brauely: so when we met, they had the weather of vs, and wee being determined to fight if they had bene Portugals, would them to come under our lee, which they de-nien stoutly: then we demanded of them whence they were, and they saide of France, we tolde them againe that we were of London in England. They asked of vs what Portugals wee had seen, wee answered, none but fishermen: then they tolde vs that there were certaine Portugall shippes gone to the Mina to defende it, and that they mette with another at the River de Sestos, which was a shippe of two hundred, which they had burned, and had saved none but the Master and two or three Negroes, and certaine others which were soye hurued, which they left a shoase there. Then they desired to come aboarde of vs with their boates to talke with vs, and wee gaue them leave. Then the Captaine of the Admirall and divers others came aboarde very friendly, desiring vs to keepe them company because of the Portugals, and to goe to the Mina with them: wee tolde them that we had not watered, and that we were but now fallen with the coast, and they shewed vs that we were fiftie leagues past the River de Sestos: notwithstanding there was water enough to see had, and they would helpe vs to water with their owne boates, because they would haue our companis. And tolde vs further, that they had bene sixe weekes upon the coast, and had gotten but three tunne of graines amongst them all: and when wee had heard them, we made our reckoning that although the Wine were cleare, yet if they did goe before vs they would make our market, and if it were not cleare, then if the Portugals were there and did take them, they would understande that wee were behinde, and so would waite for vs, And further wee made accompt, that if wee wente with them wee should doe as well as they if the coast were cleare: if it were not cleare, then by them, wee were assured to be the stronger. Therefore having considered thus much of their gentle offers, wee tolde them that the next day wee would conferre more largely of the matter. Whereupon they desired mee to come the next day to dinner to them, and to bring the Masters of our shippes with mee, and such merchants as I thought good, promising to giue vs water out of their owne shippes if we would take it, or els to carie with vs, and helpe vs to water with their owne boates and Pinnelles.
 The one and thirtieth day in the morning, the Admirall sent his boate aboarde for mee, and I tooke our Masters and certaine of our Marchants and went to him, who had provided a notable banquet for vs, and increased vs very friendly, desiring vs still to keepe his companie, promising that what victuals were in his shippes, or other things that might doe vs pleasure untill the end, wee should have the one halfe of it, offering vs if wee would, to furnish his Flagges, and to be at our commandement in all things.
 In the end we agreed to come to an ancre, and to leave our boate on shoare with the Admirals boate, and one of his Pinnelles, and an Almaine which they had brought out of France, to seeke water, as for our Pinnelle she came to an ancre to seaward of vs, and would not come at vs. All this night the boates continued on shoare.
 The first day of January our boates came to us againe and had found no raine, whereupon we departed

wayes and set sail, and anchor againe at another River,

The 2. day we went into the River and bargained, and tooke 5. small Clippans teeth.

The 3. day we tooke 5. more.

The 4. day the French Admirall and we tooke 15. small teeth. This day we tooke 30. men with vs & went to seeke Clippans, our men being all well armed with harquebusses, pikes, long bowes, rollebowes, partizans, long swords, and sworde and bucklers: we founde 2. Clippans which we strooke diuers times with harquebusses and long bowes, but they went away from vs and hurt one of our men. The 5. day we set sail and ranne along the coast.

The 6. day we fell with the River of S. Andros, at which place the land is somewhat high to the Westward of the River, and a faire bay also to the Westward of it: but to the Eastward of it, it is lowe land.

The 7. day we went into the River and found no village, but certaine wilde Negroes not accustomed to trade. It is a very great River, and 7. fadom water in some places at the entering: here we filled water, and after set sail.

The 8. day we sailed along the shoare and came to the red clifles, and went forwarde in sayling the 9. day also.

The 10. day we came together to confere with Captaine Blundel Admirall of the French ships, Jerom Baudet his vice Admirall, and John de Orleans master of a ship of 70. tunne, and with their marchants, and agreed that when God should sende vs to any place where we might make sale, that we should be of one accord and not one of vs hurt the market of the other, but certaine of our boates to make the price for all the rest, and then one boate to make sale for every shippe. This night our boates going to the shoate met with certaine Negroes, who said that they had gold, and therefore we here cast ancre.

The 11. day all the day we tooke but one halfe Angel waighe of 4. graine, which we tooke by hand, for the people of this place had no waighe: the Negroes called this place Allowe.

The 12. day we ranne along the coast and found but one towne, but no boates would come out to vs, and therefore we went our course.

The 13. day I tooke my boate and went along the shoare, & passed by diuers small towne, and was waied to come on shoare at 3. places, but the sea went so high upon the shoare, that it was not possible for vs to land, neither could they come to vs if they had had boates, as I could see none but at one place, where there was one that would haue come vnto vs, but the land wath went so foze, that it hurt vs in his boate, and one of the men was drowned, which the people lamented, and cried so foze, that we might easily heare them, and they got his body out of the sea, and carried it amongst them to their towne.

The 14. day we came within Baker shot of the castle, & straight way they set foze an Almace to deterte vs, and when they perceiued that we were no Portingals, they ran within the towne a gaine for there is a great towne by the castle, which is called by the Negroes, Dondow. With out this there lie two great rocks like Islands, and the castle standeth vpon a point which the west almost like an Island. Before we came at this castle, we found the land for 5. or 6. leagues to bee high land, and about 7. leagues before we came to the castle, low land well we came at the castle, and then we found a land high againe. This castle standeth about 5. leagues on this side the Cape Trois points. Here I tooke the boate with our Negroes and ranne along the shoare, till I came to the Cape & found two small towne, but no boates at them, neither any crasique to be had. At these places our Negroes did vnderstand them well, and one of them went a shoare at all the places, and was well receiued of them: this night we ancre at the Cape Trois points.

The 15. day I tooke our boate & went along the shoare, & about 3. leagues beyond the Castr most part of the Cape we found a faire bay where we ran in, and found a small towne, and certaine boates which belonged to the same towne, but the Negroes in a long time would not come to vs, but at the last by the perswasion of our owne Negroes one boate came to vs, and with him we sent George our Negro a shoare, and after he had talked with them, they came aboard our boates with our fence, & I gaue to their captaine a balon, & two strings of Pargarets, & they desired vs about 5. duckets waighe of golde, but they required so much for it that we would not take it, because the Frenchmen and we had agreed to make price of our goods all in one boat, & the price being made then euery man to sell in his owne boate, and no man to giue more then the price which should be set by vs all. This place is called Bulle, & here the Negroes were very glad of our Negroes and they took them all the friendship they could, when they had tolde them that they were the men that were taken away, bring now againe brought by vs.

The Negroes here desired vs, that a month since there were 3. ships that fought together, & the two shippes put the other to flight, and before that at the castle of Mina there were 4. shippes of the Portingals, which met with one French man, which Frenchman caused them all to flee, which shippe we took to be the Roebarge: for the Frenchmen of our company judged her to be there about that time, with her pinasse also: and further, that after her went a shippe of twelve scope, named the Swander, all alone, and after her a shippe of foure scope, and both for the Mina. And there were two others also which they left, one at Cape Verde, called the Leuiere of Diepe, and another at the river De Seltos, besides these three, which all this time be in our companie, whose names be these:

The Espoyer of Hableness, which is the Admirall, whose Captaine is Denys Blundell.

The Leuiere of Roan Viceadmirall, whose Master is Jerom Bowder.

The other is of Hunfleur, whose Master is called Iohn de Orleans

The thirteene day, I went along the shoare, with two pinasses of the Frenchmens, and found a Baye, and a fresh riuer, and after that went to a towne called Hanta, twelve leagues beyond the Cape. At this towne our Negroes were well known, and the men of the towne wept for joy, when they saw them, and demaunded of them where Anthony, and Binne had bene: and they told them, that they had bene at London in England, and should be brought home the next voyage.
So, after this, our Negroes came aboard, with other Negroes, which brought a weight with them, which was so small, that we could not giue them the halfe of that which they demaunded for it.

Hanta.

The Negroes here told vs, that there were five Portingall shippes at the Castle, and one pin-nass, and that the Portingals did much harme to their Countrey, and that they lived in feare of them, and we told them againe, that we would defend them from the Portingals, whereof they were very glad.

The 17. day we went a shoare, and the Frenchmen with vs, but did no great good, the Negroes were so unreasonable, we solde foure scope Spanellios for one ounce of golde.

Shamma.

Then we departed, and went to Shamma, and went into the riuer, with five boates well appointed with men and ordnance, and with our noyses of trumpets, and drummes, for we thought here to haue found some Portingals, but there were none: so we sent our Negroes a shoare, and after them went diuers of vs, and were very well receiued, and the people were very glad of our Negroes, specially one of their brothers wives, and one of their aunes, which receiued them with much ioy, and so did all the rest of the people, as if they had bene their naturall brethren: we comforted the Captaine, and to bid him, that he should not feare the Portingals, for we would defende him from them: whereupon we caused our boates to shoote off their bales, and barquebusts: and caused our men to come on shoare with their long bowes, and they shot before the captaine, which he, with all the rest of the people, wounded much at, specially to see them shoote so farre as they did, and aimed to waite their bowes, but could not. When it grew to be late, we departed to our ships, for we looked euerie bowe for the Portingals. And here the Negroes shewed vs, that there was an English shippe at the Mina, which had brought one of the Negroes againe, which Robert Gaynhooke took away.

The Negroes brought home by our men.

Mina.

The 18. day we went into the riuer, with no lesse strength then before, and concluded with the Negroes to giue them for euerie fustle two yardes and three nailles of cloth, and to take for it one Angell Duckett: so that we took in all 70. Duckets, whereof the Frenchmen had fortye, and we thirtie.

The 19. day we went a shoare, euerie man for himselfe, and took a good quantitie of golde, and I for my part took foure pound and two ounces and a halfe of golde, and our Parts boate took
21. ounces. At night, the Negroes shewed vs, that the next day the Portingals would be with vs, by land or by sea: and when we were ready to depart, we heard diuers barquebusts shoote off in the woods by vs, which we knew to be Portingals, which durst come no nearer to vs, but shot off in the woods, to see if they could feare vs, and so make vs to leave our traffique.

The 20. day, we manned our five boates, and also a great boate of the Frenchmens, with our men, and the Admiralls, twelve of them in their murrions, and coiffes, and the rest all well appointed, with foure trumpets, a drumme, and a life, and the boate all hanged with streamers of like, and pendans very faire, and went into the riuer, and traffiked, our man of warre lying off, and on in the riuer to waite vs, but we heard no more of the Portingals. This day the Negroes told vs, that there were certaine shippes come into Hanta, which towne is about two leagues to the westward of this place.

The 21. day we manned our boates againe, and went to a place a league from this, to the westward, and there found many Negroes, with another Captaine, and solde at the same rate that that we had done with the others.

The 22. day, we went a shoare againe, and trafficked in like sort quickly, and I tooke four pound and five ounces of golde.

The 23. day, about night, the Negroes with their Captaine, came to vs, and tolde vs that the king of Portugals shippes were departed from the Castle, meaning the next day to plye to the windward, so come to vs, giuing vs warning to take heede to our selues: we told them againe, that we were very glad of their coming, and would be ready at all times to meete them: and to assure them that we were glad of it, we sounded our trumpets, and shot off certaine bales, wherof the Negroes were very glad, and requested vs, that if the Portugals sought to hinder our traffike, to shew them all the extremitie that we could, promising vs, that if they came by land, they would aduertise vs thereof.

The 24. we went a shoare with our trumpets, and drummes, and trafficked, and I had the Captaine of the towne to dinner.

The 25. day, we being a shoare, our ships had descriced five sailes of the King of the Portugals, and our shippes shotte off ordinance to call vs away, and we threwe euery man his caske a shoare for water, and went to our shippes, and by that time we had waied, and giuen order one to another what to doe, it was night, so that that night nothing was done: we let saile, and lay close all night, to get the winde if we could: we were neere some of them, and one shotte off a peece, which we iudged to be the Admirall of the Portugals, to cause the rest to come and speake with him: so all this night we made our selues ready for fight.

The 26. we came in with the shoare, and had sight of the Portugals, where they rid at anker, and we bare with them, and we gaue all our men white scarfs, to the ende that the Frenchmen might knowe one the other, if we came to boording: but the night came vpon vs, that we could not fetch them, but we ankered within Demy culuering shot of them.

The 27. day we waied, and so did the Portugals, and about eleven of the clocke, we had the winde of them, and then we went roome with them, which when they perceiued, they kept about to the shoare againe, and we after them, and when they were so neere the shoare, that they could not well runne any further on that boord, they kept about againe, and lay to the sea ward, and then we kept about with them, and were a head of them, and tooke in our topsailes, and taried for them, and the first that came by, was a small barke, which sailed so well, that she taried not for any of vs, and carried good ordinance, and as soone as she came by, she shot at vs, and ouerthot vs, and then she shot at the Admirall of the Frenchmen, and shot him through in two or three places, and went forth a head of vs, because we were in our fighting sailes: then came by another caruell under our lee in like case, which shotte at vs, and at the Frenchman, and hurt two of his men, and shot him thorough the mayne maste. And after them came by the Admirall under our Lee also, but he was not able to doe vs so much harme as the small shippes, because he carried ordinance higher then they, neither were we able to make a good shot at any of them, because our shippe was so weak in the side, that she laide all her ordinance in the sea: wherfore we thought to lay the great shippe a boord, and as soone as the French Admirall went roome with him, he fell a sterne, & could not fetch him, and after he fel a sterne of two catuels moze, and could fetch none of them, but fell to lee ward of them all: and when he was to lee ward, he kept about to the shoare ward, and left vs, and then we put out our topsailes, and gaue them chase, and both the other Frenchmen kept the wind, and would not come neere vs, and our owne shippe was a sterne, so that she could not come to vs: and after we had followed them about two howres to the sea ward, they kept about againe towards the shoare, thinking to pay vs as they went along by, & to haue the wind of the French Admirall, which before ran in towards the shoare, & we kept about with them, and kept still the wind of them, thinking that our Viceadmirall, and the other, would haue followed vs, as we willed them to doe: but after that the Portugall was past by them, and euery one had shot at vs & our Viceadmirall, both our Viceadmirall, and the two Frenchmen, and our owne pinnelle, left vs in the lapp, and ran to sea ward, and we ran still along, and kept the wind of them, to succour the French Admirall, who was vnder all of their leas, and when they met with him, euery one went roome with him, & gaue him the broad side, and after they cast about againe, and durst not boord him, because they saw vs in the weather of them, or els without doubt they had taken or sunke them: for three of them which were the smallest, went so fast, that it was not possible for a ship to boord them, and carried such ordinance, that if they had had the weather of vs, they would haue troubled three of the best ships that we had, and as for their Admirall, and Viceadmirall, they were both notably appointed.

The French forsake our 1587.

When the Frenchman was cleare of them, he laye as neere the winde as he could: and we followed them still towards the shoare, and then the Admirall ranne to sea after the

The 28. day we met with our Viceadmirall our pinnelle, and two of the French men, and the chid was sler, which was a shippe of foure score tunne, and belonged to Roan: and when I had the sight of the rest of our Shippes, I tooke our skiffe, and went to them, to knowe, why they lost vs in such a case, and Iohn Kire made me answere, that his shippe would neither feare nor feere, and as for the pinnelle, Iohn Daucis made me answere, that he would doe nothing, and that he could carry her no further, for her rudder was broken, so that the Hart was glad to towne her. Then I went to the French Admirall, and found himselfe to be a man of good stomake, but the one halfe of his men were sicke, and dead, and then I talked with the smaller French man, and he made me answere, that he could doe nothing, saying, that his shippe would beare no saile, and had sickeene all of his men dead, and sicke, so he made vs plaine answere, that he was able to doe nothing. After this, the Frenchmen durst not anker for feare of the Portugals.

The 29. day, the Master of the pinnelle came to vs, and saide, that they were not able to keepe her any longer, and then we viewed her, and seeing that there was no remedie, her rudder with all the yon worke being broken both aloft and belowe, we agreed to bryake her by, and to put the men into the Hart. So weooke out of her foure bales, one anker, and certaine fire wood, and set her on fire, and afterwards ranne along the coast.

pinnelle giuen
up.

The thirtieth day, we went into the Shoare, and spake with certaine Negroes, who tolde vs, that some French Shippes had bene there, but we could not bargaine with them, they were so vnrasonable.

The 31. day, I went to shoare, but did not traffike.

The first day of Februarye we waied, seeing we could not bying the Negroes to any reason, Februarye. and came to another place, which standeth vpon a hill.

The second day we waied hence, and had sight of a saile, which departed from the place aforesaid, and shot off two peeces for his pinnelle, which was a shoare: then I tooke our boate, and the Frenchmen tooke theirs, and went with the saile to descey him, and when we had rowed about a league, we had sight of the pinnelle: the shippe was gone so farre, that we could not reach her: but the pinnelle we found to be the French men, which ranne away from vs, when we were in sight with the Portugals. After this, we went to the shoare, and found the Negroes vnrasonable in their prices, and dealt not with them.

The thirde day, I went to a towne foure leagues from vs, and shot off two peeces, and the Captaine came to vs, and I sent Thomas Rippen a land, who knewe the Captaine, and as soone as he came a shoare, the Captaine knewe him, and diuers of the Negroes, who then began to aske for me, and hauing tolde the Captaine that I was in the boate, he made no longer tarrying, but by and by caused two boates to be put to the sea, and came to me himselfe, and when he sawe me, he cried to me, before he came to the boate, and seemed to be the gladdest man alive, and so did all the company that knewe me, and I gaue him a reward, as the manner of the Countrey is, and caused the Frenchmen to giue another, promising the next day to giue him wine: and that night, because it was late, he would not talke of any price, but left me a pledge, and tooke another of me, and so departed.

The fourth day, going on shoare, I found that the Shippes of France, which had bene there, had done much hurt to our markets, but yet I tooke sive ounces and a halfe of golde.

The fift day I tooke eight ounces and one eighthe part of golde: but I sawe that the Negroes perceiued the difference in cloch, betwixt ours and that which the Frenchmen had, which was better, and vvaater then ours: and then I told the Captaine Blundell, that I would goe to the Leeward, because I perceiued, that being there where his cloch was solde, I should doe no good, whereof he was loze.

The sixt day, there came an Almade, and Negroes aboard me, requesting me to come to their towne, for they had much golde, and many marchants: and so I went, and found their olde Captaine gone, and another in his place: but this night we did no good, because the marchants were not come downe: so he requirred a pledge, which I let him haue, and tooke another of him.

The seuenth day, George our Negro came to vs, who had followed vs at the least thirtieth leagues, George the Negro.

leagues in a small boate, and when he came, the Negroes and we loone concluded of price. I tooke this day five pound and one ounce, & three quarters of gold. This Negro we had left at Shamma, at the time of the fight, who saw that he sawe the fight being a shoare, and that when we were gone from the Portugals, the Portugals came into their river, and tolde them, that the Englishmen had slaine two Portugals with a peece, which was in deede out of our shippe, and they required harbour there, but the Captaine of Shamma would not suffer them.

The eight day, we tooke nineteene pound, three ounces and a halfe.

The ninth day, we tooke two pound, five ounces, and a halfe.

The tenth day, three pound.

The 11. day, came to vs Ierome Bawick, the Viceadmirall of the French men, and his pinnelle, and he shewed vs, that where we left them, there was no good to be done, and said, he would goe to the Eastward, but we tolde him he should not: and thereupon commaunded him to goe to his companie, which he was appointed to be with, which he refused to doe, until he had shot three or foure peeces at their pinnelle, and when the ship saw that, he kept about, and came to seaward, & durst come no neerer to vs, so the pinnelle went after her. We tooke this day 1. pound, 5. ounces.

The 12. day, there came one of the French mens pinnelle to vs, laden with cloth, and would haue made sale: but I would not suffer him, and therefore tooke him, and sent him aboard of our shippe, and caused him to ride there all day. We tooke five pound, five ounces, and a halfe.

The 13. day, we tooke in sande to ballast our shippe.

The 14. day, we tooke of some Negroes foure ounces of golde.

The 15. we ranne farther along the shoare.

The 16. we came to another towne.

The 17. day, I went a shoare, and vnderstoode that three of the Portugall ships were at the same, and the other two at Shamma. The Captaine of this towne was gone to the principall towne, to speake with their King, and would retorne homely as they tolde me, and so he did, and brought me a weight and measure, and I sent a man to see that principall towne, and their King. The Portugall shippes rid so neere vs, that within three houres they might be with vs, yet we were all contented to tary for sales.

The 18. day, certaine of the Kings seruants came to vs, and we tooke one pound, two ounces, and one eight part of gold.

The 19. day, we tooke five pound, and one ounce.

The 20. day, one pound and foure ounces.

The 21. I tooke foure pound and one ounce, and the Negroes enquired for fine cloth, and I opened two peeces, which were not fine enough, as they said, but seeing that we had no other, they bought of them. At night I provided a gift, or present, and sent one merchant, and a martiner with it to the King, to certifie him of our want of victuals, by reason whereof, we could not stay long: for in deede we searched our shippe, and the most part of our beere was leaked out of all our barrells.

The 23. our men came from the King Ebaane, and tolde vs, that he had receiued them very friendly, but he had litle golde, but promised, if we would tary, to sende into all his countrey, for gold for vs, and he willed our men at their comming home, to speake to our King, to send men and provision into his countrey, to build a Castle, and to bring Tailors with them, to make them apparel, and good wares, and they should be sure to sell them: but for that present, the Frenchmen had filled them full of cloth.

This towne standeth about foure leagues by in the land, and is, by the estimation of our men, as bigge in circuite as London, but the building is like to the rest of the countrey. They haue about this towne, great store of the wheate of the Countrey, and they iudge, that on one side of the towne, there were 1000. rikes of wheate, and another sort of corne, which is called mill, which is much used in Spaine. About this towne, they keepe good watch euery night, and haue to warne the watchmen certaine cordes made fast ouer their waies, which leade into the towne, and certaine bels vpon them, so that if any man touch the cordes, the bels ring, and then the watchmen runne forth of their watch houses, to see what they be: and if they be enemies, if they passe the cord, they haue provision with certaine nets banged ouer the waies, where they must passe, to let fall vpon them, and so take them, & other wise then by the waies it is not possible to enter the towne, by reason of the thickets, and bushes, which are about the same, and the towne is also walled round about with long cordes, and bound together with sedge, and certaine barkes of trees.

When our men came to the towne, it was about five of the clocke in the morning, for there they trawell alwaies in the night, by reason of the heats of the day: and about nine of the clocke, the King sent for them, for there may no man come to him, before he be sent for, and then they would haue carried their present with them: but the Negroes told them, that they must be thre times brought before him, before they might offer their gift: and when they came to him, he talked with them, and receiued them very friendly, and kept them about halfe an houre, and then they departed, and after that, sent for them againe thre times, and last of all, they brought him their present, which he receiued thankfully, and then caused a pot of wine of Palme to be brought forth, and made them drinke, and before they drinke, both here, and in all the Countrey, they vse certaine ceremonies.

The things friendly intertainment of our men.

First, they bring forth their pot of drinke, and then they make a hole in the ground, and put some of the drinke into it, and they cast the earth vpon it, which they digged forth before, and then they set the pot vpon the same, then they take a litle thing made of a goode, and with that they take out of the same drinke, and put it vpon the ground in thre places, and in diuers places they haue certaine bunches of the pills of Palme trees, set in the ground before them, and there they put in some drinke, doing great reuerence in all places to the same Palme trees.

Their ceremonies in drinking.

All these ceremonies first done, the King tooke a cup of golde, and they put him in wine, and he dranke of it, and when he dranke, the people cried all with one voice, Abaan, Abaan, with certaine other wordes, like as they cry commonly in Flanders, vpon the Twelue night, the kinning drinke: and when he had drinke, then they gaue drinke to euery one, and that done, the King licensed them to depart, and euery one that departeth from him, boweth thre times towards him, and waueth with both hands together, as they bowe, and then doe depart. The King hath commonly sitting by him, eight or ten ancient men, with gray beards.

This day we tooke one pound and ten ounces of golde.

The 24. day, we tooke thre pound and seven ounces.

The 25. we tooke thre ounces, and thre quarters.

The 26. we tooke two pound and ten ounces.

The 27. two pound and six ounces.

The 28. four pound, and then seeing that there was no more golde to be had, we waited, and went forth.

The first day of March, we came to a towne called Mowre, but we found no boates nor people there: but being ready to depart, there came two Almades to vs from another towne, of whome we tooke two ounces and a halfe of golde: and they tolde vs that the Negroes that dwelled at Mowre, were gone to dwell at Lagwaa.

Lagwaa.

The second day, we came thwart of the Castle, and about two leagues off, and there sawe all the five Hojtingall shippes at anker, and this day by night, we fetched Shamma.

Their returne.

The third day, we had sight of one tall shippe, of about two hundred tunne in the weather of vs, and within lesse then two leagues of our shippes, and then we sawe two more a sterne of her, the one a shippe of five hundred or more, and the other a pinnell, and these were a newe fleet at that present arrived out of Hojtingall. Whereupon we waited, and made shift to double out of the land, and then the winde comming to the South south west, the Hart going roome with them, fell thre leagues to the leeward of vs. These Hojtingalls gaue vs the chase from nine of the clocke in the morning, all fur at night, but did no good against vs. At last, we perceiuing the Admiral to be farre a sterne of his companie, because his maine toppemast was spent, determined to calke about with them againe, because we were sure to weather them, and the winde being as it was, it was our best course: but the Hart was so farre to the leeward, that we could not doe it, except we would loose her companie, so that we tooke in some of our sailes, and went roome with him: which when he perceiued, he loosed too, and was able to lie as neere as he did before. At night, when we came to him, he would not speake to vs: then we asked of his companie, why he went so roome, and they made excuse that they were able to beare no saile by, for feare of bearing their foretopmast over board: but this was a simple excuse.

The fourth day, being put from our waiting place, we began to seeth our meate in salt water, and to rebate our allowance of drinke, to make it indure the longer: and so concluded to set our course thence, so our owne countrey.

The twelue of March, I found my selfe thwart of Cape Dos palmas.

The 16. day, we fell with the land, which we iudged to be the Cape Miserado, about which place is very much high land.

Cape Miserado.

The 17. we lay South south west, with a pretty gale.

The 18. day, we lost sight of the Hart, and I thinke the wilfull Passer ranne in with the Hoare shoare of purpose to loose vs, being offended, that I told him of his otiose folly.

The 19. day, we bare a small saile, to tarp for the Part, but could not descry her.

Two small Islands by Sierra Leona.

The 27. day, we fell in sight of two small Islands, which Ipe by our reckoning five leagues off the headlands of Sierra Leona: and before we came in sight of the same Islands, we made our reckoning to be forty or thirtie leagues at the least off them. Therefore all they that saile this way, are to regard the currents, which sette North Northwest, or els they may be much distressed.

The 14. of Aprill, we met with two great shippes of Portugall, which although they were in the weather of vs, yet came not roomie with vs, whereby we iudged that they were bounde for Callicut.

The 18. day, we were in the height of Cape De Verde.

The 23. one of our companie, called Edmond Perkin, deceased.

The 24. we were directly under the Tropike of Cancer.

The first day of Maye, Henric Willson our Steward died: and the next day died Iohn Vanderwood.

The fift day, we were in the height of S. Michael.

The 9. day, we met with two tall shippes, bound for New found lande, as we iudged, being Disainers, but as it well sel out, we had the weather of them, so that they were able to doe nothing to vs.

The 20. day, we met with a shippe of 60. tunne, and we thought it had bene the Part, but it was not, we iudged it to be an English shippe.

The 22. we met with the same shippe againe, but she was in the weather of vs, and so kept the wind still.

The 23. we had sight of a shippe in the weather of vs, which was a Frenchman, of 90. tunne, who came with vs as stoutly and as desperately as might be, and comming neere vs, perceiued, that we had bene vpon a long voyage, and iudging vs to be weak, as in deede we were, came neerer vs, and thought to haue laide vs aboard, and there kept by some of his men in armour, and commaunded vs to strike saile: whereupon we sent them some of our stiffe, crosse barres, and chaine shot, and arrows, so thicke, that it made the vpper worke of their shippe see about their eares, and we spoiled with all his men, and toare his shippe miserably with our great ordnance, and then he beganne to fall a sterne of vs, and to packe on his sailes, and to get away: and we shing that, gaue him foure or fise good peeces more for his sake well, and thus we were rid of this Frenchman, who did vs no harme at all. We had aboard vs a Frenchman a Trumpetter, who being sicke, and lying in his bed, tooke his trumpet notwithstanding, and blew, till he could blow no more, and so died.

The 26. we had sight of another saile, & we went toome to haue spoken with her, but could not.

The 28. we conferred together, and agreed to goe into Seuerne, and so to Byssol, but the same night we had sight of the Lizard, and by reason of the winde, we were not able to double the land end, so goe into Seuerne, but were forced to beare in with the Lizard.

The 29. day, about nine of the clocke in the morning, we arrived safely in Plymmouth, and praised God for our good arriuall.

The third and last voyage of Maister William Towrson, to the coast of Guinie, and the Castle de Mina, in the yeere, 1557.

The 30. day of January, the yeere aboue sayd, we departed out of the Towne of Plymmouth, with three shippes, and a pinnelle, whereof the names were these:

1. The Minion, Admirall of the fleet.
2. The Chrystopher, Viceadmirall.
3. The Tyger.
4. A pinnelle, called the Vnicorne: being all bound for the Canaries, and from thence, by the grace of God, to the coast of Guinie.

It is to be understood, that at this time, there was warre betwixt England, and France.

The next day, being the last of this month, in the afternoone, we mette with two Hulkes of Dantzick, the one called the Rose, a shippe of 400. tunnes, and the other called the Vnicorne, of 150. tunnes, the Master of the Rose was called Nicholas Masse, and the Master of the Vnicorne, Melchior White, both laden at Bourdeaux, and for the most part, with wines. When we came to them, we caused them to hoist forth their voyers, and to come, and speak with vs, and we examined euery one of them a part, what Frenchmens goods they had in their shippes, and they saide, they

e mette with two hulkes of the Master of the Vnicorne, th wines. When we came to peak with vs, and we exam-their shippes, and they laide, they

they had none: but by the contrarieties of their tales, and by the suspition which wee gathered of their false charter parties, we perceiued that they had French mens goods in them: we therefore caused one of them to fetch vs his bills of lading, and because hee denied that he had any, we sent certaine with him, who caused him to goe to the place where hee had hid them, and by the differences of his bills of lading, and his talke, we gathered as before, that they had Frenchmens goods. Whereupon wee examined them straightly, and first the purser of the Vnicorne which was the smaller shippe: he confessed that they had 32. tunnes and a hoghead of a Frenchmans. Then we examined the Master in like case, and he acknowledged the same to be true. Then wee examined also the Master of the great shippe, and he confessed that hee had 128. tunnes of the same Frenchmans, and moze they would not confesse, but saide that all the rest was laden by one Peter Lewgues of Hamburge, to bee deliuered to one Henry Summer of Camphire, notwithstanding all their letters were directed to Hamburge, and written in Dutch without, and within in French.

When they had confessed that they had thus much French mens goods within their shippes, we conferred together what was best to be done with them, William Cretton and Edward Selman were of the opinion, that it should bee good either to carie them into Spaine, and there to make sale of the goods, or els into Ireland, or to returne backe againe into Englands with them if the winde would permit it. But I, waying what charge we had of our Masters, first by mouth, and after wards by writing, that for no such matter wee shoulde in any case prolong the time, for feare of losing the voyage, and considering that the time of the yeere was very farre spent, and the money that wee should make of the wines not very much, in respect of the commoditie which wee hoped for by the voyage, perswaded them that to goe into Ireland the winde being Easterly as it was, might be an occasion that wee should be locked in there with that winde, and so loose our voyage, and to carie them into Spaine (seeing they sailed so ill that hauing all their sailes abroade, we kept them companie onely with our foresailes, and without any toppc sailes abroade, so that in euery two dayes sayling, they would haue hindered vs more then one, and besides that the winde being Easterly) we should not be able to seaze the coast with them: besides all this the losse of time when we came thither was to be considered, wherupon I thought it not good to carie them any further.

And as for carrying them into England, although the winde had bene good as it was not, considering what charge we had of our Masters, to shift vs out of the way for feare of a stay by reason of the warres, I held it not in any wise conuenient.

But notwithstanding all this, certaine of our companie not being herewith satisfied, went to our Master to know his opinion therein, who made them a plaine answer, that to cariy them into any place, it was not the best way nor the profite of their Masters. And he tolde them further, that if the time were prolonged one moneth longer before they passed the Cape, but a fewe men would goe the voyage. All these things considered, we all paused, and determined at the last, that euery man should take out of the hulks so much as he could wel bestow for necessaries, and the next morning to conclude what should be further done with them. So we tooke out of them for vs 14. tunnes and a halfe of wine, and one tunne we put into the pinnell.

The French mens goods seized, in the time of the warre upon the loss of Calais.

- None we tooke out one hoghead of Aquauitz.
- Six cakes of rossen,
- A small halter for eyes: and certaine chellenuts,
- The Christopher tooke out,
- Ten tunnes of wine, and one hoghead.
- A quantite of Aquauitz,
- Shall lynes,
- Chellenuts.

Six double bales with their chambers, And their men broke by the hulks chettes, and tooke out their Compasses, and running glasses, the sounding leade and line, and candles: and cast some of their beest ouer boord, and spoiled them so much, that of very pittie we gaue them a Compasse, a running glasse, a lead and a line, certaine bread and candles, and what apparell of theirs we could finde in their ship, we gaue them againe, and some money also of that which William Crompton tooke for the ransom of a poore Frenchman, who being their Pilot downe the Riuer of Bourdeaux, they were not able to set him a shoare againe by reason of the foule weather.

The Tyger also tooke out of the smaller hulke, 6. or 7. tunnes of wine, one hoghead of Aquauitz: and certaine rossen, and two Bales he tooke out of the great hulke.

The 1 day of February in the morning, we all came together againe sauing W. Crompton, <sup>schuartz</sup>. who sent vs word that he was contented to agree to that order which we should take.

From Edward Selman was of this opinion, that it was not best to let the ships depart, but we men into them to carrie them into England, which thing neither we nor our Master would agree unto, because we thought it not good to vnturn our ships going out ward, considering how dangerous the time was: so that in fine we agreed to let them depart, and giue them the rest of the wine which they had in their ships of the Frenchmens for the freight of that which we had taken, and for their opbinance, rossen, Aquauitz, chellenuts, and other things which the company had taken from them, so we received a bill of their hands, that they confessed how much Frenchmens goods they had, and then we let them depart.

The 3. day in the morning we found a great leake in the stemme of our ship, and in one houre pumped 400. strokes, and besides we found that our boltspyete and foymaste were both sprung, that wee could not well beare any sailes vpon them, and finding our selues to be 24. leagues or thereabout North from Cape finister, wee bare with the Tyger and the wed the Master that we would rume South to rume vnder the Cape to stoppe our leake, and fill our mastes, which Richard Packman agreed vnto: then we bare with the Christopher, and the wed them therof in like case, but the Master answered nothing thereto. Yet thinking that hee knowing our necessity would haue followed vs, we rume South to haue the Cape abooye, and so did the Tyger, but the Christopher kept her course South and by West, and would not come neere vs, so that in the afternoon we were forced to goe roome with him againe, and refuse the going with the Cape, vponing both our mast and ship in great danger, which with the helpe of the carpenters in 3. houres in smooth water might haue bene mended.

The 4. day in the morning the Tyger sprung the woolings of her boltspyete, and so was forced to take in her topsailes and mainesail, and with her foresaile lay to the Westwarde to mende the same againe, and we followed her, but the Christopher did not.

The 5. day we reckoned our selues to be in the height of Cape S. Vincent.

The 7. day we met with the winde at South with gusts of raine, lightning, and thunder, and so continued all night following the winde, sometimes South, and sometimes Southsouthwest: but alwayes as soone as the gusts were done, the winde came againe to the North-east. This night we were in the heighe of Porto Sancto.

The 10. day we reckoned our selues to be 25. leagues from the Grand Canarie, and this day about 9. of the clocke our pinnelle brake her rudder, so that we were forced to tow her at the sterne of the Minion, which we were able to doe, and yet kept company with the rest of our ships. About 11. of the clocke this day we had sight of the Grand Canarie.

The 11. day when we came to the Island we perceived that it was the Isle of Tenerif, and then in derde we had sight of the Grand Canarie, which lieth 12. leagues to the Eastwards of Tenerif: and because the road of Tenerif is soule ground, and nothing was there to be gotten for the helping of our pinnelle, hauing the winde large, we agreed to goe with the Grand Canarie.

The 12. day we came into the roade of the towne of Canarie, which lyeth one league from the same towne. And after we had shot off diuers pieces of ordynance to salute the towne and the castle, the gouernour and captaines of the Island sent to vs which were the captaines of the shippes, requiring vs to come a shoare, And when we came to them they received vs very friendly, offering vs their owne Jewets to ride to the towne, and what other friendship they could be to vs: and we went to the towne with two English Marchants which lay there, and remained in their house that day. The second day following we came abooye to deliuer our marchandise, and to get our pinnelle mended.

The 14. day came into the roade the Spanish flecte which was bounde to the Emperours Indies, which were in number nineteene saile, whereof 6. were shippes of 400. and 500. a pierce, the rest were of 200. 150. and of 100. When they were come to an ancre they saluted vs with ordynance, and so wee did them in like case. And afterwards the Admirall (who was a knight) sent his pinnelle to desire me to come to him, and when I came to him hee received mee friendly, and was desirous to heare somewhat of the State of England and Flanders. And after he had made me a banquet I departed, and I being gone vnto the boate, hee caused one of his gentlemen to desire Francisco the Portingale which was my interpreter, to require mee to firtle my flagge, declaring that he was General of the Emperours flecte. Which thing (being come abooye) Francisco strewed me: and because I refused to firtle it, but kept it footy still, certaine of the soulers in the shippes, shotte diuers harquebush shotte about the shippe, and ouer the flagge: and at the same time there came certaine gentlemen abooye our shippe to see her: to whome I said, that if they would not cause those their men to leaue shooting, I would shoote the best ordynance I had through their sides. And when they perceived that I was offended they departed, and caused their men of warre

The 17. day we set saile in the roade of Grand Canarie, and pproceded on our voyage.
The 20. in the morning we had sight of the coast of Barbarie, and running along the shoare we had sight of the river del Oro, which lieth almost vnder the tropike of Cancer.

The 21. day we found our selues to be in 20. degrees and a halfe, which is the height of Cape Blanke. The 25. we had sight of the land in the bay to the Northward of Cape Verde.

The 26. I tooke Francisco and Francis Castelin with mee, and went into the pinnelle, and so went to the Tyger which was nearer the shoare then the other ships, and went aboard her, and with her and the other shippes we ranne West and by South, and West Southwest, untill about 4. of the clocke, at which time we were hard abooze the Cape, and then we ranne in Southwest, and beyond the Cape about 4. leagues we found a faire Island, and besides that 2. or 3. Islands, which were of very high rocks, being full of buiers foyes of sea foule, and of pigeons, with other foyes of land foules, and so many, that the whole Island was covered with the dunge thereof, and seemed so white as if the whole Island had bene of chyalke, and within those Islands was a very faire bay, and hard aboord the rocks 8. fadom water, and faire ground. And when we perceived the baye, and understanding that the Frenchmen had a great trade there, which we were desirous to know, we came to an ancre with the Tyger. And after that the Minion and the Christopher ancred in like case: then we caused the pinnelle to runne beyonde another Cape of land, to see if there were any place to trade in there.

It being nere night I tooke our cocke and the Tygers staffe, and went to the Island, where we got certaine foules like unto Gannarros: and then I came aboord againe and took two of the Gannarros which we had taken, and carried them to the Captaine of the Christopher, and when I had talked with him, I founde him not willing to carie there, neither was I desirous to spend any long time there, but onely to attempt what was to be done: The Master of the Christe oher tolde me he wold not carie, being not bound for that place.

The 27. the Captaine of the Tyger and Edwardo Selman came to me, and John Makeworth from the Christopher, and then we agreed to take the pinnelle, & to come along the shoare, because that where we ride no Negroes came to vs, and the night before our pinnelle brought vs word, that there was a very faire Island. And when I came beyond the point I found it so, and vntill a goodly Bay, and we satte upon the maiore certaine Negroes which waited vs on shoare, and then we came to an ancre with the pinnelle, & went a shoare with our cocke, and they shewed vs where their trade was, and that they had Elephants teeth, malles, and hides, and offered vs to fetch bowtie their captaine, if we would send a man with them, and they would leaue a pledge for him: then we asked them when any shippe had bene there, and some of them said not in 8. moneths, others, in 6. moneths, and others in 4. and that they were Frenchmen.

Then we perceiving the Christopher was willing to carie, departed from them, & set saile with the pinnelle & went aboard the Tyger. And I understanding of some contention betwixt the Master of the Minion, and the Captaine of the Christopher, was not worth the reporting.
The 28. day of March we set saile with the coast of Guine 2.5. leagues to the Eastward of Cape de Monte, beside a river called Rio de palmas.

The 29. we went to the shoare, & found one man that could speake some Portugise, who tolde vs that there were 3. French ships passed by: one of them 2. moneths past, & the other 1. moneth past. In this place I received 29. Elephants teeth, and 2. ounces and halfe a quarter of gold.

The 2. day we set saile to the river de Sestos, which is a quarter of the way to the
The 3. day we set saile with the same river.

The 24. day we sent in our boates to take water, and romaged our shippes, and deliuered such wares to the Christopher and Tyger as they had neede of.

The 25. we came together, and agreed to send the Tyger to another river to the in her water, and to see what the road to do to graignes. After that we tooke merchandise with vs, and were the river, and there we found a Negro which was borne in Lisbon, left there by a ship of Portin gale which was burned the last yeere at this river in fighting with 3. Frenchmen: and hee tolde vs further, that two moneths past there were 3. French ships at this place, and 6. weekes past there were also 3. French shippes at the river, and 15. dayes past there was one. All which shippes were gone towards the Mine. This day we took but few graines.

The 19. day considering that the Frenchmen were gone before vs, and that by reason of the unwholsome ayres of this place 14. of our men in the Minion were fallen sicke, we determined to depart, and with all speede to goe to the Mina.

The 21. wee came to the river de Poros, where some of our boates went in for water, and I went in with our cocke, and took 12. small Elephants teeth.

The 23. day, after wee had taken as many teeth as we could get, about 9. of the clocke wee set sail to goe towards the Mina.

The 27. day being by my reckoning 20. leagues from the Cape Trespoints, our pinnelle broke one of the gudgions of her rudder, so that we were forced to tow her. This day also we called the Botelvaire before vs, and layd to his charge certaine masters, wherein he had misdeemed him selfe: but upon his submission & intreatie of pardon, and promise of better behauiour, we (desirous of peace and quietnes) forgave him.

The 28. we mended our pinnelles rudder.

The 29. we ranne along the coast.

The 31. we came to Hanta, and made sale of certaine Spanillios.

April 1558.

They discric
the saile of the Portingals.

The first of April we had sight of five sailes of Portingals, whereupon we set sail and went off to sea to get the winde of them, which wee should haue had if the winde had kept his ordinary course, which is all the day at the South-west, and West South-west: but this day with a flauie it kept all the day at the East, and East South-east, so that the Portingals had the winde of vs, and came roome with the Tyger and vs untill night, and brought them selfe lues all saue one, which saile was not so well as the rest, within shotte of vs: then it fell calme, and the winde came by to the South-west, wherbeit it was neere night, and the Christopher by means of her boate, was about foure leagues to the leeward of vs. We tacked and ranne into the weather of the Admirall, and chere more of his companie, and when we were neere him, we spake to him, but he would not answer: then we call about and lay in the weather of him; and calling about wee shotte at vs, and then we shot at him, and shotte him foure or five times through. They shot diuers times through our sailes, but hurt no man. The Tyger and the pinnelle because it was night, kept out their sailes and would not meddle with them; after wee had thus fought together two houres or more, and would not lay him aboard because it was night, we left shooting one at the other, and kept still the weather of them. Then the Tigean and the pinnelle kept about and came to vs, and afterwards being neere the shoare, we 3. kept about and lay to the sea, and shotte off a peece to giue warning to the Christopher.

The sight.

This night about twelue of the clocke being very little winde, and the Mastee of the Tiger a sleepe, by the euill workes of his men the shippes fell aboard of vs, and with her beare hooked cut our maine saile, and her boate being herin vs was broken and sunke, with certaine Portingals in her, and the shippes wailes were broken with her onclegers: yet in the ende we cleared her without any more hurt, but she was in hazard to be broken to lues to the water.

The second day we had sight of the Christopher, and were neere vnto her, so that I took our boate and went to her. And when I came thither, they betwixt mee, that after the Portingals had left vs, they went all roome with him, and about twelue a clocke at night mette him, and shotte at him, and hee at them, and they shotte him through the sailes in diuers places, and did no other great hurt. And when wee had vnderstoode that they had bene with him as well as with vs, we agreed altogether to secke them (if wee might finde them,) and keepe a weather our places of traffique.

The 7. we ranne all day to the South-west wards to secke the Portingals, but could haue no sight of them, and halied into the shoare.

Lagua.

The fourth day when we had sight of land, we found that the current had set vs thre leagues to the Eastwards of our reckoning, which we wondered at: for the first lande wee made, was Lagua. Then I caused our boate to be manned, and the Christophers also, and went to the shoare and took our Negro with vs. And on shoare wee learned that there were foure French shippes vpon the coast; one at Perinnen, which is six leagues to the Westward of Lagua; another at Weamba, which is foure leagues to the Eastward of Lagua; a thirde at Perecow, which is foure leagues to the Eastward of Weamba; and the fourth at Egrand, which is foure leagues to the Eastward of Perecow.

Perinnen.

Weamba, Perecow, Egrand.

When we had intelligence of these newes, we agreed to goe to the Eastward with the French men to put them from their traffique, and shotte off two or thre peeces in our boates to cause the shippes to wape: and hauing bene about one houre vnder saile, we had sight of one of the French men men and his selfe, halting off from Weamba to whome wee gaue chase, and agreed in the night for fear of ouerbooting them, that the Minion should first come to ancre, & after that about 3. houres, the Tyger and the Christopher to beare along all night.

The 5. day we found 3. of the French Shippes at ancre: one called La foye de Honfleur, a Shippe of 220. tunnes; another called the Ventercule or smal Roebarge of Honfleur, of 100. tunnes, both appertaining to the Shawdet of Honfleur, the 3. was called the Mulet de Barville a Shippe of 120. tunnes, and this Shippe belonged to certaine Marchants of Roan.

When we came to them we determined to lay the Admirall abooze, the Christopher the Vice-admirall, and the Tyger the smallest; but when we came nere them they wayed, and the Christopher being the headmost & the weacernmost man, went roome with the Admirall; the Roebarge went so fast that we could not fetch her. The first that wee came to was the Mulet, and her wee layd abooze and entred our men, and tooke her, which Shippe was the richest except the Admirall.
For the Admirall had taken about 80. li. of gold, and the Roebarge had taken but 22. pound, and all this we learned of the Frenchmen, who knewe it very well: for they were all in conference together and had bene vpon the coast of Mina 2. moneths and oude dayes: howbeit the Roebarge had bene there before them with another Ship of Diepe, and a Caruell which had beaten all the coast, and was departed one moneth before our arriuing there, & they 3. had taken about 700. li. of gold.

As soone as we had layd the Ship abooze, and left certaine men in her to keepe her, we set saile and gaue chase to the other 2. Shippes, & chased them all day and night, & the next day until 3. a clocke in the afternoon, but we could not fetch them, and therefore seeing that we brought our felues very farre to leeward of our place, we left the chase, & kept about againe to goe with the hoare.

The 7. day I sent for the capitaine, marchants & masters of the other Shippes, and when they came we wayed the gold which we had from the Frenchmen, which wayed 50. li. and 5. ounces of gold, this done we agreed to put men out of euery Ship into the pisse to keepe her.

The 12. day we came to the further place of the Mine called Egrand, and being come to an ancre discharged all the marchants goods out of the pisse, and would haue sold the Ship with the victuals to the Frenchmen, but because she was leake they would not take her, but desired vs to saue their liues in taking them into our owne Shippes: then we agreed to take out the victuals and stinke the Shippe, and deuide the men among our Shippes.

The 14. at night wee made an ende of discharging the pisse, and deuide all the Frenchmen except 4. which were sicke and not able to helpe themselues, which 4. both the Christopher and the Tyger refused to take, leaving them in their ship alone in the night, so that about midnigte
I was forced to fetch them into our Ship.

The 15. of April, moouing our companie for the boyage of Binnie, the most part of them all refused it. The 16. seeing the intwillingness of the companie to goe thither, we determined to spend as much time vpon the coast as we could, to the end we might make our boyage, & agreed to leaue the Minion here at Egrand, the Tyger to go to Pericow which is 4. leagnes off, & the Christopher to goe to Weamba, which is 10. leagnes to the wecward of this place: and if any of them both should haue light of more sailes then they thought good to meddle withall, to come roome to their felowes, to wit, first the Christopher to come with the Tyger, and then both they to come with vs.

We remained in this place called Egrand until the last day of April, in which time many of our men fell sicke, and 6. of them died, And here we could haue no traffique with the Negroes but 3. or 4. dayes in the weeke, and all the rest of the weeke they would not come at vs. We here lost our an-cre and broke a cable, and in the waying of another ancre some of our men were hurt.

The 3. of May not hauing the pinnelle sent vs with cloth from the other Shippes as they promised, we sold French cloth, and gaue but 3. pards thereof to euery fuffe.

The 5. day the Negroes departed, and to lve vs they would come to vs againe within 4. dayes, which we determined there to carie, although we had diuers of our men sicke.

The 8. day at our cloth in the Minion being sold, I called the companie together, to know to be-ther they would carie the sale of the cloth taken in the pisse at this place or no: they answered, that in respect of the death of some of their men, and the present sickness of 20. more, they would not carie, but repaire to the other Shippes, of whome they had heard nothing since the 27. of April: and yet they had our pinnelle with them, ouely to carie newes from one to another.

The 9. day we determined to depart hence to our felowes, to see what they had done, and to ac-comp what was to be done at the towne of Don Iohn.

The 10. day in the morning we set saile to seeke the Christopher and the Tyger.

The 11. day the capitaine of the Christopher came to vs, and told vs that they could finde small things at the places where they had bene.

Sickness.

The 12. William Crompton and I in our small pinnelle went to the Tyger and the Christopher at Perenine.

The 13. we sent away the Tyger to Egrande, because we founde nothing to doe at Perenine, worth the tarrying for.

The 14. our great pinnelle came to vs, and presently we put cloch into her, and sent her backe to Weamba where she had bene before, and had taken there 10. li. of golde.

The 15. the Minion came to vs, and the next day we went a shoare with our boates, and tooke but one ounce of golde.

Mowre.

The 19. day hauing set saille we came to an ancre before Mowre, and there we tarried 2. dayes, but tooke not an ounce of golde.

The 21. we came to an ancre before Don Johns towne.

The great towne of Don John.

The 22. we manned our boates and went to shoare, but the Negroes would not come at vs; then the Captaine of the Christopher and I tooke a Schiffe and 8. men with vs, and went and talked with the Negroes, and they said that they would send a man to the great towne, where Don John himselfe laye, to aduertise him of our coming.

The 23. we went a shoare againe, & the Negroes told vs that this day the marchants of Don John would come towne: so we tarried there vntill night, and no man would come to vs: but the uers of the Negroes made vs signes to depart.

The 24. the captaine of the Christopher tooke his boate & went to Mowre, and when he came thither certaine Negroes came to him to know the price of his wares, but in the end there came an Almabe, which he iudged came from the castle, & caused all the Negroes to depart from him: and when he saw they would come no more to him, he went a shoare and tooke certaine men with him, and then the Negroes cast stones at them, & would not suffer them to come by to their towne. And when they saw that, they tooke certaine of their Almades, & put them to the sea, & after wards departed. The same morning I went a shoare at Don Johns towne & tooke a white flag with me, but none of the Negroes coude come to me, which caused vs to iudge that the Portingals were in the towne. After this our boate came to vs well manned, and I sent one man by to the towne with a white flagge in his hand, but when he was come thither all the Negroes went away and would not speake with him. Then I sent one alone into the woods after them, but they in no case would come to vs. When we saw that, we tooke 12. goats and 14. hennes, which we found in the towne, and went aboard without doing any further hurt to the towne: and when I came aboard, I found our pinnelle come frō Cormatin, which had taken there 2. li. 5. ounces of gold. Then after much a doe with the forward Spariners, we went thitherwards with our ship, & the Christopher went to Mowre.

Cormatin.

A fight with the Negroes.

The 25. day the Master of the Christopher sent his boate to the shoare for ballast, and the Negroes would haue beaten the companie from the shoare, whereupon the companie resisted them, and slew and hurt many of them, and hauing put them to flight, burned their towne and brake all their boates. The 26. day our pinnelle came to vs from Cormatin, and had taken 2. li. 11. ounces of gold: and John Shirife told vs that the Negroes of that place were very detestous to haue a ship come backe againe to their towne. The 27. we wayed and went to Cormatin.

June.

The 28. the Christopher came to vs from Mowre, and taffiqued there two dayes. The second day of June the Tiger came to vs from Egrande, and the pinnelle from Weamba, and they two had taken about 50. li. of golde since they departed from vs.

The 4. day we departed from Cormatin to ply by to Shamma, being not able to tarrie any longer vpon the coast for lacke of victuals, and specially of drinke.

The 7. day we had sight of 5. of the king of Portingals ships, which came to an ancre besides the Castle.

The 8. day George and Binny came to vs, and brought with them about 2. li. of golde. This night the Christopher and the pinnelle came by to vs, which had bene 3. dayes a sterne of vs, and the Master of the pinnelle tolde vs their extremitie for want of victual, and therefore they desired to be taken out of the pinnelle, but we intreated them to goe to the pinnelle againe, and gaue them beere, bread, porke and stockfish to victual them vntill such time as we came to Shamma, that we might send her away with some of our Frenchmen.

The 10. day in the morning I tooke our small pinnelle, and the Captaine of the Christopher with me, and manned her well and went to the castle to victual the Portingals ships, and there we found one ship of about 300. tunne, and 4. cartuels: when we had well victualled them, we returned backe againe to our ships which we found 7. leagues at sea.

The 11. day in the morning we found our 2. lues well shot toward Shamma, and the Tiger with vs, but the Minion & the pinnelle had not wayed that night, so that we were out of sight of them: and the Tyger and the Christoand hauing brought our selues in the wether of the Portugals ships, we came to an anker to carrie for the Spinion, or els we might haue fetched Shamma. At night the Spinion, and the pinnelle came by to vs, but could not fetch so farre to the weatherward as we, and therefore they ankered about a league a wether the castle, and we waited in the Christophert, and went roome with her.

The 12. day the Tyger came roome with vs, and she and the Christophert finding themselves to stand in great need of victuals, would haue gone with the Portugals shippes to haue fetched some of them forth: but our matter and companie would in no case consent to goe with them, for feare of hanging when we came home: and the ocher two ships being fully minded to haue gone, and fearing that their owne companie would accuse them, durst not goe to them.

After this, by reason of the want of victuals in the pinnelle, which could receiue no victuals from the ocher ships, but from vs onely, we tooke out all our men, and put 12. French men into her, and gaue them victuals to bring them to Shamma.

The 19. day the Tyger and Spinion arrived at Shamma, and the Christophert within two leagues off them, but could not fetch the winde by reason of the scantnesse of the winde, which bath bene so scant, that in fifteene dayes we haue plied to the windewards but twelue leagues, which before we did in one day and a night.

The 20. day I tooke our pinnelle, and went to the towne of Shamma to speake with the captaine, and he tolde me that there was no golde there to be had, nor so much as a den to be bought, and all by reason of the accord which he had made with the Portugals, and I seeing that, depared peaceably from him.

The 21. I put such things as we had into our small pinnelle, and tooke one merchant of our ship, and another of the Tyger, and sent her to Hanta, to attempt, if she could doe any thing there:
that night she could do nothing but were promised to haue some golde the next day.

The next day (which was the 22.) being come, we sent our pinnelle to Hanta againe, but there neither the capitaine nor the Negroes durst traffike with vs, but inticed vs from place to place, and all to no purpote.

This day we put away our pinnelle, with five and twentie Frenchmen in her, and gaue them for their victuals,

- 2. Driefats of beead.
- 2. Cume of beere and syder.
- 1. Doghead of wine.
- 15. Dogheads of water.
- 1. Doghead of beefe.
- 2. Firkins of butter.
- 75. Stockefish.
- 1. Bartell of honey.

They put the French men with victuals
into the pin-nelle.

Of these 25. men, we set 15. at their ransome, which 15. were taken in the Spulet: the others, some came to vs in a pinnelle, and some from the shoare, and therefore we put them at no ransome.

The pinnelle with two bales, and all her apparell, we set at fortye crownes. The names of the Frenchmen, which we put in her, were these, being all of them ransomed,

Out of the Chrystopher, we set these men.

- Peter Huguille, of Battuille.
- Robert Hauerte, of Roan.
- Stephen Benner, of Honfleur.
- Michael Haguille, of Battuille.
- John Chapon, of Battuille.
- Legier le Feuer, of Honfleur.
- Barnardine Adam, of Blankuiste.

Out of the Minion, these.

The 23. of June, our pinnelle came to vs from Hanta, and told vs, that the Negroes had kept very ill with them, and would not traffike with them to any purpose.

Shamma
burne by the English.

The 24. we tooke our boate, and pinnelle, and manned them well, and went to the towne of Shamma, and because the Captaine thereof was become subject to the Portugals, we burned the towne, and our men seeking the spoile of such cristles as were there, found a Portugall chell, wherein was some of his apparell, and his weightes, and one letter sent to him from the Castle, whereby we gathered, that the Portugall had bene there of a long time.

Their returne
hoineward.

The 25. day, about thre of the clocke at afternoone, we set saile, and put into the sea, for our returne to England.

The current.

The last day of this moneth, wee fell with the shoare againe, and made our reckoning to be eightene leagues to the weatherward of the place where we set off. When we came to make the land, we found our selues to be eightene leagues to the lee ward of the place, where we set off, which came to passe, by reason of the extreame current that runneth to the Eastward: when we perceiued our selues so abused, we agreed to cast about againe, and to lye as neere the winde as we coulde, to fetch the line.

July.
Island.

The seventh of July, we had sight of the Isle of S. Thomas, and thought to haue sought the roade, to haue ankered there: but the next morning the winde came about, and wee kept our course.

The ninth, the winde varying, we kept about againe, and fell with the Island of S. Thomas, and seeking the roade, were becalmed neere the Island, and with the current were put neere the shoare, but could haue noe ground to anker: so that we were forced to hoist our pinnelle, and the other shippes their sailes to towne from the Island, which did little good, but in the end the winde put vs thre leagues off the shoare.

The tenth day, the Christopher, and the Tyger, cast about, whereby we iudged them to haue agreed together, to goe seeke some shippes in the roade, and to leaue vs: our men were not willing to goe after them, for feare of running in with the Island againe, and of putting our selues into the same danger that we were in the night before: but we shot off a peece, and put out two lightes, and they answered vs with lightes againe: whereupon we kept our course, & thought that they had followed vs, but in the morning we could not see them, so that they left vs willingly, and we determined to follow them no more.

But the 11. day, we altered our opinion, and course, and consented to cast about againe for the Island, to seeke our shippes, and about foure of the clocke in the afternoone, we met with them.

Our men vnder
the line.

The 12. we fell againe with the Island of S. Thomas, and the same night we found our selues directly vnder the line.

This Island is a very high Island, and being vpon the west side of it, you shall see a very high picke, which is very smal, and straight, as it were the steeple of a Church, which picke lieth directly vnder the line, and at the same South end of the Island, to the westward thereof, lieth a small Island, about a mile from the great Island.

August.

The third of August, we departed from the Isle of S. Thomas, and met the winde at the south west.

The first day, we found our selues in eight degrees.

The 12. day, we were in the height of Cape Verde.

The Island of Salt.

The 22. day, we fell with one of the Isles of Cape Verde, called the Isle of Salt, and being informed by a Scottish man, that we tooke among the French men vpon the coast, that there were fresh victuals to be had, we came to an anker there.

The 23. day, in the morning, we manned our skiffe, and went a shoare, and found no houses, but we saw foure men, which kept themselves alwaies farre from vs, as for cattell, we could finde none, but great store of goates, and they were so wild, that we could not take about thre or foure of them: but there we had good store of fische, and vpon a small Island, which lay by the same, we had great store of sea birds.

At night, the Christopher brake her cable, and lost an anker, so that she could tary no longer, so we all waied, and set saile. Vpon the same Island, we left the Scottish men, which was the occasion of our going a land at that place, but how he was left, we could not tell: but as we iudged, the people of the Island found him sleeping, and so carried him away: for at night I went my selfe to the Island to seeke him, but could heare nothing of him.

The 24. day, the Master of the Tyger came aboard vs, & told vs that his men were so weake, and the shippe so leake, that he was not able to keepe her about the water, and therefore requiered could finde the leake. This day we tooke a view of all our men, both those that were whole, and the sick also, and we found that in all the three Shippes, were not about thirtie sound men.

The great in-conuenience
by late staying upon the coast of Guine.

The 25. we had sight of the Isle of S. Nicholas, and the day following, of the other Isles, S.
Lucia, S. Vincent, and S. Anthonie, which foure Isles lye the one from the other, North-west, and by West, South-east, and by East.

The 26. we came againe with the Island of S. Anthonie, and could not double the Cape. This day, Philip Iones, the Master of the Christopher, came aboard vs, who had bene aboard the Ty-ger, and tolde vs that they were not able to keepe the Tyger, because she was leake, and the Spa-nier very weake, and said further, he had agreed with the Master and the company, that if the next day we could double the Island, we should runne to the leeward of it, and there discharge her: but if we could not double it, then to put in betwixt the Island of S. Vincent, and S. Anthonie, to see if we could discharge her.

The 27. seeing we could not double the Island, we put in betwixt the foresaid Islands, and went through them, but found no roade, and therefore carried for our fellowes, and by and by it fell calme, so that we were in hazard to fall aboard one of another, but God sent vs a small gale of wind, and we went before them, and left them a sterne.

The 28. we were out of sight of our company: but we kept about, and saw them againe, for they were becalmed under the Island all night.

September.

The third day of September, I went aboard the Tyger, with the Master, and merchants with me, to view the Shippe, and men: and we found the Shippe very leake, and onely six labouring men in her, whereof one was the Master Gunner: so that we seeing that they were not able to keepe the Shippe, agreed to take in the men, and of the goods what we could saue, and then to put the ship aboy.

The fifth day, we went to discharge the Tyger.

The eight day, hauing taken out the artillerie, goods, victuals, and gold of the Tyger, we gaue her vp, 25. degrees by North the line.

The Tyger gi-uen by.

The 27. we had sight of two of the Isles of the Azores, S. Marie, and S. Michael.

The 28. day, running along by S. Michael, we had sight of diuers small cartuels, but we could speake with none of them. In the night, about twelue of the clocke, we saw a Shippe, but she would not come roome with vs.

The third day of October, we had sight of another saile, and bare roome with her, to haue knowne some newes of England: but the weakenes of our Shippe, and men, caused vs to leaue her, and keepe our course.

October.

The fourth of October, we found our selues to be 41. degrees and a halfe from the line.

The fifth day, the weather was very foule with winde, and raie.

The first day, the Christopher came to vs, and willed vs to put with the Cape, for they also were so weake, that they were not able to keepe the sea, and we being weak also, we agreed to go for Vigo, being a place, whither many Englishmen frequent.

The 8. day, the Christopher took some roome with the Cape, but we hauing a merrie winde for England, and fearing the danger of enemies, which ordinarily lye about the Cape: besides, not knowing the state of our Countrey, and Spayne, and although it were peace, yet there was litle hope of friendship at their hands, considering the voyage that we had made, and we also being so weake, that by force and violence, we could come by nothing, and doubting also that the King of Portingall knowing of our being there, might worke some way with the counsell of Spayne, to trouble vs, and further, considering that if we did put in with any harbour, we should not be able to come out againe, all we sent for more men into England, which would be a great charge, and losse of time, and meanes of many dangers. All these things pondered, we agreed to loose off two pec-ces of ordinarie, to waite the Christopher, and then we went our course for England: the hearing our peece, followed vs, and we carried a light for her, but the next day in the morning, it was thicke, and we could not see her in the afternoone neither, so that we suspected, that either she was gone with Spayne, or els that she had put forth more sailes then we in the night, and was not a head of vs, so that then we put forth our top sailes, and went our course with England.

At the time when the Christopher left vs, we were within 120. leagues of England, and 45. leagues North-west, and by West, from Cape Finister: and at the same time, in our ships we had not about fye martiners, and six merchants in health, which was but a weake companie for such a Shippe, to seeke a foreign harbor,

The

Extreme weakness of our men.

The 16. day, about five of the clocke at night, we met with a great storme at the Westmouth well, and well, and our men being weak, and not able to handle our sailes, we lost the same night our maine saile, foresaile, and spere saile, & were forced to lye a bulling, until the eighteenth day, and then we made ready an othe course of a foresaile, and put it to the parte, and there with finding our felues far shot into the Sleet, we bare with our owne coast, but that foresaile continued not above two howres, before it was blown from the parte with a great, and then we were forced to lie a hull againe, until the nineteenth day of October, in the morning, and then we put an othe bonnet to our forespard, which, by the good blessing and providence of God, brought us to the Isle of Wight, where we arrived the 20. of October, in the afternoone.

Sir William Chester, M. Thomas Lodge, Anthony Hickman, & Edward Castelin.

A men whose heads be feughe

(For through the head the body strait

So I that late on bed

Pursued mine eye, and caught my bed no sleepe at all to catch:
To thinke upon my chaunce which hath me now becom, To lie a prisoner here in France, for ransome where I bid:
And feeling still such thoughts to chike in head to ruine, As in the sommer day the moats doe fall into the Sunne, To wake then by a rose,
fancie to put to flight:
And thus a while I doe purpise to pass away the night.
Morpheus I yetter
had small regard of me, Therefore I should be but deceiv'd on bed longer to lie.
And thus without delay rising as soone of sleepe, I hoped Cynthia to see

To me then walking cho
in darke withouten light, She wipe her face, and straight did show the best countenance she might:
A Monneye eke my head and lendes for a space, And olde fanthes a way now fled she putteth new in place.
Then leaning in my grate wherein full bright she shinde, And brewing her thus on her gate she mazed straight my minde:
And makes me thinke anon how oft in Ginnie lande she was my friend, when I have gone all night vpon the sande, Talking and watching eke least any boate of ship
At any time, while we had slepe perhaps by vs might slip.
And straight with ardent fire my head inflameth shee, Eke me inspires with whole desire to put in memoire, Chose dangers I haue bid and Laberinth that I haue pass without the clue of thesede, eke harder teopardie.
I then gin take in hand straight way to put in rime,
Such trauell, as in Ginnie lande
I haue pass in my time.
But hauing writte a while
I fall faint by the way,
And eke at night I looke that stile whiche I haue writte that day.
And thinke my doings then unto the future, to be set forth in print before all men, for euery one to see.
Eke with dispaire therefore my pen I cast a way,
And did intende this neuer more hereafter to assay.
My fellow prisoner then is Edward Gages some willes me to take againe my pen and ender that I begonne.
By this our friends (sayth he) shall right well vnderstande And knowe the great trauels that we haue pass in Heathen lande.
Take pen therefore againe in hande, if you requite, And thinke (saith he) thereof no paine to graunt this my desire.
Then once againe my bed my hand a worke doth sette:

His Edward Gages some, whole name was George Gage.

But first I fall vpon my bed and there deepe sighes I sette, To see that this to talke is giuen me silly wight:
And of Minerua helpe I aske that she me teach aright.
Helpe now without delay, helpe, helpe, ye Muses nine, O Cleo, and Calliope, shewe me how to define In condigne stile and phrase eche thing in euery line, To you I giue loe all the praise the trauell onely mine.
Giue care then ye that long to know of my estate, Whiche am in France in prison strong as I wrote home of late: Against all lawe of right as I doe thinke in deede, Sith that the warre is ended quite,
and peace is well agreede, Yet least perchance you might much maruell, how that I Into a Frenchmans powre should light in prison here to lie:
Giue no we attentue heerde,
a strange tale gin I tell, How I this yeare haue bene bestreede, scraping the gates of hell, Poze harde I thinke truly, in moze daunger of life, Than olde Orpheus did when he through hell did seeke his wife, Whose musike so did founde in pleasant play of string, That Cerberus that he with hounde (who as the Poets sing hauing three huge heads great, whiche doe continually Still breach out fire flames of heate most horrible to see) Did giue him leaue to passe in at the gates of Hell:
Of which gate he chiefe porter was the Poets thus me tell,
And how he pass alone through great king Plutos Court Hea ferried ouer with Charon and yet he did no hurt, Well to my purpose now, in Hell what hurt had hee?
Perchance he: might strange sighes moue and vgly spitts there see: Perhaps eke Tantalus,
there making of his moue,
Who staru'd alwayes: and Sisyphus still rolling by the stone,

Yet Orpheus passed by,
 and went still on his way,
 There was no torment came him nigh or heate to make him stay.
 And if a Gods name woulde at hazarde play my life In Guinic lande, to seeke for golde, as Orpheus sought his wife,
 At which false lande of Guinic
 I was eke once before,
 And scapt the deach as narrowly as Orpheus did and more.
 Which first ill lucke will I recite, then iudge you please, If loue plagued me not now rightly this yeare to goe againe.
 The other yeere before when Neptune vs had brought Safely vnto that burning shoze, for which so long we sought,
 One day when typpie was fall in sea at anker holde,
 The sailes vpstir'd, all businesse past the boateswaine then I colde, That he forch with shoulde see the small yinnelle well mande, Eke all things therein prest to be that we shoulde haue a lanbe, And gumer see that ye want not bo towe, pike, or bill, Pour of ordinance well pymed be with linstocks burning still.
 With merchandize a shoze, we hied to traffike then, Spaking the sea some vs before, by force of nine good men.
 And rowing long, at last a riuer we espie,
 In at the which we bare full fall to see what there might be.
 And entring in, we see a number of blacke soules, Whose likelinnell seem'd men to be,
 but all as blacke as coles.
 Their Capatne comes to me as naked as my nasse, Not hauing witte of boueltie to couer once his talle.
 By which I doe here gesse and gather by the way,
 That he from man and manlinnell was vnde and cleane astray.
 And sitting in a croug,
 a boate made of a logge,
 The very same tohercin you know we vsle to serue a hogge, A loofe he staid at first,
 put water to his cheeke,

His first voye age 1762.

A signe that he would not vs trust vnlesse we did the like.
 That signe we did likewise, to put him out of feare, And shewd him much haue marchandise to make him come vs neare.
 The wisde man then did come, by signes now crieth the fiend Of those gay things to giue him some and I should be his friend.
 I traffiat there that time for such things as they had,
 At night to ship I caried him, where I with clothes him clad, Pea, made him there good cheere, and he by signes againe Colde vs that he would fraighte vs then after a day or twaine.
 And eene thus as we were in talke, looking about, Our boate he sa we with wares that there was tied at sterne without:
 Which boate he wieting still,
 as then well stuf with ware,
 We thinking he had ment no ill, had thereof little care.
 And the next moone, againe we caried him a shoze, Eke barrd there that day with them as we had done before, But when Phœbus began somewhat for to vnto neare To Icarus his Court, the some of Dedalus most deare, (Whose chauce it is to dwell amidst the Ocean flood, Because that he obseru'd not well his fathers counsell good) We then with falle and ope to ship began to hie,
 That we might seech aboord, before the day had lost his eye, To ship we come at last which rto foure leagues from shoze Refresh vs after trauelle past, taken that day before,
 Then, as it was our guise, our boate at sterne we tie, Eke therein leaue our marchandise, as they were wont to be.
 With crouches then two or three this Capatne comes by night Aboord our boate, where he with wares himselte now fraigbeeth quight.
 The watch now hearing this,
 the boate they had vs by fall:
 But gone was all the marchandise, and they escape and pass.

The first of the voyage.

The

A conflict betwene
 the shre
 of our men

The next morn then by day
 againe we went to shore, A mends to haue for that which they had stolne the night before, But all in vaine was it,
 our signes were now too bad,
 They would not vnderstand a whit of any thing they had,
 But as though they had knowng for to reuenged be,
 As we row'd downe the streame along after comes hee and hee, A hundred boates come frō the stermost towne I say, At least meets vs as many mo before, so make vs stay, In euery boat two men,
 and gre at long targetts twaine: Spott of their darts had long strings then to picke and pull againe, Notingunners to your charge, giue list all acote, Ech saue for feare forakes his barge, and ducks in water low,
 We downe the streame amaine do row to get the sea, They ouertake vs loose againe, and let vs of our way,
 Then did the flames daro weere, with dart and targett thicke,
 With diuells shied eyes they peere where they their darts may sticke, Now Spaniards do put with right good will the pike, The halberd of the harque bulle the naked slaue doth strike, Though purge and body right that doth hee falleth dead, His fellow then in heauie plight, doth swimme away afraid,
 To bathe in braynly blood, then scerch the gray goose wing,
 The halberders at hand be good,
 and he to that all doth ring, Yet gunner play thy part,
 make halberd walk againe,
 And fellows row with like good heart that we may get the maine, Our arrowes all now spent, the Negros gan appoch:
 But pikes in hand already bent the blacke head fast doth hock, Their capaine being wood,
 a villaine long and large,
 With poi ned dart in hand doth shoud himselfe under his charge, And hark when he comes to enter in our boat,

A conflict
 betweene
 the Negros
 & our men.

Our maisters mate, his pike erst soone strike's though his targe and throat, The capaine now past charge of this brutish blake garo, His pike he balde backe which in targe alas was fixed hard:
 And wexling it with might,
 to pull it forth in hand, A deadly dart strikes him too right and in his flesh sticks fast, He stands still like a man, and shrikes not once therfore, But strikes him with his otone dart then which shot at him before, Then presse they on, and shake their darts on euery side, Which in our flesh doth lighte, and make both death wounds and wide, The gunner at that sound with two darts strooke at last, Whynks not yet though the double wound with streames of blood our brast, And che the maisters mate, of stomacke bolde and stout,
 For all his wound receiv'd of late,
 yet stirred not a foot, But kept his standyng still,
 till that a deathfull dart Did strike him through the ribs so ill, that scarce it mist his hart,
 The dart our hal'd quickly, his guts came out withall,
 And so great streames of blood that he for faintesse downe gan fall, The Negros seeing this,
 how he for dead doth lie,
 Who erst so valiant you'd twols, they gladly shout and cry:
 And then do minde as there to enter in his place, They thinke so many wounded were the rest would yeld for grace, We then stand by the pike, and soute row on our boat, Their darts among vs fast they strike that few were free if not,
 In legges and the in thigh, some wounded eke in th' arme, Pea many darts strike vs hard by,
 that mist and did no harme, By little thus at last,
 in great danger of life We got the sea, and almost past the danger erst so life, Then gan they all retire such all othe darts were spent They had nought to reuenge their ire, and thus away they went.

Six of our men wounded

Our boat to ship both me, where two eyes make lost way Six of vs nine were wounded so, the French for dead there lay.
Lo here how cruelly
the fiends ment vs to kill, Causelesse you see if they trulpy on vs might had their will.
And yet we gaue before much merchandise away, Among those slaves, thinking therefore to haue friendship for aye, And Orpheus past I too
the passage quietly, Among the soules in Charons boat, and yet to say trulpy I neuer read that he paid for his passage there, Who past and repall for to see if that his wife there were,
Nor yet that he paid ought,
or any byde there gaue
To any office, while he sought his wife againe to haue, Whereby I surely gesse these men with whom that we haue had to do, are fiends more fierce then those in hell shal be, Well we now scape thus the danger I haue tolde, Aboord we come, where feyn of vs could stand no to bring colde, Our wounds now being best,
to meat went they that list,
But I desired rather rest, for this in minde I wist.
That if I might get once a sleepe that were full sound, I should not feele my weary bones nor yet my sinarting wound, And lying long aloft
vpon my bed in paine, Unto Morpheus call'd I oft that he would not vntaine To heare my then poore waight, but send me helpe with speed That I might haue good rest this night of which I had great need,
He thought then by and by,
there hung a beauiwaight,
A each eye lid, which clos'd mine eye, and eke my head was seaight,
And being sleight a sleepe,
I fell into a sweaue,
That of my wound Iooke no keepe,
I dream'd I was in beauen, Where as me thought I see god Mars in armo, byght.

His arming sword naked holdes he in hand, ready to fight, Castor and Pollux there all complet stand him by, Least if that Mars conuinc'd were they might reuenged be,
Then came marching along the great blake smith Vulcan, Hauing a Masse of yron strong,
and thus at last began:
O Mars, thou God of might,
what is the cause that thou hast chaleng'd me with thee to fight to please am I not, Whereof if that thou hast any great grudge to me, Before this day he spent and past it shall reuenged be,
Then spake god Mars and said,
for that thou charlishly wight, Thy brutish blake people hast made with bold whire men to fight Which call'd on me for aid,
I bid thee warre for this,
Then answered Vulcan straight and said that that coast sure was his,
And therefore he would kill his blake burnt men defense, And if he might, all other kill whire to that coast w'd send, Dea thus (said he) in doubt that he his men had slain, And ere that we should passe this coast he would ha kill againe, Now marcheth Mars againe and fiercely gins to fight, The sturdy smith strikes free againe whose blowes did whire they fight, But Iupiter that sat in his great royall throne Hearing this noise maruill'd thereat, and straight way sendeth one To know the cause thereof:
but hearing them in fight, Commandeth them for to leaue off by vertue of his might,
And of Vulcan demands the cause: then answered he,
O mightie Ioue, whose power commands and rules all things that be,
Who as a word hast power all things to destroy cleane,
And in the moment of an houre, cauld them restore againe,
The same God licence me to speake now here my minde:
It is not Ioue, but Mars that is,
who that I was assignd,

And

And pointed king of most of all the Ginie land,
 A people is on my coast which doth me no man withstand, They do my people strike, they do this day them kill,
 To whom I minde to do the like if I may have my will,
 Then Iupiter bespake:
 O Vulcan then said he,
 Let this thy rage and anger stake for this time presently, But if at any time
 they shall me thus againe, Doe as thou list, that that ge is thine,
 I will not meddle then,
 I know them well (saith he) these men need not to feare, They have to fruitfull a countrey that there is none the like, But if they can not be there with content, but still Will seeke for golde in countrey, woyke then with them thy will,
 And therewith straighte doth send a punishment in post,
 To whom (saith he) see that thou went unto the wester coast, To Eolus the king,
 command him thus from me,
 That he straighte way without kingring do set at libertie,

His servant Zephius, which wote to looke to looke, The that he do command him thus,
 that he straighte way do go To Vulcans coast in hall, a ship where he shall staid,
 Which ship he must with gentle blast and che with moderate waide, Conduct fast to that coast which Albion west hight, And that no stormes do them withstand by day or che by night, I sleeping all this space,
 as it were in a crance, The masse of them that had apace do waken me by chance, Then looking out to know what waide do blow in state, The matter straighte came to me this and thus said by and by,
 All our ill lucke is past, we have a merie waide,
 I hope Englands shippes waide last,
 yet once againe to staid,
 When this I ha verdains to loue I wotred then,
 For weasing cleave the Ginie land for comming there againe, And passing on in post
 with favourable waides, We all arrivd on Englands coast with passing cheerefull minde,

The second voyage to Guinie, and the river of Selto, set out in the Month of November 1563, by Sir William Gerrard, Sir William Chester, Sir Thomas Lodge, Maister Benjamin Goslon, Maister William Winter, Maister Lionell Ducker, Anthonie Hickman, and Edward Castellin, with two ships, the one called the Iohn Baptist, wherein went for Maister, Laurence Rondell: and the other the Marlin, wherein went also for Maister, Robert Reuell, hauing for Factors, Robert Baker, Iustinian Goodwine, James Gliddell, and George Gage: and written in verse by the foresaid Robert Baker.

YOU heard before, that home I goe from Ginea at the last, But by and by, I quite forgoe the joynties I had past, And ships rigged also,
 with speed to ship againe,
 I being then requir'd to goe, did not deieue them plaine, But granted them to goe, unhappie foolish waite,
 When they command, che there to do the best service I might,
 In fine, to go our way
 now serveth time and tide, Having nothing vs to stay, what should we longer bide?

The hempen band with helpe of Partners doth theate
 To wey and reave that stonchfull helpe, by from his mothers teat,
 The Haider then gan cheere with silver whilst he blast, His Partners, which at the Neere are laboying wondrous fast, Some other then againe, the mainepart by to hoist,
 The hard haier doth hale a maine, whilst other at a trice Cut saile without delay:
 the rest that be below, Both theats about do hale straitway and boldens all let go.

The Helme a Hariner in hand then stant way to she,
 The Pike the what course to the within his card bed lookt, A gaine with liuer blask, the Hariter doch not faile, To cause his mates forch way in hall abroad so put more saile, We then lanch from the flope, sich warre we knowe to right,
 And kept in sea aloofe therefor two dayes and oke a night,
 And, as it is the guile, to topple a man we send,
 Who straight a sale of two espies, with whom we then do mend,
 A loofe would some with one,
 and roomeward tow to the rest:
 But with the called ship we gone, whom we thinke to be best,
 At last, in comming were as captaines use to do, I hale them, and of whence they were
 I did desire to knowe:
 Of France when they had said,
 we weaved them a maine,
 But they nothing there with us did like to be againe,
 We then our selues aduise through hope of purchase here, A maine say we, ye wily gallant of you shall bute to deere, To arme the maine top cho
 the bowe waile good eke, His mace on the forepart also makes hall to do the like, To top both stoncs and barte good fello wes boue space:
 The quarter maffers with glad hearts do kin to eck one his place, Our toplasses strike we cho and sic our sailes to sighe, Our bulwarke at maine mast also is made like with a right, Upon our poope eke then right subtilly we lay powder, to blowe by all such men, as euer theraway,
 Our Crumpeier aloft
 no to sounde the seats of war, The bralen pieres toyng oft sike forch both chaine and bar, Some on the yardecs againe do weaue with naked sword, And crying loud to them amaine they bid us come aboard, To both his side in blood the graigoose fleeth in hall:

And Hariners as Lions wood, do criit aboard as fast, No to stie f aulious sic right good to sicke pray, And hills at first some dead comely eck thing within shot may,
 A arme ye no to my mates I say, see that ye nothing lacke, At euer loope then gins straight way a barquebully to cracke, Their saile to burne, we shoot our arrowes of holle fire, And pikes burning therewith about laud toke with like desire, The straight way sich for whire the streward call I then,
 With fiery spie enough therein
 I thinke bute my men,
 And then euen with a loope our lime pot ppesto fall, This wily gallant we clap aboard and enter him with hall, Their nettings now gan tear with what of heauis stone, And some mace heads with us who neuer could make more,
 The barquebully awake which he on top doch he, Discharge full of bades that doch smoke to kill his enemy,
 Which in his enemies top doch sighe, there it is keepe, Yet he at last a deadly tope is made from thence to keepe, Then durteth oke with hall into this frenchmans top, Who cuts eck rope, and makes to fall his yarde, withouten stop, Then Hariners belowe,
 as carelesse of the pike,
 Do hem, and hill still as they goe, and force not where they strike,
 And still the crumpeier sound with pleasinge blast doch cheare Eek Hariner, so in that sound that they nothing did feare, The Hariter then also,
 his mates to cheare in sighe,
 His whistle chearefully doch blowe, whereby strait euer night So fierce begins to be,
 that frenchmen gin to stoe, And English men as right worthy do catch for pillage cho, What would you more I say but tell the truth alway, We v the our matters to this day we caried him along,

Unto a Port in Spain,
 which sure is call'd the Groine, Whereas we for a rich lading plaine receiued ready coine,
 Well thus this good lucke past, we through sale shew vs scoure,
 To Ginney coast eke come at last,
 O that unhappie houre.
 My hand alas for feare
 no to shakes, of this to witte, Mine eye almost full frange with teare, eke lets me to intice.
 What should I here recite the miserie I had,
 When none of you will scarce credit that ere it was so bad?
 Well, yet I would as say to tell it, if I might,
 But O Minerua, helpe me aye, my wits asford be quite.
 Dea helpe, ye muses nine,
 let no thonghe me withstand, Aid me this thing well to define, which here I take in hand, Well, thus it forwene the,
 in Ginney now arriv'd, Nine men in boat to shore we go, where we traffike espide, And parting at midday
 from ship, on good intent In hope of traffike there I say to shore away we went.
 Our ships then riding fast in sea at anker bigge,
 We minded to dispatch in hall, eke to returne that night.
 But being hard by land, there suddenly doth rise
 A mightie winde, where with it rains and thunders, in such wise, That we by shore did ride, where we best Port might finde, Our ships we thinke from anker slide, a crize before the winde.
 This night Vulcan begins on vs reueng'd to be,
 And thunderbolts about he flings most terrible to see, Admixt with fierie flame which cracks about our eares, And thus gins he to play his game, as now to hym appears.
 He Eolus hath seer
 herein to be his friend,
 And all the whirling windees with speed among vs doth he send.
 Thus hard by shore we lay,
 this wet and weary night,

But on next mornie and all the day of ship we had no sight.
 For Vulcan all this night from fierie forage so fast Sent thunder bolts with such great light, that when the night was past,
 The next day there remaind so great smoke all about, Such like a mist, eke there with raine,
 that we were wet through out.
 And thus in smoke maides he to part vs from our ship:
 Thus were a one eke another see,
 and so haue we the slip.
 Our ships then backe againe, thinking we were behind,
 Do saile by shore a day or twaine in hope there vs to finde.
 And we the contrary,
 do row along the shore Forward, thinking our ships to be still sailing vs before.
 They sailing thus two dayes or three,
 and could not finde vs than,
 Do thinke that in that foule night we were drowned euer man.
 Our ship then netwes doth beare, when he to England wends That we nine surely drowned were,
 and thus doth tell our friends:
 While we thus being lost, allie in miserie
 Do row in hope yet on this coast, our ships to finde truly.
 Well thus one day we spent, the next and third likewise,
 But all in vaine was our intent, no man a saile espies:
 Three dayes be now cleane past since any of vs nine,
 Of any kinde of food hath taste, and thus gan we to pine, Till at the last bare need bids vs hale in with land, That we might get some root or weede our hunger to with stand:
 And being come to shore,
 with Negros we increat, That for our wares which we had there they would giue vs to eat, Then fetch they vs of roots, and such things as they had,
 We gave to them our wares to boote and were therof right glad.
 To sea go we againe,
 in hope along the shore To finde our ships, yet thinking plaine that they had bene before.

And thus with saile and oze twelue dayes we went hard by The strange vnrcomforable shoze where we nothing espiē, But all thicke woods and bush and mightie wilbernelle, Out of the which oftentimes do rush strange beasts both wilde and fierse, Whereof oft times we see,
 at going downe of Summe, Diuers descend in companie, and to the sea they come, Where as vpon the sand
 they lie and chew the cud: Sometime in water eke they stand and wallow in the floud, The Elephant we see,
 a great vnwieldie beast,
 With water fills his troonke right hie and blowes it on the rest, The Hart I saw likewise delighted in the soile, The wilde Boze eke after his guise with snout in earth doth moile.
 A great strange beast also,
 the Antelope I worne
 I there did see, and many mo, which erst I haue not seene, And oftentimes we see a man a shoze of twaine, Who strait byings out his Almadie and to vs to vs a maine, Here let we anker fall,
 of wares a shew we make,
 We bid him choose among them all, what wares that he will take
 To bring to vs some fish, and fresh water therfore,
 Or else of meat some dainties dish, which their cookes dresse a shoze.
 They bring vs by and by great roots and berres eke, Which grow vpon the high palme tree, such meat as they do like,
 We drinke eke of their wine much like our whey to see:
 Which is the sappe as I haue seene that runnes out of a tree, Thus do they bring ech thing which they thinke to be good, Sometime wilde hony combes they bring which they finde in the wood, With roots and baggage eke our corpes we thus sustaine From famine, though it be so weake, that death was figured plaine In euery ioynnt, for lacke of sustenance and rest,

That still we thinke our hearts would with sorowes so oppress. (speake)
 We now alongst the coast haue saild so many a mile,
 That sure we be our ships be lost, what should we do this while:
 In Heathen land we be, impossible it is That we should fetch our owne countrey in such a boat as this.
 We now gan to perceiue that we had outpast
 The Melegete coast so much, that we were come at last vnto the coast of Myne, for Niegros came aboord With weightes to poise their golde so fine, yea speaking euery woord In Portugesse right well demanding traffike there,
 If we had any wares to sell, and where our ships then were:
 We answered them againe,
 we had two ships at sea, Two ships
 The which would come traffike with the we thought within a day,
 The cause why we thus saie, was hope to be well vsde: But seeing this, as men delmad away we went, and mulde Whither our ships were gone, what way were best for vs:
 Shall we here perish now such ones no, let vs not do thus:
 We see all hope is past our ships to finde againe, And here our liues do shorten fall in miserie and paine:
 For why the raging heat of Summe, being so extreme, Consumes our flesh away in sweat, as deeply it is seene,
 The Ternados againe
 so often in a weeke,
 With great lightnings, thunder and raine with such abundance eke, Doe so beat vs by night,
 that we sleepe not at all, Whereby our strength is bared quite,
 no man an oze can hale, How hard liue we, alas:
 three whole dayes oft be past, Ere we po oze men (a heauy case) of any thing doe tast, These twentie dayes ye see,
 we haue sit still ech one,
 Which we do of necessite, for place to walke is none.

Our legs now vs deceiue, Swolne euery iaine withall,
 With this disease, which, by your leaue, the Scurue men doe call, We cannot long endure
 in this case as we be,
 To leaue our boate I am right sure, compeld we must agree, Thrice waues for vs there is,
 and this is my request,
 That we may of these thre deceiue, to choosethereof the best.
 The Castle of the Mine is not farre hence, we know, To morrow moyne we there may be,
 if chieker you will goe.
 There Portugals do lie, and christened men they be :
 If we dare trust their curtesie, the worst is hanging glee.
 Our miserie may make them pittie vs the moze, Mine such yong men great paines would for life to hale an oze. (take Their Gallies may perhaps lacke such yong men as we,
 And thus it may fall in our laps, all Galep slaves to be,
 During our life, and this we shall be sure to haue, Although we row, such meate as is the allowance of a slaue.
 But here we rowe and serue, our misery is so gre:
 The slaue with meate inough they serue, that he may teare his oze.
 If this you will not like, the next way is to goe :
 vnto the Negros, and to seeke what friendship they will shew.
 But what fauour would ye of these men looke to haue :
 Who beakly sauage people be,
 farre worse then any slaue :
 If Cannibals they be in kind, we doe not know, But if they be, then welcome we,
 to pot straight way we goe, They naked goe like wilde, for shame we cannot so :
 We cannot liue after their guise, thus naked for to goe.
 By roces and leaues they liue, as beastes doe in the wood :
 Among these heathen who can chynic, with this so wilde a food :
 The piercing brace againe, that frozeth with such strength,

Piercing our naked flesh with paine, will vs consume at length.
 The third and last is this,
 (if those two you refuse)
 To die in miserable wise, here in the boate you chuse,
 And this iudge by the way, moze trust is to be giuen, vnto the Portugals at way, sith they be christened men, Then to these heathen foze, which beakly are ye see :
 Who of our death will make a sport,
 if Cannibals they be.
 We all with one consent,
 now with despising plaine: (Such if we die as innocet, the moze it is our gaine)
 Our sayle we hope in hast, with speed we mind to go vnto the castell, now noe past a twentie leagues vs fro, And sayling all this day, we spied late in the night,
 As we pass by thus on our way, vpon the shore a light.
 Thou sayd our Boate swaine thus,
 by this great light a shore, Ceasique there seemes, will you let vs anker this night theretofore, And trie if we may get,
 this next morning by day,
 Some kind of food for vs to eate, and then to goe our way :
 We anker there that night, the next morning to thore :
 And in the place, where we the light did see the night before,
 A watch house now there stood, vpon a rocke without :
 Hard by a great blacke crosse of wood,
 which putteth vs in doubt, What place that this should be,
 and looking to the shore,
 A Castell there we gan espie, this made vs doubt the moze, Wherein we saw did stand a Portingall of twaine :
 Who held a white flag in his hand, and waued vs amaine.
 Our ketch as trade now shakes, wherby we gan retire,
 And he at vs a shot then makes,
 a Negro giuing fire,
 A piece discharged thus,
 the killing pellet lightes,
 I thinke within a yard of vs, but none of vs it hit.

We w<sup>ch</sup> then we had there a good ship, she of twaine, But helplese now, we to use a hope to know th' end of our paine, The nearer that we went to them unto the hope,
 To yeld our selues, as first we ment they still did shoot the moze.
 Now Canons loud gan roze, and Culuerins now cracht,
 The Castell eke it thundred soze, as though the wals weere sackt.
 Some shot both lighte hard by,
 some ouer vs againe:
 But though the shot so thicke doth sic, yet to we we in a maine, That now so nere we be unto the castell wall,
 That none of them at vs we see,
 can make a shot at all.
 We ment a land to goe,
 their curtesie to trie:
 But from the wal great stones they thow, and therewith by and by,
 The Negros marching downe, in battell ray do come,
 With dart and target from the towne, and follo w all a thomme.
 A bowe in hand some bent, with poynted arrow prest,
 To strike therewith they be full bent, a pined English best.
 But stones come downe so fast on vs on euery side, We thinke our boats bottom would hysht if long we thus abide,
 And arrowes sic so thicke, hyshting at euery care,
 Which both in clothes and kely do sticke, that w<sup>ch</sup>: as men past feare, Cry now, I launch launche in hatt, hale of the boate a maine: Foure men in banke let them sit fast and rowe to sea againe.
 The other fise like men, do manfully in hand,
 Take by each kind of weapon then, these wolues here to wichland,
 A harquebush takes one, another bends his bowe, Among the slaues then do wone fals one,
 and other here I trowe.
 At those Poringals then thoot we,
 vpon the Foxt which stand,
 In long fine white shirts as we see,
 and linckocks in th' hand,
 And of these shirts so white we painted some full red,

Striking their open corps in sight, with dunt of arrow head,
 For we saw they had there no Gallies vs to take,
 Where threatenings the rowd vs not feare of make vs once to shake.
 Then Canons loud gan roze, and pellets sic about,
 And each man halset hard his oze and mooued not a foote.
 Pea though the powder sent the pellets thicke away, Yet spite of th<sup>em</sup> cleane though we went at last, and got the sea, And pieces charging fall,
 the y shot after vs so,
 That wonder was it how we past the furie of our foe.
 The pined arme felt not as now, the heauie oze:
 With foure such ozes was neuer boat,
 I thinke, row'd so befoze,
 To seaward scaping so, these Negroes we see there, Came rowing after vs to know, what countrey men we were:
 We answered Englishmen, and that thit her we came,
 With wares to traasque th<sup>ere</sup> with them, if they had meant the same,
 They Portuguse doe speake righte naturall twis:
 And of our ship to know they seeke, how big and where she is.
 We answered them againe
 we had two ships at sea, Right well appointed full of men, that straight would take their way Along the coast for gold, they tary but for vs,
 Which came with wares there to haue sold but that they w<sup>ch</sup> d vs thus,
 Then gan they vs to pray,
 if we lackt any thing,
 To anker there all that whole day, and they to vs would bying
 All things that we doe want, they soze say they be:
 But we their words yet trusting scant, refuse their curtesie.
 We aske them of this hold what place that it should be, Then they againe thus straight vs told that Poringals the lie.
 And how that point they say, which there hard by we see,
 Was one of Cape three points, that lay the Westermost of these.

Cape three points.

Withouen further speere, we holde one saile to see, Spinding a friendlier place to seech, and thus we part our way.
We mind cras to spoone

But now I aske rather what you loue Negros will shew a shoye, We then with saile wape went backe againe in shoye I thinke longers I thinke, and wape from thence where we were chaff And here we anker fall aboard the Negros come
We gaine gay things wape them all, and thus their hearts we wonne, At last aboard comes one that was the Kings chiefe somer To whom by signes I made great mone, how that I was wdone, Had lost our ships, and the were almost star'd for meate, And knew not where our ships to seeke, of any thing to ease.
I offered him our wares,
and to him take them all:
But he perceiving na in the crates, which from our eyes did fall,
Had great pittie on vs,
and sayd he wou'd haue nought,
But straighte by signes he wou'd vs then, that we should take no thought.
As one whom God had sent,
and hope for vs in shoye,
To know in half a way he went,
the Kings pleasure on shoye.
And came forthwith againe, yea, haue vs come a land: Whereof God knowes we were full faue, when this we vnderstand.
Each man hankes to his ope, to hale the boate a land: Where as we see vpon the shoye, five hundred Negros stand.
Our men to wading in a maine, the billoin went to hie,
That straighte a waue ouerwhelms vs and there in sea we lie. (cleare The Negros by and by,
come swimming vs to saue
And brought vs all to land quicky, not one backe play the knaue.
The Kings come after this,
a stout and valiant man,
In whom I thinke Nature shoyd, with waight all that she can,
He then I say vnturne vnder them straighte to saue our boate,

To worke for health goe many hands, and vying the same a floate,
Some I wonne to saue an ope, some due for things be lost:
I thinke there beise to hale a shoye, five hundred men almost.
Our house thus halde up vye, all things straighte way were brought The which we with our soules eie, no man that durst herpe ouge.
Then vs they led a way, knowing we wanted meate, And gaue vs vs, euen such as the y themselves doo daily eate.
Was neuer Diale in wood halfe so much wondered at,
As we were then poore men alas, which there among them sat.
We feared yet our part,
and wishe a month were past.
For each man there went with his darr, which made vs oft agast.
We lay vpon the ground, with them there all that night:
But fearing still a deadly wound, we could not sleepe a whit.
Two dayes thus past we well, no man vs offered wong:
The cause thereof I gin you tell, they thought this them among:
Our ships had bene at sea, and would come there before Two dayes, to seech vs thence a way, and giue them wares good shoye.
But when they thus heare tell how that our ships be lost,
And that we know not very well, when ships will come to coast:
They ther wape wearie straighte, and they which did befoye At sundy times giue vs to eate, did giue vs now no more,
Our lo'uance waite so small,
that neuer nine I gett, Where seru'd the like, yet still withall, it waped less and less.
Some run now in the wood, and there for woocys do seeke, Bafe meate would here be counted good,
too had that we mislike.
Our clothes now rot with sweate, and from our backs do fall, Saue that whom nature tells for shame, we couer noughte at all.
One runs to seeke for clay to fashion straighte a pot,
And hardens it in Shunne all day:
an ocher saileth not

To fetch home wood for night, and the for fire longht.
That we our woads and things fetch might if any home were brought.
The rest the wood doth seeke, the euery bush and tree
For berries and such baggage like, which should seeme meate to bee.
Our fingers serue in stead, both of pickaxe and spade,
To dig and pull up euery weed, that growt within the shade.
The digg for rootes the ground, and searche on euery hylle For berries, which if we had found, then straight way to the fire:
Where we roast some of thost, the rest fetch in a pot,
And of this banquet nought we lose, no fragment resteth noe.
The night as beaues we lie the bare hard earth vpon, And round by vs a great fire lighte to keepe wild beaues vs from.
But what should I recite, or couer to declare My sorowes past, or the endite of my hard Ginnie fate?
I feele here to enlarge my miserie in that land, A top in head doth not to me charge, as here to hold my hand,
In fine, what would ye mooe, the heat did so exceed,
That wanting cloths it straight to soe, no man could it abide,
The countrey the so wald be,
and vnehealthfull withall,
That hungry stomacks neuer fill'd, doth cause faint bodies fall,
Our men fall sicke apace,
and cherishing haue none:
That now of nine, within thoye space we be left thre alone, Alas, what great agast
to vs thre liuing yet,
Was it to see, that death so fast away our fellowes str:

And then to loue on his
we call for helpe and grace, And him bestroch vnfaindly, to fetch vs from this place.
From this wild heathen land, to Chastellaine againe, Or else to lay on vs his hand, and rid vs from our paine.
Least that we ouerpass
with too much miserie, Perhaps as weake beaue our behest wher we owe God an high.
And least we liuing here among this heathen, might Perchance for need to that which were right betwixt in his sight.
Well, so my purpose then,
when we to loue thus crye,
To helpe vs hence poore silly men from this our miserie.
He hearing vs at length,
how we to him doe call,
He helpe vs with his wanted strength, an straighte thither withall, A French ship sent us last,
with wher we thre go hence:
But sit in earth there lie full fast, and neuer like come thence.
This French man as I say, through sale and surging seas, As brought from Ginnie land, a way to France, the Lord we praise.
And warre he proued to plaine when we entered his ship:
A prisoner therefore I remaine, and hence I can not slip Till that my ransom be agreed vpon, and paid,
Which being leuied yet so hie, no agreement can be made.
And such is to my chance, the meane time to abide
A prisoner for ransom in France, till God send time and tide.
From whence this idle time to England I doe send:
And thus till I haue further time, this Tragedie I end.

The voyage of M. George Fenner to Guinie, and the Islands of Cape Verde, in the yeere 1606. with three ships, to wit, the Admirall, called the Castel of Comfort, the May Flower, and the George, and a Pinnesse also. Written by Walter Wren.

On the 10. day of December in the yeere abovesayd, we departed from Wilmouth, and the 12. day we were thwarf of Wane,

The 15. day in the morning being Sunday, we had sight of Cape Finister, and the same night we lost the company of our Admirall, wherfore we sayled along the coast of Portugall, hoping that our Admirall had bene before vs.

The

The 18. day we met with a French Ship, of whom we made inquirie for our Admirall, but he could not tell us the wayes of him: so we followed our course to the Islands of the Canaries.

The 25. day in the morning we fell with a small Island called Porto Santo, and within 3. houres we had sight of another Island called Madera, which is 6. leagues from Porto Santo,

The last 25. day being the day of the Equinixie, we hoised out our boate, and set Master Edward Fenner Captaine of the May Flower aboard vs being in the George, with the Paister whose name was Robert Courtiſe, and others of the sayd ship, and treated them with such cheere as God had sent vs.

The 28. day we fell with an Island called Tenerif, which is 27. leagues from the said Island, and on the East ſide thereof we came to an anker in foyle ſadome water, within a bafe ſhoete of the ſhoie, in a little Baie, wherein were three or foure ſmall houſes: which Baie and houſes were diſtant from a little towne called Santa Cruz, a league or thereabout, and as we roade in the ſayd Baie, we might ſee an Island called the grand Canarie, which was 6. or 7. leagues from vs.

The 29. day the May Flower ſo that ſhe could not ſet into the roade where we were at an anker, by reaſon the wind was off the ſhoie, & becauſe ſhe bare roomer from the land then we did, in the morning came bearing in with the towne of Santa Cruz, thinking to come to an anker in the roade againſt the towne, and befoze ſhe came within the reach of any of their ordnance, they ſhot at her foure pieces, which cauſed her to come roomer with vs, and came at laſt to an anker by vs. And about one of the clocke in the after noone, the ſoynamed Captaine of the May Flower, wrote a letter a ſhoie, directing it to the head officer of the towne of Santa Cruz, to the intent to vnderſtand the pretence of the ſhooting of the ſayd ordnance.

The letter being written, Robert Courtiſe maſter of the May Flower, and Walter Wren, were appointed to deliuer the ſame a land at the three or foure houſes, to be conuicted to the ſoylſayd towne, and ſo went with ſixe men in the boate, and rowed to the ſhoie as neere as they might, for ſetting the boate on ground, for the ſea went cruellly at the ſhoie.

The people ſtood in number 30. perſons, with ſuch armour as they had: the ſoylſayd Wren called to them in Spaniſh, declaring to them that they had a letter, which they would very gladly haue conuicted vnto the towne, ſhewing that they would traffique with them as merchants, deſiring their helpe for the conuicance of the ſame letter. Which that one of the Spaniards tolled vs to come on land, & we ſhould be welcome, but doubting the worſt, the ſayd Walter answered them, that they would not come a land, vntill they had anſwere of their letter which they had brought.

Whereupon one of the Spaniards vntiaid himſelfe, and lepe into the water, and ſwamme to the boate, whom we receiued. And he ſaluted vs, and demaunded what our requeſt was: we made him anſwere, that by miſfortune we loſt the companie of our Admirall, and being bound to this Island to traffique for wines and other things neceſſarie for vs, doe heare mind to ſtay vntill ſhe come.

Concerning our letter, he made vs anſwere that he would with all diligence carie it, and deliuer it according to the direction, and ſo the ſayd Walter knit the letter in a bladder, and deliuered it vnto him, and alſo gaue him foure royals of Spaniſh money for his paines: and promiſing that we ſhould haue anſwere of it, heooke his leaue, and ſwamme againe a ſhoie, where the people ſtood ready to receiue him. And after that they had talked with him, and vnderſtood our meaning, ſome of them ſpew vpon their hats, and the other put them off holding them in their hands, and made vs very curteous ſignes, alwayes deſiring that the boate would come a land, but we reſtating the roade backe againe aboard.

The 30. day the Governours brother of Santa Cruz, came aboard the May Flower, with ſixe or ſeuen Spaniards with him, who concluded with the Captaine that we might come a ſhoie and traffique with them, but that day we did not, for we had no ſufficient pledge of theirs for our aſſurance. Our Captaine entertained them well, and at their departure gaue them foure pieces of ordnance for a farewell, and beſtowed vpon them two chekes with other things.

The ſayd Governours brother promiſed our Captaine that he ſhould haue ſufficient pledges the morow following, which was not done, whereupon we grew ſuſpicious, and went not that day a ſhoie.

The firſt day of Januarie, our Captaine ſent Nicholas Day, and Iohn Sumpter a ſhoie, who were very well entertained with as many of our companie as went after them.

In the ſayd Island is a maruelous high hill called the Pike, which is a ſacre off more like a cloud in the aie, then any other thing: the hill is round and ſomewhat ſmall at the top, it hath not bene known that euer any man could go vpon the top thereof. And although it ſtand in 28. degrees which is as hot in Januarie, as it is in England at September, yet is the top of the ſaid hill ſnowed, and ſummer ſeldome without ſnow.

The

In this Island about two leagues from the said Santa Cruz, is a citie called Anagona.

The third day we departed about the Westernne point of the Island, about 12. or 14. leagues from Santa Cruz, into a Baie which is right against the house of one Pedro de Soufes, in which Baie we came to an anker the 5. day, where we heard that our Admirall had bene there at an anker 7. dayes before vs, and was gone thence to an Island called Goimera, wherupon we set saile px sently to seeke him.

They inerte their Admirall againe.

The 6. day we came to an anker against the towne of Goimera, where we finde our Admirall, which was very ioyfull of our coming, and we also of his sight.

In the sayd roade we found Edward Cooke in a tall ship, and a ship of the Copperminits of London, which the Portugals had trecherously surprisid in the Baie of Santa Cruz, upon the coast of Barbarie, which ship we left there all spoiled.

Our General and merchants bought in the said towne for our provision, 14. butts of wine, which cost 15. ducats a butt, which were offered vs at Santa Cruz in Tenerif, for 8, 9, and 10. ducats.

The 9. day we departed from this roade to an other Baie, about 3. leagues off, and thereooke in fresh water: and so the 10. day we set saile towards Cape Blanke, which is on the coast of Ginnie.

It good CAP used.

The 12. day we fell into a Baie to the Eastward of Cape Pargos, which is 35. leagues from Cape Blanke. But hauing no knowledge of that coast, we went with Cape Blanke, and at the fall of the land we founded, and had 16. fadome water two leagues from the shoie. The land is very lowe, and white sand. Upon the fall of the sayd coast, beware how you boiote in 12. or 10. fadome, for within 2. or 3. castes of the lead you may be on ground.

The 17. day, we set saile from Cape Blanke, directing our course South and by East, and South among, and so fell into a Baie to the Eastward of Cape Verde, about 16. leagues, and about 6. leagues from the shoie. The sayd land seemed vnto vs as if it had bene a great number of Hills vnder saile, being in deed nothing els but the land which was full of Hammocks, some high some lowe, with high trees on them. We bare with the sayd land till we were within 3. leagues of the shoie, and then we founded, and found 28. fadome water, blacke oafe. This day we saw much fish in sundry sculs swimming with their noses with the bümme of the water.

Cape Verde.

Passing along this coast, we might see two small round hills, seeming to vs about a league one from the other, which is the Cape, and betwene them are great shoie of trees, and in all our dayes sailing we saw no land so high, as the said two hills.

The 19. day we came to an anker at the Cape, in a roade fast by the Westernmost side of two hills, in 10. fadome of water, where you may ride in five or six fadome, for the ground is faire, and alwayes you shall haue the wind off the shoie. And as soone as we were all at an anker, our General came aboard vs, and with him the master of the Admirall, whose name was William Bats, and with them the Captaine of the Viceadmirall, whose name was master Edward Fenner, and Robert Currisse the master, and dined aboard of vs, being in the George, whererin was Captaine John Heywood, and John Smith of Hampton master, and there we concluded to goe a land, to which was halfe a mile from vs: and by the counsell of William Bats, both Captaine and merchants and diuers of the company went without armour: for he sayd, that although the people were blacke and naked, yet they were ciuill: so that he would needes giue the venter, without the consent of the rest, to go without weapon. Thus they rowed to shoie, where, we being in the ship might see a great company of Negroes naked, walking to and fro by the sea side where the landing place was, waiting for the coming of our men, who came too soone, and landed to their losse as fell out afterwards.

The foolish rashness of Wm. Bats, persuading the company to land thus armed.

There went a shoie the Admirals kiffe, and the May Flowers boate, and in them the number of 20. persons of thereabouts, as master George Fenner the General, his brother master Edward Fenner, Thomas Valentine, John Worme and Francis Leigh marchants, John Haward, William Bats, Nicholas Day, John Tomson, and others.

At their coming to the shoie there were 100. Negroes of byward, with their bowes and arrows: our Captaines and merchants talked with them, and according to the vse of the countrey, the one demanded pledges of the other, and they were content to deliuer 3. of their Negroes for 5. of our men. Our 5. mens names were these, John Haward, Wil. Bats, Nich. Day, Joh. Tomson, and Joh. Currisse: these were deliuered them, and we receiued 3. Negroes into our Admirals kiffe.

Cruet, muske, gold & graine, the commodities of Cape Verde.

Our men being a shoie among the Negroes, begaine to talke with them, declaring what wares and merchandise we had, as woollen cloth, linnen cloth, iron, specle and other things. The Negroes answered againe they had cruet, muske, gold and graine, which pleased our captaines and merchants very well. Then the Negroes desired to haue a sight of some of our wares, to the which our merchants were content, and shortly with stut aboard one of the boates for part of their merchandise, and called Anagona, about 12, or 14 leagues Petto de Soules, in which I had bene there at in an a, whereupon wee see sayle we finde our Admirall, of the Coppermines of Santa Cruz, upon the coast of 14, but of wine, 8, 9, and 10. Ducats. goes off, and thereooke in is on the coast of Ginnie, which is 35. leagues from Cape Blanke, and at the in the Hoze. The land is you bozow in 12, or 10.

South and by East, and about 16, leagues, and ad bene a great number of of Daimonks, some high were within 3. leagues of his day we saw much fish to us about a league one crees, and in all our dayes the steepest side of two hills, the ground is faire, and al at an anchor, our Generall was William Bats, and Edward Fenner, and Roretin was Capaine John to goe a land, which was ne and merchants and di people were blacke and without the consent of the g in the ship might see a where the landing place ed to their loist as fell out and in them the number his bocher matter Ed- merchants, John Haward, with their bowes and ar the use of the countrey, the their Negros for 5. of our 7, Joh. Tomson, and Ioh. Admirals (kiffe, em, declaring what ware the things. The Negros our captiues and mer- wares, to the which our art of their merchandize; and

and in the same time while the boace went to the ship, our five men were walking on the Hoare with the Negroes, and our Generall and Marchants stayed in the other boate by the sea side, hauing the 3. Negroes with them.

Our boate then came againe, and brought yron and other merchandize, with bread, wine, and cheefe, which they gaue vnto them. Then two of the Negroes (which were the pledges) made themselves sick, desiring to goe aboarde, promising to sende other two for them. Capaine Hayward perceiuing that our men had let the Negroes come a shoare, asked what they meane, (and doubting the way) began to dyrt toward the boate, and two of three of the Negroes followed him. And when he came to the boate they beganne to stay him, and he made signes vnto them that he would let the them moze dyinke and bread: notwithstanding, when hee was entering into the boate, one of them caught him by the breeches, and would haue stayed him, but hee sprang from him and leapt into the boate. And as soone as hee was in, one of the Negroes a shoare began to blowe a pipe, and presently the other Negro that was in our boate, sitting on the boates side, and halter Wormes sword by him, suddenly dytwe the sworde out of the scaberde and cast himselfe into the sea, and swomme a shoare: and presently the Negroes layde handes on our men that were on shoare, and tooke thye of them with great violence, and toare all their apparell from their backs, and left them nothing to couer them, and many of them thotte so thicke at our men in our boates, that they coulde scarce see hande to any Dare to rowe from the shoare, yet (by the helpe of God) they got from them with their boates, although many of them were hurt with their poysoned arrowes: and the poyson is incurable if the arrowe enter within the skinnie and bytwe bloud, and except the poyson be presently sucked out, or the place where any man is hurt, be furthwith cut away, hee dieth within foure dayes, and within three houres after they be hurt or picked, where soeuer it be, although but at the little toe, yet it striketh vp to the heart, and taketh away the stomacke, and causeth the partie maruelously to vomit, being able to vooke neither meate nor dyinke.

The Negro teachers.

The Negroes hauing vied our men with such cruelty, whose names were Nicholas Day, William Bats, and Iohn Tomson, ledde them away to a towne which was within a mile of the water side of there about.

The 20. day we sent too lande a boate of skiffe wherein were eight persons, and one of them was the sayd Iohn Tomson and our interpreter, which was a Frenchman, (for there was one of the Negroes which spake good French) they carried with them two harquebusses, two car- gues, and a mantell.

The cause of sending them was to learne what ransom they demanded for Bats and Day, whome they detained. And when they came to the shoare, and tolde the Negroes what they desired, they went and fetched them from among the trees, and brought them loose amongst fourtie or fiftie of them. And being come within a stones cast of the sea side, William Bats byake from them, and ranne as fast as hee coulde into the sea towardes the boate, and hee was not so soone in the water but hee fell downe, either being out of breath or his footing sayling him in the sande being soft: so that the Negroes came and fell on him and tooke him, and halled him, that wee thought they had torie him in pieres. For they toare againe all the apparell from his backe, so that some of them caried our men againe to the towne, and the rest thotte at vs with their poysoned arrowes, and hurt one of our men called Androwes in the small of the legge, who being come aboarde, (for all that our Surgeons coulde doe) wee thought hee would haue died.

The danger of poysoned arrowes.

Our Generall (notwithstanding all this villanie,) sent againe to them, and offered them any thing that they desired for the ransom of our men, but they would not deliuer them: giuing vs this answer, That there was in the sayd shoare thye weekes before wee came, an English shippe which had taken thye of their people, and untill wee did bring of sence them againe, wee shoulde not haue our men, although wee would glue our thye shippes with their furniture.

The answers of the Negroes.

The 21. day a French shippe of the burden of fourescore tunnes, (or there abouts,) came to the place where we were, being bounde to tradique at the Cape: we tolde them of the detayning of our two men by the Negroes: and seeing that these Frenchmen were very well welcome to the Negroes, we wished them to see whether they coulde procure them againe of the Negroes, and bring them along with them, and our Generall promised the Frenchmen 100. li. to obtaine them. So we committed the matter to the Frenchmen and departed.

Of our men that were hurt by the Negroes arrowes, foure died, and one to saue his life, had his arme cut off. Androwes that was last of all hurt, laye lame not able to helpe himselfe oney onely two recovered of their hurts. So we placed other men in the roomes of those that were lost, and set sail.

The 26. day betwene Cape Verde, and Bona vista, we saw many flying fishes of the bignes of herrings, whereof two flew into our boate, which we towed at our sterne.

Bona vista.

The 28. day we set with an Island called Bona vista, which is from Cape Verde 86. leagues. The Northside of the saide Island is full of white sandie hills, and dales, and somewhat high lande.

The saide day we came to an ancre within the Westermost point, about a league within the point, and found in our sounding faire sande in tenne foorc water, but you may goe neere till you be in five or sixe fadom, for the ground is faire.

As soone as we were at an ancre, our Generall sent his pinnell a land, and founde five or sixe small houses, but the people were fledde into the mountaines: and the next day hee sent a shoare a gaine, and mette with 2. Portingals, who willingly went aboarde with his men, and at their coming he welcommed them, although they were but poore and simple, & gaue eche of them a peece of shoes, and so let them a shoare againe.

The 30. day we wayed and sailed into a bay within a small Island about a league from vs, and tooke plentie of diuers sortes of fish. The foresaide Island lyeth in sixtene degrees. And if you meane to ancre in the saide bay, you may boote in foure or five fadome of the Southermost point of the saide Island, which you may see when you ride in the roade. But beware of the middle of the bay, for there lyeth a ridge of rocks, which at a lowe water breaketh, yet there is thre fadom water ouer them.

A good ancre
in this bay.

The last day of Januarie our Generall with certaine of his men went a shoare in the bay to the houses, where he found twelue Portingals. In all the Island there were not about 30. persons, which were banish'd men for a time, some for moze yerres, some for leile, and amongst them there was one simple man which was their captaine.

Banished
Portingals.

They liue upon goates flesh, cockes, hennes, and fresh water: other victuals they haue none, sauing fish, which they esteeme not, neither haue they any boates to take them.

Great store of goates.

They reported that this Islande was giuen by the king of Portingall, to one of his Gentlemen, who hath let it sooth to rent for one hundred ducates a yere, which rent is reared onely in goates skinner. For by their speeches there hath bene sent sooth of the saide Island into Portingale 40000. skinner in one yere.

We went to these men maruelously welcome, and to their powers very well intertaines, and they gaue vs the flesh of as many hee-goats as we would haue, and tooke much paines for vs in taking them, and bringing them from the mountaines upon their asses.

They haue there great store of the ople of Coxoyles, which Coxoyle is a fish which swimmeth in the sea, with a shell on his backe as broad as a target. It raineth not in this Island but in threer moneths of the yere, from the middell of Iuly to the middell of October, and it is here as wayes very boote. Nine haue bene brought hither, but by reason of the heate and drought they haue died.

February.

The Isle of Maiyo.

The 3. of Februarie we departed from this Island, and the same day fell with another Island called the Isle of Maiyo, which is 14. leagues from the other Island: there is in the middell of the way betwene these 2. Islands a banger which is alwayes to be seene.

A. Xago.

We ancred in the Northwest side of the saide Isle in a faire bay, of eight fadoms water and faire sande, but here we stayed not, but the fourth day wayed and sailed to another Island called S. Iago, which lyeth off the said Islande of Maiyo East and by South, and about five leagues from the other. Being come within the Westermost point, we sawe a faire roade, and a small towne by the water side, and also a foze of platfome by it: there wee purposed to come to ancre, and our Marchants to make some sale. But before we came within their shoore, they let lie at vs two pices, whereupon we went roomer and sailed along the shoore two or threer leagues from the roade, where we found a small bay and two or threer small houses, where we came to an ancre in 14. fadom faire ground.

Within an houre after we had ancred, we might see diuers boyemen and footemen on the land right against vs riding, and running to and fro.

The next day being the sixt of Februarie, a great companie of these boyemen and footmen appeared on the shoare side, into whom our Generall sent, to vnderstande whether they would quietly traque with them: And they sent him woyle againe, desiring that they might speake with him, promising that if he came to traque as a marchant, he should be welcome, and also that he should haue any thing that he of the marchant would wish reason demaunde.

When

When this and were was brought unto our Generall, he was very glad thereof, and the whole company, and presently (with as much speede as he could) hee caused his boates to be made ready: but doubting the villanie of the Portugals, armed his boates, putting a double baste in the head of his pinnele, and two single bastes in the head of his Skiffe, and so sent to the May flour and the George, and willed them in like sort to man their two boates.

These boates being thus manned and well appointed, our Generall entered into his skiffe, and with the rest rowed to the shoare where were threescore horsemen or more, and two hundred footemen ready to receive them. Our Generall marvelled that they came in so great a number and all armed, and therefore with a flagge of truce sent to them to knowe their pleasure: and they answered them with many faire promises and othes, that their purpose was all true, and that they meant like Gentlemen and Marchants to traffique with him, declaring also that their Captaine was coming to speake with him; and therefore desired our Generall to come and speake with him himselfe.

With this answer the boate returned, and then our Generall caused his pinnele to rowe to them, and as he came nere the shoare, they came in a great company with much obsequance, opening their handes, and armes aboade, bowing themselves with their bowmes off, with as much humble salutations outwardly as they might earnestly desiring our Generall and Marchants to come a lande to them, whereunto hee would not agree, without sufficient gages of Gentlemen and Marchants. At length they promised to sende two gages to our Generalls contentment, spanning fresh water, victuall, money, or Negroes for ware, if it were such as they liked: and therefore desired our Generall and Marchants to sende them a boate in writing, the quantitie of their wares, and the names of them: all which our Generall departed to performe, looking for their answer the morowe following. And being gone a litle from the shoare, hee caused his bastard carriers, and bargabulles to be shotte off, and our shippes in like case shotte off five or sixe pic-ces of great ordnance, and so came aboode to prepare the note. The Portugals most of them departed, leaving those that were left to watch and to receive the note, which about four or five a clocke in the after noone was sent, and it was received. But all the purposes of the Portugals, were villainously to betray us (as shall appeare hereafter,) although we meant in truth to buy them, friendly to traffique with them.

The creature in the Portugals gave in the Jago to our men.

There was to the Westwards of vs, and about two leagues from vs, a towne behinde a point led by the sea side, where they had certaine Caruels, 3 Shippes, and also two Brigandines, whereof they (with all the speede that they might) made ready foure Caruels, and both the Brigandines which were like two Gallies, and furnished them both with men and ordnance, as much as they could carrie, and as soone as it was night, they came rowing and falling towards vs: so that the land being high, and the weather somewhat cloudie or myste, and they comming all the way close under the boate, we could not see them till they were right against one of our shippes called the May flour.

By this time it was about one or two of the clocke in the morning, and the May flour roade nearer them then the other two by a baste shotte, so that they made a sure accompt either to haue taken her or burnt her. In the meane time our men that had the watche (litle thinking of such villanous treacheries after so many faire wordes,) were singing and playing one with the other, and made such a noise, that (being but a small gale of winde, and riding nere the lande) they might heare vs, from the shoare: so that we supposed that they made accompt that we had espied them, which in verie we had not, neither had any one piece of ordnance primed, or any other thing in a readinesse.

They came so nere vs that they were within gunshot of vs, & then one of our men chanced to see a light, & then looking out spied the 4. shippes, and suddenly cried out, Gallies, gallies, at which cry we were all amazed, and looch with they shotte at vs all the great ordnance that they had, and their bargabulles, and carriers, and so lighted certaine tronks of pieces of wilde fire, and a ll of them with our boates, (as well they ran the boate as they in the shippes) gave a great shout, and so continued hallooing with great noises, till appoyching neerer and neerer unto the May flour. These (with all the speede that we might) made ready one piece of ordnance and shotte at them, which caused them somewhat to staye, so they recharged their ordnance and shotte at vs freshly againe, and while they shotte this second time at vs, we had made ready three pieces which wee shotte at them, but they appoyched still some way, but at last we might haue taken a shipp, and so to them. Whereupon wee having a gale of winde off the shoare, bowed our boates, and our cable at the halye, and went towards our Admirall, and they continued hallooing and singing as vs, and layeing at our Admirall, but our Admirall shotte one

one such piece at them that it made them to retire, and at length to warpe away like traitors and villaines, and although they thus suddenly tooke all their hope at vs, yet they hurt neither man nor boy of ours, but what we did to them we know not.

The 16th of Fuego.

But seeing the villanie of these men, we thought it best to stay there no longer, but immediately set sail to wards an Island called Fuego, 12 leagues from the said Island of S. Iago. At which Island of Fuego we came to an ancre the 11. day of this moneth, against a white chappell in the West end of the said Island, within halfe a league of a litle towne, and within a league of the about of the vetermost point of the said Island.

In this Island is a marvellous high hill which doth burne continually, and the inhabitants reported that about 3. yeeres past, the whole Island was like to be burned with the abundance of fire that came out of it.

Wills.

About a league from the said chappel to the Westward is a goodly spring of fresh water, where we had as much as wee would. Wheate they haue none growing here, but a certaine seebe that they call Mill, and certaine peason like Guinie peason, which Mill maketh good byead, but they haue here good store of rother beastes and goates. Their marchandise is cotton which groweth there.

Cotton in Fuego.

The inhabitants are Portingals, which haue commandement fro the king to traquie neither with Englishmen nor Frenchmen for victual of any other thing, except they be forced so to doe.

The 16th of
May.

There lieth off this Island another called Ilha Braua, which is not passing two leagues our, and hath good store of goates and many trees, but there are not passing three or foure persons dwelling in it.

They returne
March.

The 25. day of February we departed towards the Islands of Azores, and on the 23. day of March we had sight of one of them called Flores, and then we might see another Island to the Northward of it called Cuervo, lying 2. leagues of thereabouts off the other.

The 27. we came to an ancre in Cuervo ouer against a village of about twelue simple houses: but in the night by a gale of winde, which roused vs to waken our ancre after vs, we hoysed sail and went to the adjacent Island of Flores, where wee sawe strange streames of water running downe from the high cliffes by reason of the great abundance of raine that had suddenly fallen.

The 29. day we came againe to Cuervo and cast ancre, but a storme arose and continued leasse of eight houres together, so that wee let slippe a cable and ancre, and after the storme was alwayes we came againe thinking to haue recovered the same, but the Portingals had either taken it, or spoiled it: the cable was new and neuer wet before, and both the cable and ancre was better worth then 40. li. So that we account our stunes much beholding to the honest Portingals.

April.

The 18. day of April wee tooke in water at the Island of Flores, and heaving ancre, our cable was fretted in sundry places with a rocke and so burst, where wee lost that cable and ancre also, and so parted to our coast.

Then wee set sail to an Islande named Faiall, about the which lie three other Islands, the one called Pico, the other S. George, and the other Graciola, which wee had sight of on the 28. day.

Woods.

May.

The 29. we came to an ancre in the South-west side of Fayal in a faire bay, and 22. fadome water gainst a litle towne, where we had both fresh water and fresh victual. In this Island by the report of the inhabitants, there groweth certaine greene woad, which by their speeches is farre better then the woad of S. Michael, or of Tercera.

10 Portingall
400. tonnes.

The eight day of May we came to Tercera, where we mette with a Portingall shippe, and having bestidance of a cable and ancre, our Generall caused vs to keepe her company, to see if she could conveniently spare vs any. The next morning we might see bearing with vs a great shippe and two Caruels, which wee iudged to be of the king of Portingals Armado, and so they were, whereupon wee prepared our selues for our defence. The said shippe was one of the kings Gallies, about the burden of foure hundred tonnes, with about three hundred men in her, the shippe being well appointed with blasse pieces both great and small, and some of them so bigge, that their shotte was as great as a mans head, the other two Caruels were also very warlike and well appointed both with men and munition.

and 7. West Indians.

As soone as they were within shotte of vs, they aimed vs againe with their shotte, we keeping our course, the greatest shippe shot at vs first, and the caruell also, and wee prepared our selues, and made all things cleare for our safety as neere as we could. Then the great shippe shot at vs all her broad side, & her faire greatest pieces that laye in her sterne, and therewith hurt some of our men, and wee with the best wee could with our shotte to requite it. At last this other

Caruel

Caruels came off the shoare, and two other pinnacles full of men, and deliuered them abooyde the great shippe, and so wente backe againe with two men in a peece of them. The shippe and the Caruels gaue vs the first day thyee sightes, and when the night was come, they left off shooting, yet notwithstanding kept hard by vs all the night. In the meane time wee had as much as wee coulde doe all the night to mende our ropes, and to strengthen our bulwarkes, putting our trust in God, and resoluing our selues rather to die in our defense, then to bee taken by such wretches.

The next day being the 10. of May in the morning, there were come to ayde the saide Portugals, 4. great Armados of Caruels moze which made seuen, of which 4. threer of them were at the least 100. Annes apiece, the other not so bigge, but all well appointed and full of men. All these together came bearing with vs being in our Admirall, and one of the great Caruels came to ayde abooyde (as we iudged) for they had prepared their false nettings, and all things for that purpose, so that the Gallias came up in our starboord side, and the Caruel in our larboord side.

Our Captaine and Spallier perceiving their pretence, caused our gunners to make all our ordinance ready with crossebarres, chainesbotte, and halleshot: so the shippe and Caruell came by, and as soone as they were right in our sides, they shote at vs as much ordnance as they coulde, thinking to haue layde vs presently abooyde: wherupon wee gaue them such a beate with both our sides, that they were both glad to fall asterne vs, and so paused the space of two or thyeer houres being a very small gale of winde.

Then came by the other five and shot all at vs, and so fel all asterne vs, and then went to countell together.

Then our small barke named the George came to vs, and wee conferr'd together a great space. And as the Portugall shippes and Caruels were comming to vs againe, our barke minding to fall asterne of vs, and so to come by againe, fell quickly upon the lee, and by reason of the litle winde, it was so long before she coulde fill her sailes againe, that both the shippe and Caruels were come by to vs, and the falling in among them, made reasonable shift with them, but they got a head of her, so that she coulde not fetch vs: then 5. of the Caruels followed her, but we sawe shee defende her selfe against them all.

Then came the great shippe and the Caruell to vs, and fought with vs all that day with their ordinance.

The May floure our other consort, being very good by the winde,ooke the benefite thereof, and halde all that day close by the winde, but coulde not come neere vs. So when night againe was come, they gaue over their fight and followed vs all the night.

In these many fights it coulde not other wise bee, but needes some of our men must be slaine, (as they were indeede) and diuers hurt, and our tackle much spoyled: yet for all this wee did our best indouour to repaire all things, and to stand to it to the death, with our assured trust in the mercie and helpe of God.

This night the May floure came by to vs, and our Captaine tolde them his harmes and spoyles, and wished them if they coulde spare halfe a dosen fresh men, to hoyle out their boate and sende them to him, but they coulde not spare any, and so bare away againe. Which when our enemies sawe in the next morning, that we were one from another, they came by to vs againe and gaue vs a great fight with much hallowing and hooping, making accompt either to booyde vs or els to sinke vs: but although our companie was but small, yet least they shoulde see vs any whit dismayde, when they hallowed wee hallowed also as fast as they, and waued to them to come and booyde vs if they durst, but that they woulde not, seeing vs still so couragious, and having giuen vs that day 4. sightes, at night they forsooke vs with shame, as they came to vs at the first with pride.

They had made in our shippe some leakes with their shotte which we againe stopped with all speed, and that being done, weooke some rest after our long labour and trouble.

The next day in the morning the May floure came to vs, and brought vs sixe men in her boate, which did vs much pleasure, and we sent to them some of our hurt men.

Then we directed our course for our owne countrey, and by the second day of June wee were neere to our owne coast, and founded being thwart the Lizard.

The thirde day we had sighte of a shippe which was a Portugall, who bare with vs, and at his comming to vs (the weather being caline,) our Captaine caused him to hoyle forth his boate to come abooyde to speake with him, and at their comming our Captaine and Marchants demanded of them what ware they had, and whether they were bounde, and they made answer that their lading was Sugar and coccon. Then our Captaine and Marchants shewed them them 5. Negroes that wee had, and asked them whether they would buy them, which they were very desirous to doe, and agreed to giue for them 40. chests of Sugar, which chests were small hauing not about 26. loanes in a peece: so they with their boate did fetch five of the chests, and deliuered them, and went for more, and when they had laden their boate and were come againe, wee might see bearing with vs, a great shippe and a small, which our Captaine supposed to be men of warre of Rowers, and then killed the Portugals to carrie their sugar to their shippe againe, purposing to make our selues readie for our defence. But the Portugals earnestly intreated our Captaine not so to forsake them, and promised him (if he would safegard them,) to giue him about the bargaine 10. chests of sugar: whereupon our Captaine was content, and the Portugall not being good of faith, we spared our topsailes for her; so at last the foresaide ship bare with vs, and (seeing that we did not feare them) gaue vs ouer. And the next morning came two others bearing with vs, and seeing vs not about to slee a toe from them, forsooke vs also.

The 5. day of June wee had light of the Starr, and about noone wee were chwart of the bay of Lime, and so founded, and had 35. fadom water.

The six day wee came in at the Needles, and so came to an ancre vnder the Ile of Wight at a place called Meadhole, and from thence sailed to Southampton, where wee made an end of this voyage.

The worthie enterprise of Iohn Fox an Englishman in deliuering 266. Christians out of the captiuitie of the Turkes at Alexandria, the 3. of Ianuarie 1577.

Among our Marchants here in England it is a common voyage, to traffique into Spaine: whereunto a shippe, being called The three halfe Moones, named with eights and thirtie men, and well furnished with Munitions, the better to encounter their enemies withal, & hauing towne & tide, set from Portsmouth 1563, and bended her iourney towardes Siuilla a Citie in Spaine, intending there to traffique with them. And falling nerre the Streights, they perceived themselves to be beset round about with eights Gallies of the Turkes, in such wise, that there was no way for them to flee or escape away, but that either they must peeble or else bee sunk. Which the owner perceiving, manfully encouraged his companie, exhorting them valiantly to the we their manhood, shewing them that God was their God, and not their enemies, requesting them also not to faint in seeing such a heape of their enemies ready to deuoure them; putting them in minde also, that if it were Gods pleasure to giue them into their enemies hands, it was not they, that ought to shewe one displeasur look of countenance there against; but to take it patiently, and not to prescribe a day and time for their deliuerance, as the Citizens of Bethulia did, but to put themselves vnder his merrie. And againe, if it were his minde and good will to shewe his mightie power by them, if their enemies were tenne times so many, they were not able to stande in their byndes, putting them likewise in minde of the olde and auncient worthinesse of their Countrey men, who in the hardest extremities haue alwayes most pleased and gone away conquerours, yea, and where it hath bene almost impossible. Such (quoth he) hath bene the valiantnesse of our countrey men; and such hath bene the mightie power of our God.

With such other like encouragements, exhorting them to behaue themselves manfully, they fell all on their knees making their Prayers heartily vnto God: who being all risen vp againe, perceived their enemies by their signes and defiance bent to the spoyle, whose merrie was nothing else but crueltie; whereupon euery man tooke him to his weapon.

Then stood vp one Groue the Spalder, being a comely man, with his sword and target, holding them vp in defiance against his enemies. So likewise stood vp the owner, the Spalder mate, Bodelwaime, Purser and euery man well appointed. Nowe likewise sounded by the drummes, trumpets and flutes, which would haue encouraged any man, had been neuer so little heart of courage in him.

Then takerh him to his charge Iohn Fox the gunner in the disposing of his pieces in order to the best effect; and sendi: g his bullets towards the Turkes, who likewise bestowed their pieces thise as fast toward the Christians. But shortly they were nere, so that the bowmen fell to their charge in sending forth their arrows so thicke amongst the Gallies, & also in doubling their shot so fast vpon the Gallies, that there were twise so many of the Turkes slaine, as the number of the Christians were in all. But the Turkes discharged twise as fast against the Christians, & so long, buy them, which they were, which chests were small each one of the chests, and in and were come againe, were became supposed to be men of to their shippe againe, purpose earnestly intricated our Capt. Pet was all in vaine, and booyded they were, where they found so boe a skimmish, that it had bene better they had not medled with the feast. For the Englishmen shewed themselves men in deede, in working manfully with their bowe bills, and bolbarbs: where the owner, master, boateswaine, and their company roode to it so lustily, that the Turkes were halfe dissmaied. But chiefly the boateswaine shewed himself valiane about the rest: for he sa- red amongst the Turkes like a wood Lyon: for there was none of them that either could or durst stand in his face: till at the last there came a shot from the Turkes, which brake his whistle a sun- der, and smote him on the breast, so that he fell downe, hiding them farewell, & to be of good com- for, encouraging them likewise to waime praise by death, rather then to liue captiues in miserie and shame. Which they hearing, in deede intended to haue done, as it appeared by their skirmish: but the yeare and stroe of the Turkes was so great, that they were not able long to endure, but were so ouerwhelmd, that they could not wield their weapons: by reason wherof, they must needs be taken, which none of them intended to haue bene, but rather to haue died: except onely the Spawnters mate, who shynke from the skirmish, like a notable coward, esteeming neither the valoure of his name, nor accounting of the present example of his fellowes, nor hauing respect to the miserie, whereunto he should be put. But in fine, so it was, that the Turkes were victors, wherof they had no great cause to reioyce, or triumph. Then would it haue grieued any hard heart to see these Infidels so violently intrating the Christians, not hauing any respect of their manhood which they had cast off, nor yet respecting their owne state, how they might haue met with such a bootie, as might haue giuen them the ouerthrow: but no remorse herof, or any thing els doth bytule their fierce and tyranious dealing, but that the Christians must needs to the gallies, to serue in newe offices: and they were no looner in them, but their garments were pulled ouer their eares, and come from their backs, and they set to the oars.

I will make no mention of their miseries, being now under their enemies raging stripes. I thinke there is no man will iudge their face good, or their bodies buloden of stripes, and not pestered with too much heate, and also with too much cold: but I will goe to my purpose, which is, to shew the ende of those, being in meere miserie, which continually doe call on God with a stedfast hope, that he will deliuer them, and with a sure faith, that he can doe it.

Right to the citie of Alexandria, being a haven to wne, and vnder the dominion of the Turkes, there is a roade, being made very sensible with strong walls, wherinto the Turkes doe customa- bly bring their gallies on shoare euery yeere, in the winter season, and there doe trimme them, and lay them vp againe in the spring time. In which roade there is a pison, whereto the captiues & such prisoners as serue in the gallies, are put for all that time, untill the seas be calme and passable for the gallies, euery prisoner being most grievously laben with yrons on their legges, to their great paine, and soze disabling of them to any labour taking. Into which pison were these Christians put, and fast warded all the winter season. But ere it was long, the Spawnter and the owner, by meanes of friends, were redecem'd: the rest abiding still by the miserie, while that they were all, though reason of their ill vblage and woyle fare, miserably starued: sauing one John Fox, who (as some men can abide harder and more miserie, then ocher some can, so can some likewise make more shift, and woike more deuises to helpe their state and liuing, then ocher some can doe) being somewhat skilfull in the craft of a Barbour, by reason thereof made great shift in helping his fare now and then with a good meale. In so much, till at the last, God sent him sauaour in the sight of the keeper of the pison, so that he had leaue to goe in and out to the roade, at his pleasure, paying a certaine stipend vnto the keeper, and wearing a locke about his legge: which libertie likewise, fire more had vpon like sufferance: who by reason of their long imprisonment, not being feared or suspected to start aside, or that they would wooke the Turkes any mischief, had libertie to goe in and out at the said roade, in such manner, as this John Fox did, with yrons on their legges, and to returne againe at night.

In the yeere of our Lord 1577, in the winter season, the Gallies happily comming to their accustomed harborow, and being discharged of all their masts, sailes, and ocher such furniture, as vnto gallies doe appertaine, and all the Spawnters and martiners of them being then nested in their owne homes: there remained in the pison of the said roade two hundred threetye and eghte Christian prisoners, who had bene taken by the Turkes forer, and were of siterene sundry nati- ons. Among which there were three Englishmen, wherof one was named John Fox of Woodbridge in Suffolke, the ocher William Wickney of Portsmouth in the Countie of South- hampton, and the third Robert Moore of Harwich in the Countie of Essex. having bene thirtene or fouerene yeeres vnder their gentle entreatance, & being too too weary thereof, minding his escape, wiled with himselfe by what meanes it might be brought to passe: and continually pondering with himselfe thereof, tooke a good heart vnto him, in hope that God would not be alwaies scourging his childzen, and neuer crassing to pray him to further his pretended enterpryse, if that it should rebound to his glory.

Not farre from the roade, and somewhat from thence, at one side of the Citie, there was a certaine Alituaing house, which one Peter Vnticaro had hired, paying also a certaine fee vnto the keeper of the roade. This Peter Vnticaro was a Spaniard boyne, and a Christian, and had bene prisoner above thirtie yeeres, and neuer practised any meanes to escape, but kept himselfe quiet without touch or suspect of any conspiracie: vntill that nowe this Iohn Foxe vling much thither, they brake one to another their minds, concerning the restraint of their libertie and imprisonment. So that this Iohn Foxe at length opening vnto this Vnticaro the deuisse which he would saue put in practise, made priuie one moze to this their intent. Which thre debated of this matter, at such times as they could compass to meeete together: insomuch that at seuen weekes ende they had sufficiently concluded howe the matter should be, if it pleased God to farther them thereto: who making sūe moze priuie to this their deuisse, whome they thought that they might safely trust, determined in threer nightes after to accomplish their deliberate purpose. Whereupon the same Iohn Foxe, and Peter Vnticaro, and the other sūe, appointed to meeete all together in the prison the next day, being the last day of December: where this Iohn Foxe certified the rest of the prisoners, what their intent and deuisse was, and howe and when they minded to bring their purpose to passe: who therunto perswaded them without much a doe to further their deuisse. Which the same Iohn Foxe seeing, deliuered vnto them a sort of files, which he had gathered together for this purpose, by the meanes of Peter Vnticaro, charging them that euery man should be ready discharged of his yrons by eight of the clocke on the next day at night.

The last of December.

Januarie.

On the next day at night, this false Iohn Foxe, and his sūe other companions, being all come to the house of Peter Vnticaro, passing the time a way in mirth for feare of suspect, till the night came on, so that it was time for them to put in practise their deuisse, sent Peter Vnticaro to the master of the roade, in the name of one of the Spallers of the citie, with whom this keeper was acquainted, and at whose request he also would come at the first: who desired him to take the paines to meeete him there, promising him, that he would bring him backe againe. The keeper agreed to goe with him, willing the warders not to barre the gate, saying, that he would not stay long, but wold come againe with all speede.

In the meane season, the other seuen had provided them of such weapons, as they could get in that house: and Iohn Foxe tooke him to an olde rustie sword blade, without either hilt or pomell, which he made to serue his turne, in bending the hand ende of the sword, in order of a pomell, and the other had got such spies and glaiues as they found in the house.

The keeper now being come vnto the house, and perceiving no light, nor hearing any noise, straightway suspected the matter: and returning backe ward, Iohn Foxe standing behind the corner of the house, stepped forth vnto him: who perceiving it to be Iohn Foxe, sayde, O Foxe, what haue I deserued of thee, that thou shouldst seeke my death? Thou villaine (quoth Foxe) hast bene a bloodsucker of many a Christians blood, and now thou shalt knowe what thou hast deserued at my handes: where with he lift vp his bright shining sword of ten yeeres rust, and stroke him so maine a blowe, as therewithall his head cleaued asunder, so that he fell stark dead to the ground. Whereupon Peter Vnticaro went in, and certified the rest how the case stood with the keeper: who came presently forth, and some with their spies ranne him through, and the other with their glaiues beueled him in sunder, cut off his head, and mangled him so, that no man should discerne what he was.

Then marched they toward the roade, wherinto they entered softly, where were sūe warders, whom one of them asked, saying, who was there? quoth Foxe & his company, all friends. Which when they were all within, yroued contrary: for quoth Foxe, my maisters, here is not to euery man a man, wherefore looke you play your parts. Who so behaued themselves in deede, that they had dispatched these sūe quickly. Then Iohn Foxe, intending not to be barred of his enterpryse, and minding to worke surely in that which he went about, barred the gate surely, and planted a Cannon against it.

Then entered they into the Gaillers lodge, where they found the keyes of the foxtresse and prison by his bed side, and there had they all better weapon. In this chamber was a chest, wherein was a rich treasure, and all in buckets, which this Peter Vnticaro, and two moze, opening, stuffed themselves to full as they could, betwene their shirts and their skinne: which Iohn Foxe would not more couch, and saide, that it was his and their libertie which he sought for, to the honour of his God, and not to make a matter of the wicked creature of the Infidels. Yet did these words strike nothing into their stomakes, they did it for a good intent: so did Saule saue the fawcell Open, to offer vnto the Lord, and they to serue their owne turne. But neither did Saule scape the wrath of God therefore, neither had these that thing which they desired so, and did thirst after. Surely is Gods iudice, he that they put their trust in, to deliuer them from the tyrannous hands of their enemies, (be it say) could supply their want of necessaries.

Howe these eight, being armed with such weapons, as they thought well of, thinking themselves sufficient champions to encounter a stronger enemy, and comming vnto the prison, Fox opened the gates and doores thereof, and called forth all the prisoners, whom he set, some to ramming vp the gate, some to the ramming vp of a certaine gallie, which was the best in all the roade, and was called the capitaine of Alexandria, wherinto some caried masses, sailes, oares, and other such furniture, as doth belong vnto a gallie.

At the prison were certaine warders, whome Iohn Fox and his company slew: in the killing of whome, there were eight more of the Turkes, which perreiuened them, and got them to the toppe of the prison: vnto whome Iohn Fox, and his company, were saine to come by ladders, where they found a hot skirmish. For some of them were there slaine, some wounded, and some but scared, and not hurt. As Iohn Fox was thistle shot through his apparell, and not hurt. Peter Vnticaro, and the other two, that had armed them with the duckets, were slaine, as not able to wield themselves, being so pestered with the weight and vnease carrying of the wicked and prophane creature: and also diuers Christians were a well hurt about that skirmish, as Turkes slaine.

Amongst the Turkes was one chynst thowme, who (let vs not say that it was ill fortune) fell off from the coppe of the prison wall, and made such a lowing, that the inhabitants there about (as here and there scattering fhoode a houle or two) came and dauid him, so that they vnderstoode the case, how that the prisoners were paying their ransomes: where with they raised both Alexandria, which lay on the west side of the roade, and a Castle which was at the Citie's end, next to the roade, and also an other Forreille which lay on the North side of the roade: so that now they had no way to escape, but one, which by mans reason (the two holdes lying so vpon the mouth of the roade) might seeme impossible to be a way for them. So was the red sea impossible for the Israelites to passe through, the hills and rockes lay so on the one side, and their enemies compassed them on the other. So was it impossible, that the wals of Iericho should fall downe, being neither vndermined, nor yet rammed at with engines, nor yet any mans wisdome, policie, or helpe set out thereunto. Such impossibilities can our God make possible. He that helde the Lions iates from renting Daniel asunder, yea, yet from once touching him to his hurt: can not he hold yroning canons of this belld force? He that kept the fieres rage in the hot burning Oven, from the three chyliden, that praised his name, can not he keepe the fieres flaming blades from among his elect?

How is the roade fraught with lustie souldiers, labourers, and mariners, who are saine to stand to their eackling, in setting to euery man his hand, some to the carrying in of victuals, some munitions, some oares, and some one thing, some another, but most are keeping their enemy from the wall of the roade. But to be shot, there was no time mispent, no man idle, nor any mans labour ill bestowed, or in vaine. So that in short time, this gallie was ready trimmed vp. Wherinto euery man leaped in all haste, hopping by the sailes lustily, peelding themselves to his merrie and grace, in whose hands is both winde and weather.

How is this gallie on shore, and out of the safetie of the roade: nowe haue the two Castles full power vpon the gallie, now is there no remedie but sinke: how can it be auoided? the canons leaue from both sides, and the gallie is ruen in the middell, and betwene them both. What man can woulde to live it? there is no man, but would thinke it must needs be sinke.

There was not one of them that feared the shotte, which went thundring round about their eares, nor yet were they scared or touched, with sine and fortie shot, which came from the Castles. Here did God vnto Iohn Foxe his wonder, he shielded now this gallie, and had tried their faith to the vttermost. How commeth his speciall helpe: yea, euen when man thinks them past all helpe, then equieth he himselfe downe from heauen with his mightie power, then is his present remedie made ready. For he saile away, being not once touched with the glance of a shot, and are quickly out of the water, carrying with them, might they see them comming downe by desperes to the water side, in companie like vnto swarms of bees, making the way to come after them with gallies, in building them selves to beate vp the gallies, which would be a stout peece of worke for them to doe, for that they had neither oares, masses, sailes, gables, nor any thing els ready in any any gally. But yet they are carrying them into them, some into one gally, and some into an other, so that, bring such a confusion amongst them, without any certaine guide, it were a thing impossible to ouertake them: beside that, there was no man that would take charge of a gally, the weather was so rough, and there was such an amassment amongst them. And verely I thinke that God was amazed thereat: it could not be but he must blush for shame, he can speake neuer a word for duines, much lesse can he helpe them in such an extremite. Well, howsoever it is, he is very much to blame, to suffer them to receive such a gibe. But howsoever their God behaued himselfe, our God shewed himselfe a God in deede, and that he was the onely liuing God: for the seas were swift vnder his faithfull, which made the enemies agast to behold them, a skilfuller Pilot leades them, and their mariners bestirre them lustily: but the Turkes had neither mariners, nor pilot, nor any skilfull sparrer, that was in a readinesse at this pinch.

When the Christians were safe out of the enemies coast, Iohn Fox called to them all, willing them to be thankfull vnto almighty God for their deliuerie, and most humbly to fall downe vpon their knees, beseeching him to aide them vnto their friends land, and not to bring them into another daunger, like her had mosse mightily deliuered them from so greene a chalydome and bondage.

Thus when euery man had made his petition, they fell straight way to their labour with the oares, in helping one another, when they were wearied, and with great labour striving to come to some Christian land, as nere as they could gesse by the starres. But the windes were so vniuers, one while blowing them this way, an other while that way, so that they were now in a netwe mast, thinking that God had forsaken them, and left them to a greater banger. And forasmuch as there were no victuals now left in the gally, it might haue bene a cause to them, (if they had bene the Israelites) to haue murmured against their God: but they knew how that their God, who had deliuered them out of Egypt, was such a louing and mercifull God, as that he would not suffer them to be confounded, in whome he had wrought so greene a wonder: but what calamitie couer they sustained, they knew it was but for their farther triall, and also (in putting them in minde of their farther miserie) to cause them not to triumph and glory in themselves therefore. Hauing (if) no victuals in the gally, it might seeme, one miserie continually to fall vpon an others necke, but to be byeste, the famine grew to be so greene, that in 28. daies, wherein they were on the sea, there died eight persons, to the astonishment of all the rest.

Extremite: of famine.

So it fell out, that vpon the 29. day, after they set from Alexandria, they fell on the Isle of Candie, and landed at Gallipoli, where they were made much of by the Abbot and Monks there, who caused them to stay there, while they were well refreshed and eased. They kept there the winter, where with Iohn Fox had killed the keeper, esteeming it as a most precious iewel, and being it by for a monument.

Iohn Fox his sword kept as a monument
in Gallipoli.

When they thought good, hauing leave to depart from thence, they sailed along the coast, till they arrived at Tarento, where they sold their gally, and deusted it, euery man hauing a part thereof. The Turkes receiving so shamefull a foile at their hand, pursued the Christians, and scoured the seas, where they could imagine that they had bene their course. And the Christians had departed from thence on the one day in the morning, and seuen gallyes of the Turkes came thither that night, as it was certified by those who followed Fox, and his companie, fearing lest they should haue bene met with. And then they came a foote to Naples, where they departed afterward, euery man taking him to his next way home. From whence Iohn Fox tooke his iourney vnto Rome, where he was well entertained of an Englishman, who presented his worthy deede vnto the Pope, who rewarded him liberally, and gaue him his letters vnto the king of Spaine, where he was very well entertained of him there, who for this his most worthy enterprise, gaue him in fee thent pence a day. From whence being desirous to come into his owne country, he came thither at such time as he came mens pence, which was in the yeere of our Lord God, 1579. Who being come into England, went vnto the Court, and shewed all his trauell vnto the Countess, who considering of the state of this man, in that he had spent and lost a great part of his youth, in chalydome and bondage, extended to him their liberality, to helpe to reuoluate him into an age, to their right honour, and to the encouragement of all true hearted Christians.

to the said citie a certaine gallie from Alexandria, taken from the Turkes, with two hundred fiftie and eight Christians, whereof was principal, Master Iohn Fox, an English man, a gunner, and one of the chiefest that did accomplish that great worke, whereby so many Christians haue recovered their liberties. In token and remembrance whereof, vpon our earnest request to the same Iohn Fox, he hath left here an olde sword, where with he slewe the keeper of the prison: which sword we doe as a monument and memoriall of so worthie a deede, hang vp in the chiefe place of our Couent house. BE it knowne vnto all men, to whome this writing shal come, that the bringer hereof Iohn Fox Englishman, a Gunner, after he had serued captiue in the Turkes gallies, by the space of fouretee yeeres, at length, thorow God his helpe, taking good opportunitie, the third of Ianuarie last past, slew the keeper of the prison, (whom he first stroke on the face) together with foure and twentie other Turkes, by the assistance of his fellow prisoners: and with 266 Christians, (of whose libertie he was the author) launched from Alexandria, and from thence, arrived first at Gallipoly in Candie, and afterwards at Tarento in Apulia: the written testimony and credite of which things, as also of others, the same Iohn Fox hath in publike tables from Naples.

Vpon Easter eue, he came to Rome, and is now determined to take his journey to the Spanish Court, hoping there to obtaine some reliefe toward his liuing: wherefore the poore distressed man humbly beseecheth, and we in his behalfe, do in the bowels of Christ, desire you, that taking compassion of his former captiuitie, and present penurie, you doe not onely suffer him freely to passe throughout all your cities and townes, but also succour him with your charitable almes, the reward whereof, you shall hereafter most assuredly receiue, which we hope you will afford to him, whome with tender affection of pitie, wee commend vnto you. The ambassage of Master Edmund Hogan, one of the sworne Esquires of her Maiesties person, from her Highnes, to Mully Abdelmelech, Emperour of Maroccus, and King of Fez, and Sus: in the yeere 1577. written by himselfe.

26. Arthur.

Edmund Hogan, being appointed Ambassadour from the Queenes Maietie, to the aboue named Emperour and King Mully Abdelmelech, departed with my companie, and seruants from London, the two and twentieth day of April 1577, being imbarked in the good shippe, called the Gallion of London, and arriued in Asafi, a port of Barbarie, the one and twentieth day of Maye, next following. Immediately I sent Leonell Edgerton a squire, with my letters, vnto Iohn Williams, and Iohn Bampton, who dispatched a Crocero to Maroccus, to know the kings pleasure for my repaire to the Court, which letters came to their hands on the Thurf day night.

They with all speede, gaue the King vnderstanding of it, who being glad thereof, speeded the next day certaine Capitaines, with souldiers, and tenes, with ocher prouision, to Asafi: to chat by on Whitsonday at night, the said Capitaines, with Iohn Bampton, Robert Walshborne, and Robert Lyon, and the kings officers, came late to Asafi.

In the meane time, I remained a boord, & caused some of the goods to be discharged for lightning of the shippe, and I wrote in my letters, that I would not leaue, till I haue the Kings pleasure.

The 22. day, being Saturday, the Duke speede arrived into the roade about two of the clocke in the afternoone.

The 27. day, being Whitsonday, came aboard the Gallion Iohn Bampton, and others, gi-uing me to vnderstand, how much the King reioiced of my safe arriuall, comming from the Queenes Maieitie, and how that for my safe conuulite to the Court he had sent foure Capitaines, and 100. souldiers well appoynted, with a hoyle furnisher, which he used himselfe to ride on, with al ocher furniture according to theyr wisher me also to come on land, in þ best order I could, as hel-for my selfe, as my men, which I do, hauing to the number of 100. men, wherof three were come petter's.

The ships being four, appointed themselves in the best order they could, for the best shew, and for all their ordnance, to the value of twenty thousand in powder.

At my coming a horse, I found all the footmen well appointed on horsebacke, the Captaines, and the Governour of the towne standing as neere the water side as they could, with a Jewett of the kings, and received me from the boate, declaring how glad his maiestie was of my safe arrivall, comming from the Queenes maiestie my maistrise, and that he had sent them to attend upon me, bring his pleasure that I should tarry there on horse, five or sixe dayes for my refreshing.

So being mounted upon the Jewett, they conducted mee through the towne into a faire field upon the sea side, where was a tent pitched for me, and all the ground spread with Turkie carpets, and the Cattle discharged a peale of ordnance, and all things necessarie were brought into my tent, where I both took my table, and lodged, and had other convenient tentes for my servants.

The souldiours environed the tentes, and watched about vs day and night as long as I lay there, although I sought my speerdier dispatch.

On the Wednesday towards night, I took my horse and traualled ten miles to the first place of water that we could finde, and there pitched our tentes till the next morning, and so traualled sixteen of the clocke, and then pitched our tentes till 4. and so traualled as long as day light would last, about 26. miles that day.

The next day being Friday, I traualled in like order, but eight and twenty miles at the last, and by a River being about three miles within sight of the Citie of Moroccous wee pitched our tentes.

Immediately after came all our English merchants, and the French on horsebacke to meete me, and before night there came an Alcaide from the king with sixtie men, and divers mules laden with victuall and banker, for my supper, declaring unto me how glad the king shewed himselfe to heare of the Queenes maiestie, and that his pleasure was I should be received into his countrey as never any Christian the like: and desired to knowe what time the next day I would come into his citie, because he would that all the Christians, as also his nobilitie, should meete me, and bailed John Bampton to be with him early in the morning, which he did.

About steern of the clocke being accompanied with the French and English merchants, and a great number of souldiours, I passed towards the Citie, and by that time I had traualled two miles, there met me all the Christians of the Spaniards and Portugals to receive me, which I thought was more by the kings commandement, then of any good will of themselves: for some of them although they speake me faire, hung downe their heads like dogs, and especially the Portugals, and I countenanred them accordingly.

So I passed on till I came within two English miles of the Citie, and then John Bampton returned, shewing mee that the king was so glad of my coming, that hee could not desire to doe too much, to shewe the good will that hee did owe to the Queenes Maiestie, and her Realme.

His counsaillers mette me without the gates, and at the entrie of the gates, his footemen and guard were placed on both sides of my horse, and so brought me to the kings palace.

The king sat in his chaire with his counsaile about him, as well the Moores as the Elchies, and, according to his order given unto mee before, I there declared my message in Spanish, and made delivrie of the Queenes Maiesties letters, and all that I spake at that present in Spanish, hee caused one of his Elchies to declare the same to the Moores present in the Larbe tongue.

Which done, he answered me agayne in Spanish, praising to the Queenes Maiestie great thanks, and offering himselfe and his countrey to bee at her Graces commandement, and then committed certayne of his Counsaillers to conduct mee to my lodging, not being farre from the Court.

The house was faire after the fashion of that countrey, being daily well furnished with all kind of victuall at the kings charge.

The same night hee sent for mee to the Court, and I had conference with him about the space of two houers, where I thoughtly declared the charge committed unto mee from her Maiestie, finding him conformable, willing to pleasure, and not to vexe her Maiestie with any demerits, more then conveniently hee might willingly consent unto, hee knowing that out of his countrey, the Realme of England might be better served with lackes, then hee in confinement from be.

The king of Spain sought to disgrace the Quenes and her Ambassador.

Further he gave mee to understand, that the king of Spaine had sent unto him for a licence, that an Ambassadour of his might come into his country, and had made great meanes that the Quenes Maieitie of England sent any unto him, that he would not give any credit or entertainment, albeit (sayd he) I knowe what the king of Spaine is, and what the Quenes of England and her Realme is: for I neither like of him nor of his religion, being so governed by the Inquisition, that he can doe nothing of himselfe.

Therefore when he cometh vpon the licence which I haue granted, he shall well see how he shall come to my presence as you haue done, and shall daily: for I minde to accept of you, as my companion, and one of my house, whereas he shall attend thence dayes after hee hath done his message.

After the end of this speech, I deliuered Sir Thomas Greshams letters, when as hee took me by the hand, and led me to wane a long court, to a palace, where there ranne a faire fontaine of water, and there sitting himselfe in a chaire, he commanded me to sit downe in another, and there called for such simple Gallians as he had.

The king of Spaine sent into England for Gallians.

Then I presented him with a great bale of Luce, which he most thankfully accepted, and then he was desirous to heare of the Gallians, and I tolde him that there was great care had to provide them, and that I did not doubt, but vpon my returne they should come with the first ship. He is willing to giue them good entertainment with provision of victuall, and to liue according to their law and conscienc: wherein he veyeth none to the contrary.

I find him to be one that liueth greatly in the feare of God, being well exercised in the Scriptures, as well in the olde Testament, as also in the New, and he beareth a greater affection to our Nation then to others, because of our religion, which for sundry workes of holles, and the Moores called him the Christian king.

A rich gift bestowed vpon our Ambassadour.

The same night being the first of Iune, I continued with him till twelue of the clocke, and he seemed to haue so good liking of me, he tooke from his girdle, a Hoop dagger being set with 200. Stones, rubies, and turkies, and did bestow it vpon me, and so I being conducted, returned to my lodging for that time.

The next day because he knew it to be Sunday and our Sabbath day he did let me rest. On the Monday in the afternoon he sent for me, and I had conference with him againe, & Gresham. Likewise on the Tuesday by three of the clocke he sent for me into his garden, finding him layd vpon a silke bed, complaining of a sore leg: per after long conference hee walked into an other Orchard, where as hauing a faire banketting house, and a great water, and a new galle in it, he went aboord the galle, and tooke me with him, and passed the space of two or thre bowlers, he toying the great experience he had in Gallies, wherein (as he sayd) he had exercised himselfe eigheteen yeeres in his youth.

After supper he shewed me his hoyses and other commodities that he had about his house, and since that night I haue not seene him, so that he hath kepte in with his sore legge, but he hath sent to me daily.

Iune.

The 13. of Iune at five of the clocke at night, I had againe audience with the king, and I continued with him till midnight, hauing debated as well for the Quenes commission, as for the well dealing with her merchants for their traffique here in these partes, saying, he would do much more for the Quenes maieitie and the Realme, offering that all English ships with her subjects may with good securitie enter into his portes and dominions, as well in trade of merchaundise, as for victuall & water, as also in time of warre with any her enemies, to bring in prizes, and to make sales as occasion should serue, or els to depart againe with them at their pleasure.

The offers of the king to our English merchants.

Like wise for all English shippes that shall passe along his coast of Barbarie, and choise to the Desertes into the Leuane seas, that he would graunt safe conduct that the said shippes and merchants with their goods, might passe into the Leuane seas, and so to the Turkes dominions, and the king of Argiers, as his owne, and that he would write to the Turke, and to the king of Argier his letters for the well vsing of our shippes and goods.

Also that hereafter no Englishmen, that by any meanes may be taken captiues, shall bee sold within any of his dominions: whereupon I declared that the Quenes maieitie accepting of this his offers, was pleased to confirme the intercourse, and trade of our merchants within this his country, as also to pleasure him with such commodities as he should haue need of, so farre as the necessities and wants of his country in trade of merchaundise, so as he required nothing contrary to his honour and law, and the breach of league with the christian princes her neighbours.

The same night I presented the king with the case of combes, and desired his matricke to have speciall regard that the ships might be laden backe againe, for that I found the case of Shal peter in readinesse in John Bampton's hands: He answered me that I should haue all the assistance therein that he could, but that in Sus he thought to haue some stoyes in his house there, as also that the Mountayners had made much in a readinesse: I requested that he would send to him, which he promised to doe.

The eighteenth day I was with him againe, and so continued there till night, and he showed me his house with passing in trucking with water Spaniels, and baiting buls with his English dogges.

At this time I moued him againe for the sending downe to Sus, which he graunted to doe, and the 24. day there departed Alcaide Mammie, with Lionell Edgerton, and Rowland Guy to Sus, and carried with them for our accompts and his company, the kings letters to his brother Muly Hammer, and Alcaide Shauan, and the Clericoy.

The 23. day the king sent me out of Morocco to his garden called Shersbonare, with his gard, and Alcaide Mamoure, and the 24. at night I came to the court to see a Spanish dance, and a play of his Elchies. He promised me audience the next day being Tuesday, but he put it off till Thursday: and the Thursday at night I was sent for to the king after supper, and then he sent Alcaide Rodwan, and Alcaide Gowry to conferre with me, but after a litle talke I desired to be brought to the king for my dispatch. And being brought to him, I presented two bills of John Bampton which he had in the for provision of Shal peter, also two bills for the quiet traffique of our English merchants, and bills for sugars to be made by the Jewes, as well for the debts paid, as hereafter, and for good order in the Ingenios. Also I moued him againe for the Shal peter, and other dispatches, which he referred to be agreed vpon by the two Alcaides. But the Friday being the 20. the Alcaides could not internd it, and vpon Saturday Alcaide Rodwan fell sick, so on Sunday we made meanes to the king, and that afternoon I was sent for to conferre vpon the bargaine, with the Alcaides and others, but did not agree.

Upon Tuesday I wrote a letter to the king for my dispatch, and the same afternoon I was called againe to the court, and referred all things to the king, accepting his offer of Shalpeter.

That night againe the king had me into his galley, and the Spaniels did hunt the ducke.
The Thursday I was appointed to way the 200. kintals grosse of Shal peter, and that afternoone the Tabye came vnto me to my lodging, shewing me that the king was offended with John Bampton for diuers causes.

The Sunday night last, being the 7. of July, I got the king to forgive all to John Bampton, July, and the king promised me to speake againe with me vpon Monday.

Upon Tuesday I wrote to him againe for my dispatch, and then he sent Fray Lewes to me, and said that he had order to write.

Upon Wednesday I wrote againe, and hee sent mee word that vpon Thursday I should come and be dispatched, so that I should depart vpon Friday without faile, being the twelfth of July.

So the Friday after according to the kings order and appointment, I went to court, and whereas motion and petition was made for the confirmation of the demands which I had preferred, they were all graunted, and likewise the priuiledges which were on the behalfe of our English merchants requested, were with great fauour and readinesse peesed vnto. And whereas the Jewes there resident, were to our men in certaine round summes indebted, the Emperors pleasure and commandement was, that they should without further excuse or delay, pay and discharge the same. And thus at length I was dismissed with great honor and speciall countenance, such as hath not ordinarily bene the use to other Ambassadors of the Christians.

And touching the private affaires intrated vpon betwixt her Matricke and the Empero, I had letters from him to satisfie her highnesse therein. So to conclude, hauing receiued the like honourable countenance from his court, as I had for my repaire at my first landing, I embarked my selfe with my Ioyseys company, and arriuing not long after in England, I repaired to her matrickes Court, and ended my Ambassage to her highnesse good liking, with relation of my seruice performed,

A Letter written from Goa, the principall Citie of all the East Indies, by one Thomas Steuens an Englishman, and sent to his father, M. Thomas Steuens, An. 1579.

After most humble commendations: These shall be to crave your daily blessing, with like commendations unto my mother, and with all, so certifie you of my being, according to your will and my dutie. I wrote unto you taking my journey from Zambie to Doytingall, which letters I thinke are come to your handes, so that presuming thereupon, I thinke I have the lesse need at this time to tell you the cause of my departing, which uncerteinly in one word I may conclude, if I doe but name, obedience. I came to Lisbon to ward the ende of March, eight dayes before the departure of the ships, so late that if the y had not bene stayed about some weightie matters, they had bene long gone before our comming: in so much that there were others ordained to goe in our places, that the kings psonall our and ours also might not be in bayne. Neuertheless, our sudden comming tooke place, and the 4. of Aprill, five shippes departed for Goa, where in besides shipmen and souldiours, there were a great number of children which in the seas beare out better then men, and two mariell, when that many women also passe very well. The setting forth from the porte, I neede not to tell how welcome it is with trumpets, and shooting of ordinaunce, you may easly imagine it, considering that they goe in the maner of warre. The tenth of the foylsayd moneth, we came to the sight of Ponta Sancto netre unto Madera, where an English ship ste upon ours, (which was then also alone) with a few shots, which did no harme, but after that our ships had laied out her greatest ordinaunce, they straight departed as they came. The English ship was very faire and great, which I was sorry to see so ill occupied, for she went raving about, so that wee save her againe at the Canarian Isles, unto the which we came the 13. of the said moneth, and good saifure wee had to wonder at the high mountaine of the Island Tenerif, for wee wandered betwene that and great Canaria foure dayes by reason of contrary windes: and besides, such cruell weather wee had untill the 14. of May, that they departed to compass the Cape of Good Hope that yeere. Neuertheless, taking our voiage betwene Guinea, and the Islands of Capo Verde, without seeing of any land at all, we arrived at length unto the coast of Guine, which the Doytingalls so call, chiefly that part of the burning Zone, which is from the 6. degree unto the Equinoctiall, in which partes they suffered so many inconveniencies of heates, and lacke of windes, that they thinke themselves happy when they have passed it: for sometimes the ship standeth there almost by the space of many dayes, sometime to be most horrible tempests, we found most quiet calmes which was very troublesome to those ships which be the greatest of all other, and cannot goe without good windes. In so much, that when it is tempest almost intollecable to other ships, and maketh them maine all their sailes, these hope by and sake excellant well, unless the waters be too too furious, which seldom happened in our navigation. You shall understand, that being passed the line, they cannot straight way goe the way to the promontorie: but according to the wind, they draw a litle as neerer South as they can to put themselves in the latitude of the point, which is 35. degrees and an halfe, and then they take their course towards the East, and so compass the point. But the wind served us so, that at 30. degrees we did direct our course toward the point of promontorie of Good Hope.

You know that it is hard to saile from East to West, contrary, because there is no fixed point in all the side, whereby they may direct their course, wherefore I shall tell you what helpe God promised for these men. There is not a fowle that appeareth, or signe in the aere, or in the sea, which they have not wisiten, which have made the voyages heretofore. Wherefore, partly by their own experience, & pondering what what space the ship is able to make with such a wind, & such direction, and partly by the experience of others, they know that the wind which is called the West wind, is the best to saile with, and that the wind which is called the East wind, is the worst to saile with. And therefore the ships which are bound to the East Indies, take their course towards the West Indies, and so come to the East Indies. And the ships which are bound to the West Indies, take their course towards the East Indies, and so come to the West Indies. And the ships which are bound to the North Indies, take their course towards the South Indies, and so come to the North Indies. And the ships which are bound to the South Indies, take their course towards the North Indies, and so come to the South Indies. And the ships which are bound to the East Indies, take their course towards the West Indies, and so come to the East Indies. And the ships which are bound to the West Indies, take their course towards the East Indies, and so come to the West Indies. And the ships which are bound to the North Indies, take their course towards the South Indies, and so come to the North Indies. And the ships which are bound to the South Indies, take their course towards the North Indies, and so come to the South Indies.

and partly by the experience of others, whose booke and nauigations they haue, they geue v<sup>e</sup> here-shows they be, touching degrees of longitude, so of latitude they be alwayes sure: but the greatest and best in busines of all, is to marke the variation of the needle of compass, which in the Meridian of the Island of S. Michael, which is one of the Azores in the latitude of 41. if borne is iust 7. North, and thence th<sup>o</sup>wardes the East so much, that betwixt the Meridian aforesaid, and the point of Africa is carterly 3. of 4. quarters of 32. And againe in y<sup>e</sup> point of Affrike, a litle beyond the point that is called Cape das Agulias (in English the needles) it returneth againe vnto the North, and that place passed it th<sup>o</sup>wardes againe toward the West, as it did before proportionally. As touching our first signes, the manner we came to the people of Affrike, the more strange kindes of Fowles appeared, insomuch that when we came within no lesse then 30. leagues (almost an 100. miles) and 600. miles as we thought from any Island, as good as 3000. fowles of sundry kindes folowed our ship: some of them so great that their wings being opened from one point to the other, contained 7. spans, as the mariners said. A maruelous thing to see how God prouided, so y<sup>e</sup> in so wide a sea these fowles are all fat, & nothing wanteth them. The Waxingals haue vnto the all according to some propertie which they haue: some they cal Ruskialles, because their tail is be not proportionable to their bodies, but long & smal like a rusk, some forked tailed because they be very broad and forked, some deluet Steuens, because they haue wings of the colour of velvet, & boweth them as a man bow-eth his elbow. This bird is alwayes welcome, so he appeareth next the Cape. I should neuer make an end if I should tell all particulars: but it shal suffice briefly to touch a few, which yet shal be sufficient, if you marke them to giue occasion to glorifie almightie God in his wonderful works, and such variety in his creatures. And to speake somewhat of fishes in all places of calme, especially in the bayning Zone, there is y<sup>e</sup> line (so) without we neuer saw any) they waited on our ship fishes as long as a man, which they cal Tuberones, they come to eate such things as from the ship fall into the sea, not refusing men themselves if they lye vpon them. And if they find any meat tied in the sea, they take it for theirs. These haue waiting on them 6. or 7. small fishes (which neuer depart) with garbes blew and greene round about their bodies, like comely serving men: and they go two or thre before him, and some on euery side. Spoutour, they haue other fishes which cleaue alwayes vnto their body, and seme to take such superfluities as grow about them, and they are said to enter into their bodies also to purge them if they neede. The mariners in time past haue eate of them, but since they haue seme them eate men, their stomacks abhoire them. Fewer theleste, they draw the up with gr<sup>o</sup>at hookes, and kill of them as many as they can, thinking that they haue made a great reuenge. There is another kind of fish as big almost as a herring, which hath wings and fierch, and they are together in great number. These haue two enemies, the one in the sea, the other in the air. In the sea the fish which is called Albocore, as big as a Salmon foloweth them with great swiftnesse to take them.
This poore fish not being able to swim fast, so he hath no finnes, but swimmeth with moouing of his talle, flouting his wings, lieth himselfe about the water, and fierch not very high: The Albocore seeing that, although he haue no wings, yet glieth he a great leape out of the water, and sometimes catcheth him, so he keepeth himselfe vnder the water going that way on as fast as he fierch.
And when the fish being wearie of the air, or thinking himselfe out of danger, returneth into the water, the Albocore meeteth with him: but sometime his other enemy the sea Crow, catcheth him before he falleth. With these and like fishes, but alwayes making our supplications to God for good weather and saluation of the ship, we came at length vnto the point, so famous and feared of all men. but we found there no tempest, on y<sup>e</sup> great waues, where our Pilot was a litle ouerset: so wher-as commonly all other shoues come within sight of land, but seeing signs ordinarie, and finding bot-tome, go their way sure and safe, he thinking himselfe to haue wind at will, th<sup>o</sup> so nigh the land, that the wind turning into the South, and the waues being exceeding great, rolled vs so neere the land, that the ship stood in lesse then 14. fadoms of water, no more then six miles from the Cape, which is called Las Agulias, and there we stode as w<sup>o</sup>ldly call away: for vnder vs were rockes of maine stone so sharp, and cutting, that no anker could hold the ship, the th<sup>o</sup>se so euill that nothing could take land, and the land is full of Tigers, and people that are sauage, and killers of all strangers, that we had no hope of life nor comfort, but ouely in God and a good conscience. Notwithstanding, after we had lost ankers, holling by the cables for to get the ship a coast in some safe place, or when it should please God, he pleased his mercie suddenly, where no man looked for helpe, so all our cables with vnto from the land, and so we escaped thanks be to God. And the day folowing, being in the place where they are alwayes woont to catch fish, we also fell a fishing, and so many they took that they serued all the ship for that day, and part of the next. And one of them pulled by a currall of great biggish and price. For there they say (as we sawe by experience) that the cur-ralls be grow in the manner of stalkes vpon the rockes in the bottoome, and waue hard and red. The day of perill was the 29. of July. And you shall understand that the Cape passed, there bee two waues to India: one within the Isle of S. Laurence, which they take willingly, because they refresh themselves at Molambique a fortnight or a month, not without great need, and thence in a month more, land in Goa. The other is without the Isle S. Laurence, which they take when they see too late, and come so late to the point, that they haue no time to take the foresayd Molambique, and then they goe brauely, because in this way they take no port. And by reason of the long nauigation, and want of food and water, they fall into sundry diseases, their gummes were great and swell, and they are faine to cut them a way, their legs swell, and all the body becommeth sore, and so benumbed, that they cannot stirre hand nor foote, and so they die for weakness, others fall into fluxes and agues, and die thereby. And this way it was our chance to make: yet though we had more then one hundred and fiftie sick, there died not past 27, which losse they esteemed not much in respect of other times. Though some of ours were diseased in this sort, yet thanks be to God, I had my health all the way, contrary to the expectation of many: God send me my health in well in the land, if it may be, to his honour and seruice. This way is full of pyrite rocks and quick sandes, so that sometimes we durst not saile by night, but by the providence of God we saw nothing, nor neuer found botome until we came to the coast of India. When we had passed againe the line, and were come to the third degree, or somewhat more, we sawe crabs swimming on the water that were red as though they had bene sodden, but this was no signe of land. After, about the 11. degree, the space of many dayes, more then ten thousand fishes by estimation followed round about our ship, whereof we caught so many, that for fiftene dayes we did eate nothing els, and they serued our curie very well: for at this time we had neither meate nor almost any thing els to eate, our nauigation growing so long that it bye we nere to fteuen monthes, where as commonly they goe it in fteue, I meane when they saile the timer way. But these fishes were not signe of land, but rather of deepe sea. At length we tooke a couple of birdes, which were a kind of Hawks, whereof they toied much, thinking that they had bene of India, but in deede they were of Arabia, as wee found afterward. And we that thought we had bene nere India, were in the same latitude nere Zocotera, an Isle in the mouth of the red sea. But there God sent vs great winds from the North east or Northnortheast, whereupon unwillingly they bare vp toward the East, and thus we went ten dayes without seeing signe of land, whereby they perceived their error: for they had directed their course before, alwayes Northeast, couecting to multiple degrees of latitude, but partly the difference of the Needle, and most of all the running seas, which at that time ran Northwell, had drawn vs to this other danger, had not God sent vs this wind, which at length waues larger, and restored vs to our right course. These running seas be so perillous that they deceiue the most part of the gouernours, and some be so litle curious, contenting themselves with ordinarie experience, that they care not to seke out any meane to know when they swaue, neither by the compass, nor by any other triall. The first signe of land, were certaine sowles which they knew to be of India: the second, boughes of palmes & sedges: the third, snakes swimming on the water, and a substance which they call by the name of a coine of mony, as byoad, and as round as a groat, wonder fully printed and stamped of nature, like vnto some coine. And these two last signes be so certaine, that the next day after, if the wind serue, they see land, which we did to our great ioy, when all our water (so you know they make no beere in those partes) and victuals began to faile vs. And so Goa we came the 24. of October, there being receiued with passing great charitie. The people be tawny, but not disfigured in their lippes and noses, as the Moores and Cafres of Ethiopia. They that be not of reputation, or at least the most part, goe naked, laying an apyon of a spanne long, and as much in bredth before them, and a lace two fingers broad before them, girded about with a string and no more: and thus they thinke themselves as well as we with all our trimming. Of the fruits and trees that be here, I cannot now speake, for I should make another letter as long as this. For hitherto I haue not seene tree here, whose like I haue seene in Europe, the vine excepted, which neuertheless here is to us purpose, so that all the wines are brought out of Portugall. The drink of this countrey is good water, or wine of the Palme tree, or of a fruite called Cocos. And this shall suffice for this time. If God send me my health, I shall haue opportunitye to write to you once againe. Nowe the length of my letter compelleth me to take my leaue, and thus I wish your most prosperous health. ELizabeth by the grace of the most mightie God, and onely Creatour of heauen and earth, of England, France and Ireland Queene, the most inuincible and most mightie defender of the Christian faith against all kinde of idolatries, of all that liue among the Christians, and falselie possesse the name of Christ, vnto the most Imperiall and most inuincible prince, Suldan Murad Chan, the most mightie ruler of the kingdome of Turkie, sole and aboue all, and most souereigne Monarch of the East Emperre, greeting, and many happy and fortunate peeres, with abundance of the best things.

Most Imperiall and most inuincible Emperour, we haue receiued the letters of your mightie highnesse written to vs from Constantinople the twentieth day of March this present yeere, wherby we vnderstand howe gracious, and howe fauorably the humble petitions of our William Parabowne a subiect of ours, resident in the Imperiall citie of your highnesse presented vnto your Majesty also, to come with merchandizes both by sea & land, to the countries and territories subiect to your gouernement, and from thence againe to returne home with good leaue and libertie, were accepted of your most inuincible Imperiall highnesse, and not that onely, but with an extraordinary speed and worthy your Imperiall grace, that which was craved by petition was granted to him, and his companie in regard onely (as it seemeth) of that opinion which your highnesse conceived of vs and our amitie; which singular benefite done to our aforesaid subiects, we take so thankesfull, and in so good part (preiding for the same our greatest thanks to your highnesse) that we will neuer giue occasion to your said highnesse (according as time, and the respect of our affaires will permitt) once to thinke so great a pleasure bestowed vpon an vngreatfull prince. For the almighty God, by whose, and by whose grace we reigne, hath planted in vs this goodnesse of nature, that we detest & abhorre the least suspicion of ingratitude, & hath taught vs not to suffer our selues to be ouermatched with the good demerits of other princes. And therefore at this time we do extend our good minde vnto your highnesse, by well conceiuing, and publishing also abroad, how much we repute our selfe bound in an euermaking remembrance for this good pleasure to our subiects, meaning to feelle a much more large and plentifull satisfaction of our thankesfullnesse, when time conuenient shall fall out, and the same shall be looked for at our hands.

But whereas that grant which was giuen to a few of our subiects, and at their onely request without any intercession of ours, standeth in as free a libertie of coming and going to and from all the lands and kingdomes subiect to your maiestie, both by land and sea with merchandizes, as euer was granted to any of your imperiall highnesse confederates, as namely to the French, the Polonians, the Venetians, as also to the subiects of the king of the Romans, we desire of your highnesse that the commendation of such singular cunctie may not be so narrowly restrained to two or three men onely, but may be enlarged to all our subiects in generall, that thereby your highnesse goodnesse may appeare the more notable, by reason of the granting of the same to a greater number of persons. The bestowing of which so singular a benefite your highnesse shall so much the less repent you of, by how much the more fit & necessarie for the vse of man those commodities are, wherein our kingdoms do abound, and the kingdoms of other princes do want, so there is no nation that can be without them, but are glad to come by them, although by very long and diverse travels: and when they have them, they sell them much better to others, because every man seeketh to make profit by his labor: so that in the getting of them there is profit, but in the buying of them from others there is loss. But this profit will be increased to the subjects of your highness by the free access of a few of our subjects to your dominions, as also the loss and burden will be eased, by the permission of generall access to all our people. And furthermore we will grant as equal and as free a libertie to the subjects of your highness wish vs for the use of traffike, when they will, and as often as they will, to come, and go to and from vs and our kingdoms, which libertie we promise to your highness shall be as ample, and as large as any was ever given or granted to your subjects by the apostolicall princes your confederates, as namely the king of the Romans, of France, of Poland, and the common wealth of Venice. In which matter, if your most invincible imperiall highness shall be content to incline to our reasonable request, and shall give order upon these our letters, that we may have knowledge how the same is accepted of you, and whether it will be granted, with sufficient securitie for our subjects to go, and returne safe and secure from all violences and injuries of your people, we on the other side will give order, that those commodities which amongstie God hath bestowed upon our kingdoms (which are in deed so excellent, that by reason of them all princes are bounden to enter, and confirme leagues of amitie & good neighborhood with vs, by that meanes to enjoy these so great blessings of God, which we have, and they can in no case waive) our subjects shall bring them so abundantly and plentifully to the kingdoms and dominions of your highness, that both the former inconveniences of necessitie, and loss, shall most sufficiently be taken away.

Moreover the significance and assurance of your highness great affection to vs and our nation, doth cause vs also to intercede and use mediation on the behalfe of certaine of our subjects, who are detaineed as slaves and captives in your galleies, for whom we craue, that you should order that they be taken into that miserie, not by any offence of theirs, by bearing of armes against your highness, or in behaving of themselves contrary to honestie, and to the law of nations, they may be delivered from their bondage, and restored to libertie, for their service towards vs, according to their vertue: which thing shall yield much more abundant cause to vs of commending your clemencie, and of beseeching that God (who onely is above all things, and all men, and is a most severe revenger of all violence, and is jealous of his honor against the false gods of the nations) to adorne your most invincible imperiall highness with all the blessings of those gifts, which onely & deservedly are accounted most worthy of asking.

Given at our palace of Greenwich, nere to our citie of London, the five and twentieth day of October, in the yere of Iesus Christ our Saviour 1579, and of our reigne the one and twentieth.

Christendome (to whose marchants wee with happie successe sent her letters by her worthy servant William Harbrowne, unto our Raely and most magnificem Porche replenished with iurisdiction, which is a refuge and sanctuary to all the princes of the world, by which letters her Majesty signified, that whereas heretofore certaine of her subiects had repaired to our saide Raely Porche, and had shewed their obedience to the same, and for that cause had desired that leave and libertie might also be graunted unto them, to come and goe for traffique sake too and from our dominions, and that our Imperiall commaundment might be given, that no man should presume to hurt or hinder them in any of their abodes or passages by sea or land, and whereas she requested that we would graunt to all her subiects in generall, this our favour, which before wee had extended onely to a few of her people: therefore as wee have entered into amitie, and most holy league with the most excellent kings and princes our confederats, shewing their deuotion, and obedience of seruices to wards our Raely Porche (as namely the French king, the Venecians, the king of Polonia and others) so also we have contracted an inuiolable amitie, peace and league with the aforesaid Queene. Therefore we give licence to all her people, and marchants, peaceably and safely to come unto our Imperiall dominions, with all their merchandise and goods without any impeachment, to exercise their traffique, to vse their owne customes, and to buy and sell according to the fashions of their owne countrey.

And further her Majesty signified unto vs, that certaine of her people had heretofore bene taken prisoners, and were detained in captiuitie, and required that they might bee set at libertie, and that as we had graunted unto other princes our confederats, priuiledges, and Imperiall decrees, concerning our most inuiolable league with them, so it would please our Imperiall Majesty to graunt and confirme the like priuiledges, and princely decrees to the aforesayde Queene.

Therefore according to our humanitie and gracious ingrafted disposition, the requests of her Majesty were accepted of vs, and wee have graunted unto her Majesty this priuiledge of ours agreeable to reason & equitie. And we straightly commaunde all our Beglerbegs, and Zanzibegs, our seruants, and our Reyz, that is to say, our Judges, and all our customers in all places, hauens and passages, that as long as this league and amitie with the conditions, and articles thereof, are kept and obserued on the behalfe of the aforesaid Queene, 1 Our Imperiall commaundment and pleasure is, that the people and subiects of the same Queene, may safely and securely come to our princely dominions, with their goods and merchandise, and ladinges, and other commodities by sea, in great and small vessels, and by land with their carriages and cattels, and that no man shall hurt them, but they may buy and sell without any hinderance, and obserue the customes and orders of their owne countrey.

2 Item, if the aforesaid people and marchants shall be at any time in the course of their iourneys, and dealings by any meanes taken, they shall bee deliuered and enlarged, without any excuse or rauillation.

3 Item, if their ships purpose to arriue in any of our ports and hauens, it shall be lawfull for them to doe in peace, and from thence againe to depart, without any let or impediment.

4 Item, if it shall happen that any of their ships in tempestuous weather shall bee in danger of loss and perishing, and thereupon shall stand in neede of our helpe, we will, and commaund that our men and ships be ready to helpe and succour them.

5 Item, if they shall be willing to buy any victuals for their money, no person shall withstande them, but they shall buy the same without any disturbance to the contrary.

6 Item, if by any casualtie their shippes shall bee diuenc on shore in perill of shipwacke, our Beges and Judges, and other our subiects shall succour them, and such wares, and goods of theirs as shall bee recouered from the loss, shall bee restored to them, and no man shall wrong them.

7 Item, if the people of the aforesaid Queene, their interpreters and marchants, shall for traffique sake, either by lande or sea repaire to our dominions paying our lawfull coll and custome, they shall haue quiet passage, and none of our Captaines or gouernours of the sea, and shippes, nor any kinde of persons, shall either in their bodies, or in their goods and cattels, any way molest them.

8 Item, if any Englishman shall growe in debt, and so owe money to any other man, and thereupon doeth absent himselfe that hee can not be founde, let no man arrest or apprehend him for any other mans debt, except he be the creditor.

11 Item, if any man shall say, that these being Christians shall speake any thing to the derogation of our holy faith and religion, and shall slander the same, in this matter as in all others, let no false witnesses in any case be admitted.

12 Item, if any one of them shall commit any great crime, and dying thereupon can not be found, let no man be arrested, or detained for another mans fact, except he be his suretie.

13 Item, if any slaue shall be found to be an Englishman, and their Consull or gouernour shall sue for his libertie, let the same slaue be diligently examined, and if he be found in deed to be English, let him be discharged and restored to the Englishmen.

14 Item, if any Englishman shall come hither either to dwell or traffique, whether he be married or unmarried, he shall pay no polle or head money.

15 Item, if either in Alexandria, Damasco, Samos, Tunes, Tripolis in West, the port towne of Egypt, or in any other places, they purpose to choole to themselves Consuls or gouernours, let them doe so, and if they will alter them at any time, and in the roome of the former Consuls place others, let them doe so also, and no man shall restraine them.

16 Item, if their interpreter shall be at any time absent, being occupied in other serious matters, let the thing then in question be stayed and deferred till his coming, and in the meane time no man shall trouble them.

17 Item, if any variance or controuersie shall arise among the Englishmen, and thereupon they shall appeale to their Consuls or gouernours, let no man molest them, but let them freely doe so, that the controuersie begunne, may be finished according to their owne customes.

18 Item, if after the time and date of this priuledge, any pirates or other free gouernours of ships trading the sea, shall take any Englishman, and shall make sale of him, either beyonde the sea, or on this side of the sea, the matter shall be examined according to iustice, and if the partie shall be found to be English, and shall receiue the holy religion, then let him freely be discharged, but if he will still remaine a Christian, let him then be restored to the Englishmen, and the buyers shall demaunde their money againe of them who sold the man.

19 Item, if the ships of warre of our Imperiall highnes shall at any time goe forth to sea, and shall finde any English ships laden with marchandise, no man shall hinder them, but rather shall vse them friendly, and doe them no wrong, euen as we haue giuen and granted articles and priuiledges, to the French, Venetians, and other Kings and princes our confederats, so also we haue giuen the like to the English: and contrary to this our diuine lawe and priuiledge, let no man presume to doe anything.

20 Item, if either their great or small ships shall in the course of their voyage, or in any place to which they come, be stayed or arrested, let no man continue the same arrest, but rather helpe and assist them.

21 Item, if any theenes and robbers shall by force take away any of their ships, and marchandise, let the same theenes and robbers be sought, and searched for with all diligence, and let them be punished most severely.

22 Last of all the Beglerbegs, and Zanzicbegs, our Captaines, our slaues and seruants of Captaines vsing the sea, and our Iudges, customers and gouernours of shippes called Reiz, and free Reiz, all these according to the tenor of this priuledge and article, shall be bounde to doe accordingly, and, as long as the Queene of England on her part shall duely keepe and obserue this league and holy peate, expressed in this priuledge, we also for our Imperiall part, doe charge and commaunde the same so long to be straightly kept and obserued.

Her

Her Maiesties letters to the Turke or Grand Signior 1581. promising redresse of the disorders of Peter Baker of Ratcliffe, committed in the Levant.

Lizabech by the diuine grace of the eternall God, of England, Fraunce and Irelande, most sacred Queene, and of the most Christian faith, against all the wrongness of his most holy Name the zealous and mightie defendour, &c. To the most renowned and Emperious Caesar, Sulcan Murad Chan, Emperour of all the dominions of Turkie, and of all the East Monarchie chiefe about all others who soeuer, most fortunate possessors with the successe of all true happinesse. As with very great desire we wish and embrace the loue and amitie of foireigne Princes, and in the same by all good dueties and means wee seeke to be confirmed: so to vs there may be nothing more grieuous and disliking then that any thing should happen through the default of our subiects, which any way might bring our faith and fidelitie into suspicion: Although wee are not ignorant howe many good princes by the like misadenture be abused, where the doings of the subiects are imputed to the want of good gouernment. But such matters of importance and so well appoyued we may not omit: such is to vs the sacred estimation of our honour, and of our Christian profession, as we would the same should appeare aswell in the concluding of our promises and agreements, as in the faithfull performing of the same.

The matter which by these our letters we specially beholde, is a most iniurious and grieuous wrong which of late came vnto our vnderstanding, that should be done vnto certaine of your subiects by certaine of our subiects, as yet not apprehended: but with all seueritie vpon their apprehension they are to be warned for the same. And as the deede in it selfe is most wicked, so is it much more intollerable, by how much it doeth infringe the credite of our faith, violateth the force of our authoritie, and impeacheth the estimation of our word faithfully given vnto your Imperiall dignitie. In which so great a disorder if wee should not manifest our hatred towards so wicked and euill disposed persons, wee might not onely most iustly be repproued in the iudgement of all such as truly fauour Justice, but also of all Princes the patrones of right and equitie, might not lesse be condemned. That therefore considered, which of our parts is obtained in this cause which may be to the good liking of your highnesse, wee are most especially to request of your Imperiall Maiestie, that through the default and disorder of a sort of euill and wicked disposed persons, you will not withpayne your gracious fauour from vs, neither to hinder the traffique of our subiects, which by vertue of your highnesse sufferance, and power of your licence are permitted to trade vnto your dominions and countreys, or that either in their persons or goods they be prejudiced their trauesing by land or by water, promising vnto your greatnesse most faithfully, that the goods whereof your subiects by great wrong and violence haue bene spoyled, shall wholie againe be restored, if either by the lines or possessions of the robbers it may any way be brought to passe: And that hereafter (as now being caught by this euill example) wee will haue speciall care that none vnder the title of our authoritie, shall be suffered to commit any the like wrongs or iniuries.

Neither they which haue committed these euill parts, had any power vnder your highnesse safeconduit graunted vnto our subiects, but from some other safe conduit, whether it were true or fained, we knowe not, or whether they boughte it of any person within the gouernment of Marceils: but vnder the colour thereof they haue done that, which the truth of our dealing doeth directly abhorre. Notwithstanding howsoever it be, wee will surely measure their euill proceedings with most sharpe and iust correction, and that it shall repent them of the impeachment of our honours, as also it shall be an example of our indignation, that others may dread at all times to commit the like offence. Wherefore that our amitie might be continued, as if this vnfortunate happe had neuer chaunced, and that the singular affection of our subiects towards your Imperiall Maiestie bowen, and daily more and more desired, might be conserued and defended, wee thencemore doe make our humble suite vnto your greatnesse: And for so great goodnesse towards vs and our people graunted, doe most humbly pray vnto the Almighty creatour of heauen and earth, euer to maintaine and keepe your most renowned Maiestie in all happinesse and prosperitie.

Dated at our palace of Greenwich the 26. of June, Anno 1581.

This was Baker of Ratcliffe, who with the barke called the Koe, robbed certaine Christians in the Levant.

 same, the foresaid renowned Emperour hath granted vnto our subjects free libertie of traffike, in all the partes of his sacred Empire, with as ample, and large a graunt of priuileg-ges, as is giuen to other good Princes, our neighbours, and confederats, the graunt of which priuilegges, wee taking very thankfully, and acceptably, are certaintly, and thorowly determined to keepe and maintaine, with the like goodnes and curtesie of minde, desiring nothing more, then with an honourable respect to nourish, and deserue the beneuolent affec-

In witness whereof, we haue caused these our letters to be made patents, and our seale thereun-to to be appended, Giuen at our Castle of Windsor, the 20. day of Nouember, in the yeere of Christ, 1582. and of our raigne the 24.

The first voyage or iourney, made by Master Lawrence Aldersey, Marchant of London, to the Cities of Ierusalem, and Tripolis, &c.
In the yeere, 1581. Penned and set downe by himselfe,

Departed from London, the first day of April, in the yeere of our Lorde, 1581, and the next morning, being Sunday, I arrived at Grauesende, where I found a Craier laden with beere, then ready to depart, for Flushing: I, and the companie that was with me, staid there that day, vntill one of the clocke in the afternoone the next day: and then I, and Thomas God, with foure or five more that were in the companie, to goe to Antwerpe, imbarked our selues in that Craier, and so set safte, and departed: but the winde being quite contrary, we were set on shoare, a mile or two before we came to Quinborough: in the euening, we made our way to the towne, so that we lay in the streets all that night, till two of the clocke the next morning, and then by chance Thomas God happened vpon a tenants house of his, by whome we were brought to Quinborough, where we were well entertained, and well refreshed our selues.

Upon Wednesday, the fift of April, we tooke the seas againe, (the wind being some what good) and it serued vs so well, that we arrived at Flushing vpon the next day, at foure of the clocke in the afternoone. Upon Friday in the afternoone, I arrived at Antwerpe, and hauing dispatched my busines there by Saturday, I tooke my passage for Dort, where I arrived vpon Sunday, the ninth of the same moneth, staying there but that night: and in the morning, hauing found companie that went to Wezell, I tooke my passage with them in a small boate, the boate being heauie laden, & soe pestered with passengers, and but one man and a boy, to guide the same: and the water which being very rough, I caused them to land me at Gorcom, but foure mile from Dort, and there staid that night, and the next day I tooke a stronger boate, better manned, and lesse pestered, in which boate, I thanke God, I was safely deliuered at Neumegen.

From thence, I tooke my passage to Collen, in a stronge hoy, laden with household stuffe, and some other merchandize, and about threelue passengers, besides my selfe. From Neumegen, we departed vpon Wednesday, the 12. of April, with very scant wind, by reason whereof, we were de-ry long vpon the way, and many times set on ground in great danger, besides the perill of the Spalecontents, who were vpon both sides of the riuier. One euening, as we lay at anker, the wind being contrary, there came about threene of the Spalecontents, in a great ship boate, and thought to haue boorded vs, but our watch perceiuing them comming, called vs, the rest of our companie being all ready and appointed for them, discharged a peece or two at them: they nothing affraid, still

til came vpon vs, although those 2. peeces were discharged, & I being fast in sleepe in my Cabbin, was therewith awake and asking what the matter was, one told me, that the Spale contents were coming aboard vs: whereupon I being some what amazed, rose out of my Cabbin, and betooke me to my sword, for that was the best weapon I had, and by I went to the top of the hatches, and when I perceiued them comming, I procured halfe a dosen to discharge at once, to let them vnderstand, that there were those in the ship, that would bid them welcome: and when those peeces were all at one instant discharged, they were amazed, and staied, and wist not what to doe. Then I, with the best dutch I had, called to them, and asked them wherfore they came out, they should be welcome to vs, with the best cheere that we were able to make, and so shot off another volley, and shewed our selues with long pipes, swoords, and other weapons, in such order, that they went their waies, and would not accept our entertainment, nor thanke vs for our good will: we were four daies in danger of them, the wind was to contrary. Then at the last, we procured the Master to go on shoare, to hire a couple of hoyses to rowe the ship, which he did, and vpon Sunday, the 16. of the same moneth, we landed at Wezell, and there hired a waggon, to goe ouer land to Collen, because I had halfe to be at Venice, before this moneth were out.

Vpon Tuesday, the 17. of Aprill, I set from Wezell by lande, and that day I dined at Dui- burge, which is three Dutch miles from Wezell, and I lay all night at Thistleborough, which is within five miles of Collen, and vpon Wednesday I came to Collen, about foure of the clocke in the afternoone, and staied there till Tuesday, the 24. of the same moneth, and then set to wardes Mentz.

The monuments of the Cite of Collen scene by Aldersj.

The monuments which I sawe at Collen, be these. I sawe the tombe (as they say) of the three Kings of Collen, which are very faire, inclosed in copper, and Masse said in it euery day: it is in the great Church of Collen.

I was also in the Church of S. Vrula, where I found the people at a sermon, made by a Jesuite: to which sermon, he sedes the people, here rejoyced all the schollers of the said Jesuite, who haue their learning there for nothing: I reckoned and numbred them, to be fixe hundred and more, as they came out, and yet I suppose there are as many more, as I numbred, which went out at an other doore of the Church, so that I could not number them all. Also I sawe the tombe of S. Vrula there, and the tombe of the English King, that was her husband, whose skuls are kept in silver for great monuments, and the plate of silver is made to open, so that euery booke that will, may see the skuls: and there are the bones and skuls of a great many of other virgins, and ladies of England, to the number of ten thousand, the skuls of all which Ladies, were layned also, and the skuls of all the virgins were gilt, and put in cases of purple, and crimson velvet: also the bones of S. Vrula, and most of the bones of the Ladies, with the bones of the Pope, that came with them from Rome, (as they say) be all gilt.

This S. Vrula was a Queene of Wales, and her husband was a King, of a Kings some of England, and his name was Enterius, which were all statue, comming homewardes from Rome, at Collen, with the Pope in their companie, that had christened them at Rome, (for they were all heathen people before) and thinking to be their conductoꝝ home, was slaine with them. There I sawe also (as they told me) the wedding ring of S. Vrula: there are the bones and skuls also of the seven brethren, and the mother of them, mentioned in the Machabees, which were all martyred, for not obeying the tyrants commaundement. I sawe also one of the pots, that (by their report) had water in it at the marriage in Cana of Galile, which Christ turned into wine: and I dranke out of the same pot, which is made of white marble, and holdeth about a gallon, and the foot of it is trimmed with silke of diuers colours.

From Collen, I was commended by George Castler to Augusta, to one Elias Gensle, to wardes which place I went vpon Tuesday the 24. of Aprill, and in the way, I sawe many faire cities, and haue cities, wherein I entred not, as Punt, which is foure Dutch miles from Collen.

The Castle of Drageyfield, is a mile from Punt, which standeth vpon a very high mountaine, and is very strong, and of each side of it, is a Castle of two more: it is built within the rocke, so as it is insynceivable, if it were withall well fortified. Then came we to Andernaga, a great Cite, which is not farre from the Castle of Drageyfield: from thence to Coplands, which is also a great Cite: thence to S. Cure, and Elhelde, two great Cities also: and then to the house of the Pallgraue; which is vpon the river of Rhene, which is not to be come vnto, but by water.

Vpon Sunday, the nine and twentieth of Aprill, at twelue of the clocke, I came to Mentz, where I staied but till thre of the same day, and then tooke passage for Vpnam, where I lay all that night.

Mentz

Mentz is a very great Citie, and beautifull: the Bishopp thereof is in dignitie, and authoritie, a great Prince, his Pallatice like a Princes Pallatice, his barges like dwelling houses, so large, and so full as it were of Chambers, that euery one of his seruants hath his doore, and therunto his locke and key of his Chamber in the barge: they haue in the saide barge a dining Chamber, walkes, great tables to play at vice of cardes, and much moze then I speake of, because I sawe not all.

Upon Thursday, the thirde day of May, I came to Augusta, where I deliuered the letter I had to paster Ienise, from paster Cassler, whome I found very willing to please me, in any thing that I could or would reasonably demaund. He first furnished me with a horse to Venice, for my money, and then tooke me with him a walking, to shewe me the Citie, for that I had a day to tarry there, for him that was to be my guide.

He shewed me first the stee house, which is very faire, and beautifull: then he brought me to the finest garden, and orchard, that euer I sawe in my life: for there was in it a place for Canarie birdes, as large as a faire Chamber, trimmed with wyer both aboue and beneath, with fine little branches of trees, for them to sit in, which was full of those Canarie birdes. There was such an other for Turtle dooves: also there were two pigeon houses, tyning to them, hauing in them fiftye both of Turtle dooves, and pigeons. In the same garden also, were sixe or seuen fishponds, all raised about, and full of very good fish. Also, seuen or eight fine fountaines, of water spyrings, of di-uers fashions: as for fruit, there wanted none of all sortes, as oranges, figges, raisons, wall-nuts, grapes, besides apples, peares, all birds, small nuts, and such other fruit, as we haue in England.

The description of Augusta
in Germany.

Then did he bring me to the water tower of the same Citie, that by a sleight and deuise, hath the water brought vp as high, as any Church in the towne, and to tell you the strange beauties of all, it passeth my capacitie. Then he brought me to another very faire garden, called the shooters hole, where are butts for the long bowe, the crosse bowe, the stone bowe, the long peece, and for di-uers other exercises moze.

After this, we walked about the walls of the Citie, where is a great, broade, and deepe ditch, upon one side of the towne, so full of fish, as euer I sawe any pond in my life, and it is reserved onely for the Staters of the Citie. And upon the other side of the Citie, is also a pleasaure place all greene, wherein Deere are kept, and when it pleaseth the Staters to hunt for their pleasure, thither they resorte, and haue their courses with Grayhounds, which are kept for that purpose.

The fift of May, I departed from Augusta, towards Venice, and came thither upon Wednesday, day, the thirteenth of the same moneth. It is needles to speake of the height of the mountaine, that I passed ouer, and of the danger thereof, it is so well knowne already to the world: the height of them is maruelous, and I was the space of sixe daies in passing them.

Venice.

I came to Venice at the time of a Faire, which lasted fouretee daies, wherein I sawe very many, and faire betwes of wares. I came thither too soone for the first passage, which went away from Venice, about the seventh or eighth of May, and with them about thre score pilgrims, which shipp was cast away at a towne called Estria, two miles from Venice, and all the men in her, sauing thirtie, or thereabout, lost.

Within eight daies after fell Corpus Christi day, which was a day amongst them of processio-on, in which was shewed the plate, and treasure of Venice, which is esteemed to be worth two millions of pounds, but I doe not accompt it worth halfe a quarter of that money, except there be moze then I sawe. To speake of the sumptuousnes of the Copes, and Vestments of the Church, I leaue, but the truth is, they be very sumptuous, many of them set all ouer with pearle, & made of clothe of golde. And for the Iesuites, I thinke there be as many at Venice, as there be in Col-len.

The number of Iewes, is there thought to be 1000, who dwell in a certaine place of the Ci-tie, & haue also a place, to which they resorte to pray, which is called the Jewes Synagogue. They all, and their offspring, vse to weare red caps, (for so they are commanded) because they may there, by be knowne from other men. For my farther knowledge of these people, I went into their Sinagogue upon a Saturday, which is their Sabbath day: and I founde them in their seruite of papers, very deuout: they receiue the true bookes of Moses, and honour them, by carrying them about their Church, as the Papistes doe their crosse.

The number of Iewes in Venice.

Their Synagogue is in forme round, and the people sit round about it, & in the middell, there is a place for him that readeth to the rest: as for their apparell, all of them weare a large white labour ouer their garment, which reacheth from their head, downe to the ground.

The

The Palmes they sing as we doe, hauing no image, nor vsing any manner of Idolatrie: there error is, that they beleue not in Christ, nor yet receiue the New Testament. This Citie of Venice is very faire, and greatly to be commended, where in is good order for all things: and also it is very strong, and populous: it standeth vpon the maine sea, and hath many Ilands about it, that belong to it.

To tell you of the Duke of Venice, & of the Seigniorie: there is one chosen that euer beareth the name of a Duke, but in truth, he is but seruant to the Seigniorie, for of himselfe he can do little: it is no other wise with him, then with a Priest, that is at Mass vpon a festiual day, which putting on his golden garment, seemeth to be a great man, but if any man come vnto him, and craue some friendshipp at his handes, he will say, you must goe to the Maisters of the parill, for I can not pleasure you, ocher wise then by preferring of your suite: and so it is with the Duke of Venice, if any man hauing a suete, come to him, and make his complaint, and deliuer his supplication, it is not in him to helpe him, but he will tell him, you must come this day, or that day, and then I will preferre your suite to the Seigniorie, and doe you the best friendshipp that I may. Further more, if any man bring a letter vnto him, he may not open it, but in the presence of the Seigniorie, and they are to see it first, which being read, perhaps they will deliuer it to him, perhaps not. Of the Seigniorie there be about three hundred, and about fortye of the ppriete Councill of Venice, who usually are attired in gownes of crimisen Satten, or crimisen Damask, when they sitte in Council.

In the Citie of Venice, no man may weare a weapon, except he be a souldier for the Seigniorie, or a scholler of Padua, or a gentleman of great countenance, and yet he may not doe that without licence.

The crosses of the Seigniorie of Venice.

As for the women of Venice, they be rather monsters, then women. Euery Shoemakers or Tailors wife, will haue a gowne of silke, and one to carie vpon her traine, wearing their shoes very nere halfe a yard high from the ground: if a stranger meete one of them, he will surely thinke, by the face that she goeth with, that he meeteth a Ladie.

This cross bring at Venice
for Jerusalem

I departed from this Citie of Venice, vpon Whitsommer day, being the foure and twentieth of June, and thinking that the Shippe would the next day depart, I stayed, and laye a Shippeboard all night, and we were made beleue from time to time, that we should this day, and that day depart, but we taried still, till the foureteenth of July, and then with scant winde we sette saile, and sailed that day, and that night, not about fiftie Italian miles: and vpon the threene day at night, the winde turned flat contrarie, so that the Maister knewe we not wher to goe: and about the fifth houre of the night, which we reckon to be about one of the clocke after midnight, the Pilot descried a saile, and at last perceiued it to be a Galle of the Turkes, whereupon we were in great feare.

The Maister being a wise fellowe, and a good sayler, beganne to deuise howe to escape the danger, and to lose little of our way: and while hee he, and all of vs, were in our dumps, God sent vs a merry gale of winde, that we ranne three trope and tenne leagues before it was twelue a clocke the next day, and in fixe dayes after, we were seuen leagues past Zanra: and vpon Whitsunday morning, being the thre and twentieth of the same moneth, we came to the sight of Candia which day the winde came contrarie, with great blastes, and stormes, vntill the eight and twentieth of the same moneth: in which time, the Mariners cried out vpon me, because I was an English man, and saide, I was no good Christian, and wisshed that I were in the middell of the Sea, saying, that they, and the Shippe, were the woyle for me. I answered, cruelly it may well be, for I thinke my selfe the woyle creature in the woyle, and consider you your selues also, as I doe my selfe, and then vsed your discretion. The Friers preached, and the sermon being done, I was demanded whether I did vnderstand him: I answered, yea, and tolde the Frier himselfe, thus you saide in your sermon, that we were not all good Christians: or els it were not possible for vs to haue such weather: to which I answered, be you well assured, that we are not in deede all good Christians, for there are in the Shippe some, that holde very vnchristian opinions: so by that time I satisfied him, although (they saide) that I would not see, when they sayd the procellion, and honoured their images, and prayed to our Ladie, and S. Marke.

There was also a Gentleman, an Italian, which was a passenger in the Shippe, and he tolde me what they said of me, because I would not sing Salue Regina, and Aue Maria, as they did: I told them, that they that prayed to so many, or sought helpe of any other, then of God the Father, or of Iesus Christ his onely sonne, goe a wrong way to worke, and robbed God of his honour, and brought their owne destructions.

All this was tolde the Friers, but I heard nothing of it in thre dayes after: and then at mee manner of idolatry: there ment. This Cite of Ve-many Islands about it, chosen that ever beareth the e into him, and craue some of the parrish, for I can not with the Duke of Venice, if liuer his supplication, it is that day, and then I will at I may. Furthermore, if nce of the Seignioye, and to him, perhaps not. Of the le Counsell of Venice, who ke, when they sit in Coun-ing the foure and twentieth of yed, and laye a Shippe down uld this day, and that day do me winde we sette saille, and on the sixteene day at night, me, because I was an Eng-re in the midst of the Sea, cruely it may well be, for your selues also, as I doe the sermon being done, I nd tolde the Friar himselfe, by christian opinions: so for when they sayd the pprocell ed God of his honour, and ning prayer, they sent the purser about with the image of our Ladie to carry one to kiss, and I peceiving it toene another way from him, and would not see it: yet at last he fetched his course about, so that he came to me, and offered it to me as he did to others, but I refused it: wh: vpon there was a great sicke the patron and all the friers were tolde of it, and every one said I was a Lutheran, and so called me: but two of the friers that were of greatest authoritie, seemed to beare me better good will then the rest, and travelled to the patron in my behalf, and made all well againe.

The second day of the we arrived in Cyprus, at a towne called Gyllagh: the people there be very rude, and like beasts, and no better, they eat their meat stryng vpon the ground, with the y-legs a cross like cattons, they brod for the most part be hard bones, but yet some of them haue layne mattraes to lie vpon.

Upon thursdai the right of August we came to Joppa in a small barke, which we hyed betwixt Gyllagh and Salina, and could not be suffered to come on land till noone the next day, and then we were permitted by the great Basba, who satte vpon the top of a hill to see vs sent away. Being come on land, we might not enter into any house for victualles, but were to content our selues with our owne provision, and that which we boight to carry with vs was taken from vs. I had a paire of stirrups, which I bought at Venice to serue me in my iourney, and trying to make them fit for me, when the Basba saw me vpon before the rest of the companie, he sent one to dismount me, and to strike me, whereupon I turned me to the Basba, and made a long legge, saying, Grand mercye Seignioye, and after a while we were hoisted vpon litle asses, and sent away, with about fiftie light hoymen to be our conduct through the wilderness, called Deserta scelix, who made vs good sport by the way with they pikes, gunnes, and sauchins,

That day, being St. Laurence day, we came to Rama, which is tenne Italian miles from Joppa, and there we stayed that night, and payed to the captaine of the castell, every man a chekin, which is seven shillings and two pence sterling. So then we had a new gard of souldiers, and left the other.

The house we lodged in at Rama, had a doore so low to enter into, that I was faine to creepe in, as it were vpon my knees, and within it are thre roomes to lodge travellers that come that way: there are no beds, except a man buy a mat, and lay it on the ground, that is all the provision, without shooles or benches to sit vpon. Our victualles were brought vs out of the towne, as hennes, eggs, bread, great store of fruite, as pomegranets, figges, grapes, ynges, and such like, and winke, we buye out of the well. The towne it selfe is so ruinated, that I take it rather to be a heape of bones then a towne.

Then the next morning we thought to haue gone away, but we could not be permitted that day, so we stayed thre till two of the clocke the next morning, and then with a fresh gard of souldiers we departed to ward Jerusalem. We had not ridden fixe English miles, but we were encountred with a great number of the Arabians, who stayed vs, and would not suffer vs to passe till they had somewhat, so it cost vs for all our gard about twentie shillings a man betwixt Joppa and Jerusalem. These Arabians troubled vs often times. Our Truchman that payed the money for vs was stricken to done, and his head broken because he would not giue them as much as they asked: and they that haue refused both him and vs, stood still, and durst doe nothing, which was to our cost.

Being come to the of Jerusalem, the maner is to kneele downe, and giue God thanks, that it hath pleased him to bring vs to that holy place where he himselfe had bene: and there we leaued our horses, and go on foot to the towne, and being come to the gates, there they tooke our names, and our fathers names, and so we were permitted to go to our lodgings.

The gouernour of the house met vs a mile out of the towne, and very curiously had vs all welcome, and brought vs to the monastrie. The gates of the citie are all couered with yron, the entrance into the house of the Christians, is a very low and narrow doore, hard of plated with yron, and then come we into a very darke entry: the place is a monastrie: there we lay, and dined of free cost, we fared reasonable well, the bread and wine was excellent good, the chambers cleane, and all the meat well serued in, with cleane linnen.

We lay at the monastrie two dayes, friday and saturday, and then we went to Bethlem with two of the of the friers of the house with vs: in the way thither we saw many monuments, as:
The mountaine where the Angell tooke by Abarucke by the haire, and brought him to Daniel in the Lions denne.

The fontaine of the prophet Jeremie.
The place where the wise men mette that went to Bethlem to worship Christ, where is a fountaine of stone.

teries in and salem.

Being come to Bethlem we saw the place where Christ was borne, which is not a chapel with two altars, whereupon they say masse: the place is built with gray marble, and hath bene beautifull, but now it is partly decayed.

Nere thereto is the sepulchre of the innocents slaine by Herod, the sepulchre of Paul, of Jerome, and of Eusebius.

Also a litle from this monasterie is a place vnder the ground, where the virgin Mary abode with Christ when Herod sought him, to destroy him.

We stayed at Bethlem that night, and the next day we went from thence to the mountaines of Judea, which are about eight miles from Jerusalem, where are the ruines of an olde monasterie. In the mid way from the monasterie to Jerusalem is the place where John Baptist was borne, being now an olde monasterie, and cattle kept in it. Also a mile from Jerusalem is a place called Inuentio sancte crucis, where the wood was found that made the crosse.

In the citie of Jerusalem we saw the hall where Pilate sat in iudgement when Christ was condemned, the staires whereof are at Rome, as they tolde vs. A litle from the one is the house where the virgyn Mary was borne.

There is also the piscina of silpooe, where the sicke folkes were healed, which is by the walles of Jerusalem, but the poole is now dry.

The mount of Caluaria is a great church, and within the dooze thereof, which is litle, and barred with yron, and fine great holes in it to looke in, like the holes of sauerne doozes in London, they be that are appointed to receive our money with a carpet vnder them vpon a banke of stone, and theye legs a crosse like carols: hauing paid our money, we are permitted to go into the church: right against the church doze is the graue where Christ was buried, with a great long stone of white marble ouer it, and railed about, the outside of the sepulchre is very foule, by means that euery man scraues his name and marke vpon it, and is ill kept.

Within the sepulchre is a partition, and in the further part thereof is a place like an altar, where they say masse, and at the dooze thereof is the waite whereupon the an gell sat when he said to Mary, He is risen, which stone was also rolled to the dooze of the sepulchre.

The altar stone within the sepulchre is of white marble, the place able to containe but foure persons, right ouer the sepulchre is a deuill or lanterne for light, and ouer that a great loue, such as we in England in ancient houses. There is also the chapell of the sepulchre, and in the mids thereof is a canopy as it were of a bed, with a great sort of Calbridge egges hanging at it, with tapers of like and lamps.

Behinde the sepulchre is a litle chapell for the Chaldeans and Syrians.

Vpon the right hand coming into the church is the tombe of Baldwine king of France, and of his sonne: and in the same place the tombe of Helchise dech.

There is a chapell also in the same church erected to S. Helen, through which we go by to the place where Christ was crucified: the staires are fiftie steps high, there are two altars in it: before the high altar is the place where the crosse stood, the hole whereof is trimmed about with siluer, and the depth of it is halfe a mans arme deepe: the rent also of the mountaine there to be seene, in the creuis whereof a man may put his arme.

Vpon the other side of the mount of Caluaria is the place where Abrahamsould haue sacrificed his sonne. Where also is a chapell, and the place paved with stones of diuers colours.

There is also the house of Amas the high priest, and the Olive tree whereunto Christ was borne when he was whipt. Also the house of Caiphas, and by it the prison where Christ was kept, which is but the roome of one man, and hath no light but the opening of the dooze.

Withouthe Jerusalem in the ballie of Iosaphat, is a church vnder the ground, like to the Synagogue in Pauls, where the sepulchre of the virgyn Mary is: the staires be very broad, and vpon the staires going downe are two sepulchres: vpon the left hand Ierh Iosaphat, and vpon the right hand Ierh Iosaphat and Anna, the father and mother of the virgyn Mary.

Going out of the valley of Iosaphat, we came to mount Oliuet, where Christ praied vnto his father before his death: and there is to be seene (as they tolde me) the water and bloud that fell from the eyes of Christ. A litle higher vpon the same mount is the place where the Apostles slept, and watched not. At the foot of the mount is the place where Christ was imprisoned.

Vpon the mountaine also is the place where Christ stood when he wept ouer Jerusalem, and where he ascended into heauen.

After hauing seene all these monuments, I with my company set from Jerusalem, the 20 day of August, and came againe to Ioppa the 22 of the same moneth, where we took shipping yesternight for Tripolis, & in 4. dayes we came to Specina the place where the ships lie that come for Tripolis.

That day as aforesaid, we came to Hisslagh, and there stayed eight dayes, and at last departed

Elizabeth by the grace of the most mighty God and onely creator of heauen and earth, of England, France, and Ireland Queene, the most inuincible and most mighty defender of the Christian faith against all kinde of idolatries of all that liue among the Christians and falsly profess the name of Christ, vnto the most Imperiall & most inuincible prince, Sultan Murad Chan, the most mightie ruler of the kingdome of Turkie, sole aboue all and most soueraigne Monarch of the East Empire, greeting.

Whereas at our request your Imperiall Maiestie in the yeere of our Saniou Iesus 1580, hath entered into a league of peace with vs, whereunto was vntied a most large & bountifull grant of certaine priuileges, by benefit whereof our subiects may with all security most safely and freely traueil by sea and land into all and singular parts of your Musulmanlike Empire, and in the same exercising the trade of merchandize may traffike, dwell, remaine, depart from thence, and returne thither at their pleasure, and in all places be mainteyned & defended from all damage of bodie and goods by such as are in authoritie vnder your Imperiall Maiestie: we thankfully & gratefully receiving the benefit of so great a priuilege, as much as in vs lieth do appoyne & confirme the same, promising in the word of a prince, that we will keepe the said league perfect and inuiolable, and will cause our subiects so to vse the grant of the priuileges giuen vnto them, as your Imperiall Maiestie shall neuer haue occasion to repent you of your most princely liberality. And because the force of this grant, in the iudgement of both our Maiesties, seemeth rather to consist in the vse thereof, then in the words, we thought good to send vnto your Imperiall Maiestie this our ambassadoe William Harchoyne, one of the esquires of our bodie, which both on our behalfe should yeeld thanks vnto your Maiestie, and also that we might vse his good in deuoy for the establishing of such order in our subiects trade of merchandize aswell in your Imperiall citie of Constantinople, as in other places of your Musulmanlike Empire, as according to þ præscript of the priuileges is granted by your princely Maiesties goodnesse, and shalbe for the benefit of both our subiects. For performance whereof, because he standeth in need of your Imperiall Maiesties authoritie, we earnestly beseech the same, that you would cause all those which be in authoritie vnder your highnesse, by all their best meanes to aide and assist this our ambassadoe in executing this your Imperiall Maiesties pleasure, for vnto him we haue committed this charge: wherein how honestly he will discharge his credit toward both our Maiesties, I no whit stand in doubt: to whom also our pleasure is, that all our subiects shalbe obedient, as far as the grant of your Imperiall Maiestie doth permit. Moreover, whereas the woorthy personage Mustafa your Imperiall Maiesties interpreter hath taken speciall paines for the procuring of this league betweene vs, we earnestly beseech you that for our sakes your Imperiall Maiestie would vouchsafe to aduance him vnto the degree of the Mustafaraks or thiefe pensioner. If in these and in all other honest causes our aforesaid agent and our subiects shall finde your Imperiall highnesse fauor, a noble traffike will flourish betweene these nations, and we (if by any way we may stand your state in stead) will alwayes most willingly be ready to requite this your Maiesties fauor and good will with all kinde of good offices. Almighty God the maker of the world, preserve and keepe your Imperiall Maiestie, &c.

Father Hugo of Loubeur, Archbald, by the grace of God, maister of the holy house, the hospitall of St. John at Ierusalem, and an humble keeper of the pooze of Iesus Christ, to all & every prince ecclesiasticall & secular, archbishops, bishops, Dukes, Marqueses, Barons, Captaines, Viceroys, Princes, Castellanes, Admirals, and whatsoeuer patrons of small boats, or other greater ships, and gouernors of cities, potentates and magistrates, and to other officers and persons whatsoeuer, of what dignitie, degree, state and condition soeuer they be, dwelling in all places and landes, greeting.

We make it knowne, and in the woꝝ of truth doe witness, that in the moneth of May last past, our gallies came on the voyage from Barbarie, where hauing commandement to succor a liele ship of the Christians which was diuen ouer into that part, being arrived vpon this island on the West part they found one English ship vnder the charge of the worshipfull John Keele, and David Fillie maister: & our men willing to know what ship it was, they seemed to put themselves in order for their defence, doubting that the said our gallies were of the enemies, and therefore one mariner reuolued contrary to the will of the worshipfull John Keele, and David Fillie maister, and had shot off a peece of artillerie against one of the said gallies, and because he would not strike amaine her saile, according to the will of the said worshipfull John Keele, and David Fillie maister, the said ship was brought backe againe vnto the present port of Malta, according to the order of the reuerend generall of the said gallies: and in being there, maister Inquisitor said it by authoritie of the holy office, and in that behalfe by the holinesse of our Lord pope Gregory the thirtie, in the end was licensed to depart on her voyage. They therefore the said worshipfull John Keele, and David Fillie, in the name and behalfe of the worshipfull maister Edward Osborne alderman, and Richard Sta- per, English merchants of the noble citie of London, haue humbly besought together with Thomas Wilkinson the purser, pilots, maister and mariners, that we would giue our letters patents, and safe conducts, that they might go and returne, when they shall see opportunitie, with their goods and merchandizes at their pleasure: whereupon the thing seeming vnto vs iust, and that it might be for the profit of our religion, and of these strangers, by the tenor of these presents we haue granted the same to them: yet, with the conditions hereunder written. viz.

That euery time the said merchants of the said ship, or with any other, shall not bring such merchandize as is forbidden, and that by sufficient prooff, and letters testimoniall it appeareth that they are free from the infections of the plague, they may victuall themselves with all necessarie victuals, and traffike with vs, and in this island and dominion, and afterward may depart, and follow their voyage whither they will into the Levant or els where, as all other vessels, and especially of France and other nations do, and sell and buy whatsoeuer merchandize they shall thinke good.

Item, that they may bring powder for cannon and harquebush, salpeter, cole of Petracolle, places of laccin, tinne, Steele, yron, common harties white, course canvas to make saile for the gallies, balles of yron for shot, fine millstones, trees and mats for gallies, litle and others, and in conclusion, hauing seene that they for the time of their abode heere, did behaue themselves like faithfull and catholike Christians, and that his holinesse hath allowed the safeconduct of the great Turke to them granted for feare of the Turkish armie, and other vessels of the enemy, submitting our selues to the pleasures of his holinesse, and especially because our people haue occasion to passe by diuers places so farre off, as England, Flanders, and all parts Westwards, and in other places, we haue vouchsafed to make these our letters patents, as to our faithfull trafficant, so as more surely, and without let they may go and returne when they shall thinke good, with the said ship or with others at their pleasure: we therefore pray all and euery of your subiects effectuously that by what part soeuer of your iurisdiction, vnto the which the said worshipfull John Keele, and David Fillie by name abovesaid, with the ship and mariners of the said principall place or other, shall haue accesse, saile, and passe, and come safely with libertie without any disturbance or other impediment, that you giue leave, and cause leave to be given that they may passe, stay and returne, and when they please, depart, in such sort, that for our loue and contentation the said worshipfull John Keele, with the ship and mariners haue no let, hinderance, or retention, also that you giue all helpe and fauor, a thing worthy of your iustice, and to vs most acceptable, to be recompensed with equall and greater iustice, when vpon occasion it shall be required.

A direction as well for the Captaine, and other my friends of the ship, as especially for William Cheefman Merchant, for the voyage to the Riuer of Plate.

AT your coming to the Isle of S. Sebastian, vpon the coast of Brasill, you shall according to your discretions, make sale of such commodities, as you may thinke will be there about well vended, and like wise to buy commodities without making longer stay there then your victuals bee providing, but rather to bespeake commodities against your returne from the riuer of Plate, especially of Amber, Sugar, Greene ginger, Cotton Wool, and some quantitie of the peppers of the countrey there. Also for Barats and Spunkies, and the beast called Serrabosa. Also you shall barrell vp of the beefe called Petune, two or thre barreles, and to lose no good oportunitie, to gather of the Indian figs, and the graines of them to preferue drie, in such quantitie as conveniently may be done: and touching the making of the traine, and preferring of the hides, I leaue it wholly to the order and the discretion of the chiefe of the company. Also that in any road where the ship shall ride vpon the coast of America, that trial be made with the bags, for the pearle Distors, and the same being taken, to be opened and searched for pearle in the presence of the Captaine, his lieutenant, the master, the pilot, and merchant, or three of them, whereof the Captaine or his lieutenant to be one, and to remaine in the custodie of the Captaine and merchant, vnder two lockes, either of them to haue a key to his owne locke, and that a true inuenteorie be deliuered also to the master and pilot of the sayd pearle or other iewels of price gotten in the sayd voyage, to the intent that no partie be defrauded of his due, and that no concealment bee made of any such thing vpon forfeiture, the partie to lose his share and dutie for the voyage that shal so conceal and not reueale it vnto the officers aboue named. Also to doe your best endeavour to try for the best Ore of gold, silver, or other rich metals whatsoeuer. Forget not also to bring the kernels & seeds of strange plants with you, the Palmico with his fruite inclosed in him, Serue God, keepe good watch, and stand alwayes vpon your gard.

Edward Cotton.

These things being thus ordered, and the ship of the burden of 260. tunnes, with 83. men of all sortes furnished, and fully appointed for the voyage, began to set saile from Hurst Castle vpon Friday the 20. of May, Anno 1583. and the 17. day of July ensuing, fell with the coast of Guinie, to take in fresh water, where, through meree villouce negligence, they perished vpon a sand, with the most part of the men in her, as appeareth by the confession of one that escaped, the substance and tenor whereof is this.

The confession of William Bends, Masters Mate in the Edward Cotton, the 21. of October, An. 1584.

HUe saith that the 17. day of July, Anno 1583, hauing some lacke of fresh water, they put roome vpon the coast of Guinie, where they were set vpon a sand about 8. leagues from the shore, and this Examinate with 29. more, got into the pinnelle, who arrived in an Island, being desolate of people, and fve miles in compasse, where they rested 18. dayes through force of weather, not hauing els to eate but grasse. The rest of the company, the ship being splitted in two, and in quarters, got them into one of the after quarters, and by the helpe of raftes came also a shore into another Island, nere to Rio grande, where they all died as he supposeth.

The other 30. in the pinnelle, at the end of 18. dayes, departed that Island, and came to Saint Domingo,

Right high and mightie king,
 I pray it please your highnesse to understand, that the most high and most mightie maiestie of the Grand Signor hath confirmed certaine articles of priviledges with the most excellent maiestie of our Queene of England, that her subiects may freely go and come, and traffique by sea and land in the dominions of his most mightie maiestie, as appeareth more at large by the said articles, wherof we have sent the copy unto you, John Tipton our Coimissarie, to shew the same unto your highnesse. Against the tenor of which articles, one of our ships which came from Petras which is in Morea, laden with currants and other merchandizes which were bought in those partes, was sunk by 2. gallees of your cite of Argier, and the greatest number of the men thereof were slaine and wounded in the sea, the restore being detained as slaves: An acte very contrary to the meaning of the foresaid articles and priviledges, which is the occasion that by their petyenes we beseech your highnesse very humbly, that since it hath pleased the most mightie maiestie of the Grand Signor to favour us with the said priviledges, it would please your highnesse in like maner to assist us in the same, granting us by your authoritie, your aide and favour, according as our hope is, that these poore men so detained in captivitie, as is aforesaid, may be set at libertie, and retorne into their countrey. And likewise that your highnesse would send to give order to the capitaines, masters and people of your gallees, that from henceforth they would suffer us to use our traffique with six shippes secretly into Turkie unto the dominions of the Grand Signor in peace and safetie, that they doe not withstand those our said priviledges, every one of our foresaid ships carrying with them a pallenore of his most high and most mightie maiestie to be knowne by. And for that your so singular favour and curtesie which in so doing we shall receive, we on our part wish all bounden dutie unto your highnesse, will seeke to honour you in that behalfe, according as the said master John Tipton (to whom we referre our selues touching all other circumstances) shall move at large enforce you your highnesse, whose most excellent person and estate, we pray and beseech admightie God to prosper and increase with all felicitie and honour. From the Cite of London the 20. of July, 1584.

At the service of your highnesse, for and in the name of the whole Company trading into Turkie, I Master of London, Edward Osborne.

Notes concerning the trade of Argier.

The money of Argier,

The money that is coined in Argier, is a piece of gold called Afiano, and Doublaes, and two Doublaes make an Afiano, but the Doubla is most used, for all things bee solde by Doublaes, which Doubla is fiftie of their Aspers there.

The Asper there is not so good by halfe and more, as that in Constantinople: for the Chekin of gold of the Turkes made at Constantinople, is at Argier woorth an hundred and fiftie Aspers, and at Constantinople it is but 66. Aspers.

The

The pistolet and roials of place are most currant there.
The said pistoles goeth for 150. Aspers there: and the piece of 4. roials goeth for 40. Aspers, but sometimes is sold for more, as men need them to carry by into Turkie.

Their Asianos and doublets are pieces of course gold, woorth here but 40. shillings the ounce, in the same is currant in no place of Turkie out of the kingdome of Argier, neither the Aspers, for that they be lesse then others be, for they come them in Argier.

The custome to the king is inward 10. per centum, to the Turke, to be paid of the commodities it selle, as it shall be rated. The custome.

There is another custome to the Elemine, of one & an halfe per centum, which is to the Justice of the Christians: the goods by this custome are rated as they are for the kings custome.

Having paid custome inwards, you pay none outwards for any commodity that you doe lade, more then a reward to the gate keepers.

The waight there is called a Cantare for fine wares, as mettals refined, and spices, &c. which is here 120. li. subtil. The waights.

Wetall not refined, as lead, iron, and such grosse wares are sold by a great Cantare, which is halfe as big againe: so it is 180. li. subtil of ours here.

The measure of coine is by a measure called a Curtia, which is about 4. bushels of our measure, and coine is plentifull there and good cheape, except when there happeneth a very dry yere. The measure.

The surest lodging for a Christian there, is in a Jewes house: for if he haue any hurt, the Jew and his goods shall make it good, so the Jew taketh great care of the Christian and his goods that lieth in his house, for feare of punishment. The surest lodging for a Christian.

An Englishman called Thomas Williams, which is M. John Tiptons man, lieth about trade of

Notes concerning the trade in Alexandria.

Alexandria in Egypt is a free port, and when a man commeth within the Castels, presently the Ermyne sends aboard to haue one come and speake with him, to know what goods are aboard: and then he will set guards aboard the shippe to see all the goods discharged. And then from the Ermine you goe to the * Bye, onely for that he will inquire newes of you, and so from thence to the Consuls house where you lie. The Clergians haue a Consul themselves, But all other nations goe to the French nations Consul, who will giue you a chamber for your selues apart, if you will so haue it.

This is another officer.

The custome inward of all commodities, are ten in the hundred, and the custome is paid in wares also that you buy for the same wares in barter you pay also ten in the hundred, at the labing of the wares. But if you sell for money, you pay no more custome but the ten aforesaid, and one and a halfe in the hundred, which is for the custome of the goods you lade for the said money, for more custome you pay not. But for all the money you bring thither, you pay nothing for the custome of the same.
And if you sell your wares for money, and with the same money buy wares, you pay but two in the hundred for the custome thereof. And if you steale any custome, if it bee taken, you pay double custome for that you steale.

Other small custome you pay besides,
which may be at two in the hundred: and for Consullage you pay thro
in the hundred

The waight of Alexandria is called Pois Forforeine, which is a kintal in that place, which ma-keth at Marceils 109. li. of Marceils waight, at 15. ounces the pound, which is 103. li. of 16. ounces to the li. There is another waight called Pois Gerrin, which is 150. li. of Marceils waight, by which are sold all things to eat: but spice is sold by the former waight.

From Alexandria to Cairo is three dayes journey, but you must take a Janissarie with you: and to goe up thither by water, it is 8. dayes journey. Roials of Spaine are currant money there, and are the best money you can carry. And 4. roials are woorth 13. Medins, and 2. Medins, are 3. Aspers.
Pistolets and crownes of France, and Dollers will goe, but of all Roials are best.

Cairo three dayes journey from Alexandria by land.

Rice is not permitted to goe out of the land, but is kept for a victuall. But with a present to the Bye and Ermine somewhat passeth.

All forces of spices be gathered after the bargain is made, and they be Moores which you deale withall, which be good people and not ill disposed. And after you be searched & haue leaue to passe, you must presently depart out of the port, and if you doe not, they will search you againe. And you must depart in the day, for in the night the castles will not suffer you to be part. The dutie to the Consul is 2. in the hundred, for his aide, and meate and drinke and all. And the port of Alexandria is good when one is within it with good anchors and cables, Saluer is better currant then gold in Alexandria, but both are good.

Commonly

Commonly the Caravans come thither in October from Mecca to Cairo, and from thence to Alexandria, where the merchants be that buy the spices, and there fore the spices are brought to Alexandria, where each Christian nation remaineth at the Consuls houses. Yet oftentimes the Christians go up to Cairo to buy drugs and other commodities there as they see cause. And the commodities there vendible, are all sortes of herbes, but the most part betwix, and of clothes all colours except mingled colours and blacks. Pepper is usually sold for 24. denars the quintal, Ginger for 14. denars. You must take caravans to make bags to put your commodity in from Alexandria, for there is none. There is also fine flaxe, and good sorte of Buffe hides.

The voiage made to Tripolis in Barbarie, in the yeere 1584. with a ship called the Iesus, wherein the adventures and distresses of some Englishmen are truly reported, and other necessarie circumstances obierued. Written by Thomas Sanders.

This voiage was set forth by the right worshipfull, Sir Edward Osborne knight, chiefe merchant of all the Turkish company, and one master Richard Stapers, the ship being of the burthen of one hundred tunne, called the Iesus, he was builded at Farmne a riuer by Portsmouth. The owners were master Thomas Thomson, Nicholas Carnabie, and John Gilman. The master (under God) was one Zacheus Helier of Black-wall, and his mate was one Richard Morris of that place: their Pilot was one Anthony Ierado a French man, of the poynture of Massilis: the purser was one William Thomson our owners forme: the merchants factors were Romane Sonnings, a Frenchman, and Richard Skegs seruant vnto the said master Stapers. The owners were bound vnto the merchants by charter partie therupon, in one thousand markes, that the said ship by Gods permission should goe for Tripolis in Barbarie, that is to say, first from Portesmouthe to Newhauen in Normandie, from thence to S. Lukar, otherwise called S. Lucas in Andeluzia, and from thence to Tripolie, which is in the East part of Africa, & so to returne vnto London. But here ought euery man to note and consider the workes of our God that (many times) what man doth determine, God doth disappoint. The said master hauing some occasion to go to Farmne, tooke with him the Pilot and the Purser, and returning againe by meanes of a peece of wind, the boate wherein they were, was drowned, the said master, the purser, and all the company: ouely the said Pilot by experience in swimming saued himselfe: these were the beginnings of our sorowes. After which the said masters mate would not proceed in that voiage, and the owner hearing of this misfortune, and the vnwillingnesse of the masters mate, did send downe one Richard Deimond, and shipped him for master, who did chuse for his mate one Andrew Dier, and so the said ship departed on her voiage accordingly: that is to say, about the 16. of October, in An. 1584. she made saile from Portesmouthe, and the 18. day then next following she arrived into Newhauen, where our said last master Deimond by a surfeit died. The factors then appointed the said Andrew Dier being then masters mate, to be their master for that voiage, who did chuse to be his mates, the two quarter masters of the same ship, to wit, Peter Austine, and Shillabey, and for purser was shipped one Richard Burges. Afterward about the 8. day of Nouember, we made saile forthward, and by force of weather we were driuen backe againe into Portesmouthe, where we refreshed our vituals and other necessaries, and then the wind came faire. About the 29. day then next following, we departed thence, and the first day of December by meanes of a contrary winde, we were driuen to Plimmouth. The 18. day then next following, we made forthward againe, and by force of weather we were driuen to Falmouth, where we remained vntill the first day of Ianuarie: at which time the wind coming faire, we departed thence, & about the 20. day of the said moneth we arrived safely at S. Lucas. And about the 9. day of March next following, we made saile from thence, and about the 18. day of the same moneth we came to Tripolis in Barbarie, where we were very well interained by the king of that country, and also of the commons. The commodities of that place are sweete oiles: the king there is a merchant, and the rather (willing to preferre himselfe before his commons) requested our said factors to traffique with him, and promised them that if they would take his oiles at his owne price, they should pay no manner of custome, and they tooke of him certaine tunnes of oile: and afterward perceiuing that they might haue farre better cheape notwithstanding the custome free, they desired the king to licence them to take the oiles at the pleasure of his commons, for that his price did exceed theirs: whereunto the king would not agree, but was rather contented to abate his price, insomuch that the factors bought all their oiles of the kings custome free, and so laded the same aboard.

the yeere 1584. with distresses of some Englishes observed. Written by Edward Osburne knight, master Richard Stapers, the the Iesus, she was builded at master Thomas Thomlon, (vnder God) was one Zane Richard Morris of that prouince of Masillis: the factories were Romane Son-Stapers. The owners were markes, that the sayd ship first from Portefmouth in the shaddes of Lucas in Andel-land, so to returne vnto London, so that (many times) what the occasion to go to Farme, rances of a perrie of wind, she did all the company: onely the beginnings of our voyage, and the owner hearing of this one one Richard Deimond, Dier, and so the said ship departed, in An. 1584. she made into Newhauen, where continued the said Andrew Dier, and so to be his Spares, the two and for purser was shipped vnder the saile forthward, and by the we refreshed our victuals, then next following, we departed vnto the maine, and by force of weather in Ianuarie: at which tyme the money was arrived safely at from thence, and about the we were very well intended, that place are sweete himself before his commons) if they would take his othes of him certaine runnes of the we notwithstanding the pleasure of his commons, free, but was rather content the kings custome free, and

In

In the meane time there came to that place one Miles Dickenon, in a shippe of Britlow, who together with our said Factory tooke a house to themselves there. Our Factory Romaine Sonnings desired to buy a commodity in the market, and wanting money, desired the said Miles Dickenon to lende him an hundred Chikinoes vntill hee came to his lodging, which hee did, and afterward the same Sonnings mette with Miles Dickenon in the streete, and deliuered him money bound up in a vnder: saying, master Dickenon here is the money that I borrowed of you, and so thanked him for the same: hee doubted nothing lesse then fallshood, which is seldom known among marchantes, and specially being together in one house, and is the more detestable betwene Christians, they being in Turkie among the heathen. The said Dickenon did not tell the money presently, vntill hee came to his lodging, and then finding nine Chikinoes lacking of his hundred, which was about threepounds, for that every Chikinoe is worth seuen shillings of English money, he came to the said Romaine Sonnings and deliuered him his handkerchiefe, and asked him howe many Chikinoes hee had deliuered him? Sonnings answered, an hundred: Dickenon said no: and so they protested and swore on both partes. But in the ende the said Romaine Sonnings did sweare deeply with detestable othes and curses, and prayed God that hee might bewe his workes on him, that other might take ensample thereby, and that hee might be hangd like a dogge, and neuer come into England againe, if hee did not deliuer vnto the said Dickenon an hundred Chikinoes. And here behold a notable example of all blasphemers, curses and sweares, how God rewarded him accordingly: for many times it cometh to passe, that God sheweth his miracles vpon such monstrous blasphemers, to the insample of others, as now hereafter you shall here what befell to this Romaine Sonnings.

There was a man in the said towne a pledge, whose name was Patrone Norado, who the yere before had done this Sonnings some pleasure there. The foresaide Patrone Norado was indebted vnto a Turke of that towne, in the summe of foure hundred and fiftie crownes, for certaine goods sent by him into Chyistendome in a shippe of his owne, and by his owne brother, and himselfe remained in Tripolis as pledge, vntill his saide brothers returne: and as the report went there, after his brothers arrival into Chyistendome, hee came among lewde companie, and lost his brothers saide shippe and goods at dice, and neuer returned vnto him againe.

The said Patrone Norado being boyde of all hope, and finding no waye opportunite, consulted with the said Sonnings for to swimme a sea boorde the Islands, and the shippe being then out of danger should take him in, (as after was confessed) and so to goe to Tallowne in the prouince of Masillis, with this Patrone Norado, and there to take in the rest of his lading.

The shippe being ready the first day of May, and hauing her sailes all aboarde, our sayde Factory did take their leaue of the King, who very courteously bidde them fare well, and when they came aboarde, they commanded the Master and the companie hastily to get out the shippe: the Master answered that it was impossible, for that the winde was contrary and overblowd. And he required vs vpon forfeiture of our handes, that wee should doe our inuouere to get her forth. Then went we to warpe out the shippe, and presently the king sent a boate aboarde of vs, with three men in her, commanding the said Sonnings to come a boate: at whose coming the king demaunded of him custome for the oyles: Sonnings answered him that his highness had promised to deliuer them custome free. But notwithstanding the king weighed not his saide promise, and as an infidel that hath not the feare of God before his eyes, nor regard of his worde, albeit hee was a King, hee caused the said Sonnings to pay the custome to the uttermost penny. And afterwarde willed him to make haste away, saying, that the Janizaries would haue the oyle alsoare againe.

These Janizaries are souldiers there vnder the great Turke, and their power is about the Kings. And so the saide Factory departed from the king, and came to the waterside, and called for a boate to come a boorde, and hee brought with him the foresaid Patrone Norado. The companie inquisitive to know what man that was, Sonnings answered, that he was his countreyman, a challenger: I pray God saide the companie, that wee come not into trouble by this man. Then said Sonnings angrily, what haue you to do with any matters of mine? if any thing chance otherwise then well, I must answer for all.

None the Turke vnto whom this Patrone Norado was indebted, maling him, (supposed him to bee aboarde of our shippe,) presently went vnto the King, and tolde him that hee thought that his pledge Patrone Norado was aboarde of the English shippe, whereupon the King presently sent a boate aboarde of vs, with three men in her, commanding the said Sonnings to come a boate, and not speaking any thing as touching the man, hee saide that hee would come presently in his owne boate, but as soone as they were gone, he willed vs to warpe forth the

Another ship of 25000 was sent to Tripolis.

A conspiracy planned by the French Factory, and being a Turke ship made of 4500 crownes.

The beginning of their troubles, and occasion of all their miserie.

Shippe,

Shippe, and said that he would see the knaves hanged before hee would goe a shoare. And when the king sawe that hee came not a shoare, but still continued warping a way the shippe, he straight commaunded the gunner of the bulwarke next unto vs, to shoote thre shottes without ball. Then we came all to the saide Sonnings, and asked of him what the matter was that we were shot at, he saide that it was the Janizaries who would haue the oyle a shoare againe, and willed vs to make haste away, and after that hee had discharged thre shottes without ball, hee commaunded all the gunners in the towne to doe their endeouore to sinke vs, but the Turkish gunners coulde not once strike vs, wherefore the king sent presently to the Banio; (this Banio is the prison wheremas all the captiues lay at night) and promised if that there were any that coulde either sinke vs, or els cause vs to come in againe, he should haue a hundred crownes and his libertie. With that came forth a Spaniard called Sebastian, which had bene an olde seruitour in Flanders, and hee said, that upon the performance of that promise, hee would undertake either to sinke vs, or to cause vs to come in againe, and thereto hee would gage his life, and at the first shotte hee split our ridders head in pices, and the second shotte hee strake vs vnder the water, and the thirde shotte hee shotte vs through our foremasse with a Coluring shotte, and thus hee hauing rent both our rudder and made, and shotte vs vnder water, we were enforced to goe in againe.

All Spanish captiues shot at vs, and made the ship to perise.

This Sebastian for all his diligence hereth, had neither his libertie, nor an hundred crownes, as promised by the saide king, but after his seruice done was committed againe to prison, whereby may appeare the regard that a Turke or infidel hath of his word, although he be able to performe it, yea more, though he be a king.

Then our marchants seeing no remedie, they together with five of our companie went a shoare, and then they ceased shooting, they shotte unto vs in the whole, nine and thirtie shottes, without the hurt of any man.

And when our marchants came a shoare, the king commaunded presently that they with the rest of our companie that were with them, should be chained foure and foure, to a hundred waight of yron, and when we came in with the ship, there came presently about an hundred Turkes aboute of vs, and they searched vs, and stripe our very clothes from our backs, and brake open our chests, and made spoyle of all that we had: and the Christian cauitiues likewise that came a boorde of vs, made spoyle of our goods, and bled vs as ill as the Turkes did. And our matters mate hauing a Geneva Bible in his hand, there came the kings chiefe gunner, and tooke it out from him, who hee tooke me of it; and I hauing the language, went presently to the kings treasurer, and tolde him of it, saying, that such it was the will of God that wee should fall into their handes, yet that they should graunt vs to vfe our consciences to our owne discretion, as they suffer the Spaniards and other nations to vfe theirs, and he graunted vs: then I tolde him that the master gunner had taken away a Bible from one of our men: the Treasurer went presently and commaunded him to deliuer by the Bible againe, which hee did: and within a litle after hee tooke it from the man againe, and I shewed the Treasurer of it, and presently hee commaunded him to deliuer it againe: saying, thou villaine, wilt thou turne to Christianitie againe? for hee was a Renegado, which before that first was a Christian, & afterwards becometh a Turke, and so hee deliuered me the Bible the second time. And then I hauing it in my hand, the gunner came to mee, and spake these wordes, saying, thou dogge, I wil haue the booke in despite of thee, and tooke it from me, sayinge, I thou tell the kings treasurer of it any more, by Spahomet I will be reuenged of thee. Forwithstanding I went the third time unto the kings Treasurer, and tolde him of it, and he came with me, saying thus unto the gunner: by the head of the great Turke, if thou take it from him againe, thou shalt haue an hundred battenadoes. And forthwith hee deliuered mee the booke, saying, hee had not the value of a pinne of the spoyle of the ship, which was the better for him, as hereafter you shall heare: for there was none, neither Christian nor Turke that tooke the value of a pennynge of our goods from vs, but perished both bodie and goods within seuenteen moneths following, as hereafter shall plainly appeare.

All that had share of the spoyle (shortly after) by Gods judgement died.

Then came the Guardian Basha which is the keeper of the kings captiues, to seech vs all a shoare, and then I remembering the miserable estate of poore distressed captiues, in the time of their bondage to those infidels, went to mee owne chest, and tooke out thereof a iarre of oyle, and filled a basket full of white Ruske to carrie a shoare with mee, but before I came to the Banio, the Turkish boyes had taken away almost all my bread, and the keeper saide, deliuer mee the iarre of oyle, and when thou comest to the Banio thou shalt haue it againe, but I neuer had it of him any more.

But when I came to the Banio, and saide our marchants and all the rest of our companie in chains, and we all ready to receive the same reward, what heart in the world is there to haue but to goe a shoare. And when a way the Shippe, he straight would have picke our side, hearing of seeing the lamentable greeting there was betwixt vs: all this happened the first of May, 1584.

And the second day of the same moneth, the king with all his counsell sat in judgement upon us. The first that were had sayd to be arraignes, were the Spaniards, and the English, and the king asked them whether they came not a shoare when he sent for them. And Romaine Sonnings an other, that though hee were king on shoare, and might be commannded there, so was he as concerning that that were vnder him: and therefore said, if any offence be, the fault is wholly in my selfe, and in no other. Then forth with the king gaue iudgement, that the said Romaine Sonnings should be hanged ouer the Royhead Bulwarke, from whence hee conveyed the sizenamed Patrone No-rado, and then hee called for our Spalier Andrew Dier, and wiled setme to goe to him, and so condemn ed him to be hanged ouer the walles of the Westward bulwarke.

Then fell one other Spaniard (named Richard Skege) vpon his knees before the king, and saide, I beseech your highnesse either to pardon our Spalier, or else suffer me to die for him, for hee is the cause of this cause. And then the people of that countrey, fauouring the said Richard Skege, besought the king to pardon them both. So then the king spake these wordes: Behold, for thy sake, I pardon the Spalier. Then presently the Turkes shouted, and cried, saying: A wop wop the Spalier from the presence of the king. And then hee came into the Banio whereas we were, and tolde vs what had happened, and wee all reioyced at the good happe of master Skege, that hee was saued, and our Spalier for his sake.

Our matters our topy was turned to double topy, for in the meane time the kings minde was altered: for that one of his counsell had aduised him, that vntill the Spalier died also, by the lawe they could not confiscate the Shippe nor goods, neither captiue any of the men: whereupon the king sent for our Spalier againe, and gaue him another iudgement after his pardon for one cause, which was that hee should bee hanged. Here all true Christians may see what trust a Christian man may put in an infidels promise, who being a King, pardoned a man wote, as you haue heard, and within an houre after hanged him for the same cause before a whole multitude: and also promised our Spalier their oyle custome free, and at their going away made them pay the vntill penie for the custome thereof.

And when that Romaine Sonnings saw no remedie but that hee should die, hee proceeded to turne Turke, hoping thereby to haue saued his life. Then saide the Turke, If thou wilt turne Turke, spake the wop that thereunto belong: and hee did so. Then saide the y into him, How thou shalt be in the faith of a Turke, and so hee did, as the Turkes reported that were at his execution. And the sizenamed Patrone Norado, whereas before hee had libertie and did nothing, hee then was condemned slau perpetual, excepte these were payntes made of the foresaid summe of money.

Then the king commannded all vs, who were in number five and thientie, of the which, two were hanged (as you haue heard) and one died the first day we came on shoare, by the visitation of Almighty God: and the other three and thientie hee condemned slaues perpetually vnto the great Turke, and the shippe and goods were confiscated to the use of the great Turke: and then wee all fell vnto our knees, giuing God thanks for this sorrowfull visitation, and giuing our felix wop to the Almighty power of God, vnto whome all secrets are knowne, that hee of his goodnes would vouchsafe to looke vpon vs.

Here may all true Christian hearts see the wonderfull workes of God shewed vpon such infidel blasphemers, wopemasters, and rannagate Christians, and so you shall reade in the ende of this booke of the like vpon the vnfaithfull king and all his children, and of as many asooke any portion of the said goods.

Our first to be we our miserabie bondage and slauerie, and vnto whole small pittance and allittance wee were tied, for every faw men had allowance but faw adpers of bread in a day, which is but two pence English: and our lodging was to lye on the bare booyes, with a very simple cope to cover vs, here were also forreably and most vnderly hamed, head and beard, and within three dayes after: I and five more of my fellows together, with foure foye Italians and Spaniards, were sent forth in a Galee to take a Greekeish Carmoel, which came into Arabia to steale Negroes, and went out of Tripolis vnto that place, which was two hundred and fourtie leagues off, but we were chained three and three to an oare, and wee were naked aboute the girde, and the Dorelwaime of the Galley walked about the middle, and his spade adoye the middle, and vnto them a bulls pisse vnto in their handes, and when they should choller cold, they would strike the Christians for no cause: And they allowed vs but halfe a pounde of bread a man in a day without any other kind of sustenance, wnter excepten. And when wee came to the place wher was the Greekeish Carmoel, the were not allowed any victualles, neither, beards, and of any other instrument about vs, nor at any other time in the night, upon paine of one hundred linadoes; we were then also cruellly manackled in such sort, that we could not put our handes the length of one foot a sunder the one from the other, and euery night they searched our chains three times, to see if they were slacke ruetted: After continued fight with the Carmos of the houles, and then weooke it, & lost but two of our men in that fight, but there were slain of the Greekes five, and 14. were cruellly hurt, and they that were sound, were presently made slaues, and chained to the oares; and within fifteene dayes after we returned againe into Tripolis; and then we were put to all manner of slaueerie. I was put to heve stones, and other to carrie stones, and some to draine the Cart with earth, and some to make meyer, and some to draine stones; (so at that time the Turkes builden a church) And thus we were put to all kinde of slaueerie that was to be done. And in the time of our being there, the Moores that are the husbandmen of the countrey, rebelled against the king, because he would haue constrained them to pay greater tribute then heretofore they had done, so that the souldiours of Tripolis marcht forth of the towne to haue opposed battell against the Moores for their rebellion, and the king sent with them foure pieces of ordinance, which were draynen by the captiues twentie miles into the countrey after them, and at the sight therof the Moores fled, and then the captiues returned backe againe. Then I and certaine Christians more, were sent twelue mile into the countrey with a Cart to lode timber, and we returned againe the same day.

The Turkes builden a church.

The Christians sent 3. times a weeke 30. miles to fetch wood.

Nowe the king had 18. captiues, which thre times a weeke went to fetch wood thirtie miles from the towne, and on a tyme he appointed me for one of the 18. and we departed at eight of the clocke in the night, and upon the way as we rode upon the camels, I demanded of one of our companie, who did direct vs the way: hee saide, that there was a Moore in our companie which was our guide, and I demanded of them how Tripolis and the wood bare one off the other, and he saide, East Northweest, and West Southweest. And at midnichte of neere thereabouts, as I was riding upon my camel, I fell asleepe, and the guide and all the rest rode away from me, not thinking but I had bene among them. When I awooke, and finding my selfe alone, darst not call my hallo, for feare least the wilde Moores should heare mee, because they holde this opinion, that in killing a Christians they doe God good seruice: and musing with my selfe what were best for me to doe, if I should goe forth, and the wilde Moores should happe to meete with mee, they would kill mee; and on the other side, if I should returne backe to Tripolis without any wood or companie, I should be most miserablie bled therefore: of two euils, rather I had to goe forth to the losing of my life, then to turne backe and trust to their mercie, fearing to bee used as before I had seene others: for vnderstanding by some of my companie before, how Tripolis and the said wood did lie one off another, by the North starre I went forth at aduenture, and as God would haue it, I came right to the place where they were, euen about an houre before day: there altogether we rested and gaue our camels prouender, and althoone as the day appeared, we rode all into the wood: and I seeing no wood there, but a sicke here and a sicke there, about the bignesse of a mans arme growing in the sand, it caused me to marueile how so many camels should be loden in that place. The wood was Tunsteepe, we needed no axe nor edge toole to cut it, but pluckt it by strength of hands rootes and all, which a man might easily do, and so gathered it together, a lode at one place and so at another, & laded our camels, & came home about tenen of the clocke that night following, because I fell lame and my camel was tired, I left my wood in the way.

Eightene captiues run away from Tripolis.

The indgement of God upon Malpemetra.

There was in Tripolis that time a Venetian, whose name was Benedetto Venetiano, and seuentene captiues more of his companie, which ranne away from Tripolis in a boate, and came in sight of an Island called Malta, which lieth fourtie leagues from Tripolis right North, and being within a mile of the shoare, & very faire weather, one of their companie saide, In dispetto de dio adesso venio a pilliar terra, which is as much to say: In the despite of God I shall no more fetch the shoare, and presently there arose a mightie storme, with thunder and raime, and the winde at North, their boate being very smal, so that they were forced to beare by rorance, & so sheare right afore the winde ouer against the coast of Barbaric from whence they came, and rowing vp and downe the coast, their victuals being spent, the 21. day after their departure they were enforced through the want of food to come ashore, thinking to haue stolne some sheepe: but the Moores of the countrey very craftily (perceiuing their intent) gathered together a threescore horsemen, and hid themselues behinde a sandie hill, and when the Christians were come all a shoare, and past by halfe a mile into the countrey, the Moores rode betwixt them and their boate, and some of them pursued the Christians, and they were all taken and brought to Tripolis, from whence they had before escaped: and presently the king commaunded that the foresaide Benedetto with one more of his companie should lose their eares, and the rest to be most cruellly beate, which was presently presently dour. This king had a soune which was a ruler in an Island called Gerbi, whereun to arrived an English ship called the Greene Dragon, of the which was master one M. Blonker, who hauing a very unhappie boy in that shippe, and vnderstanding that whosoener would turne Turke should be well entertained of the kings soune, this boy did runne a shoare, and voluntarily turne Turke. Shortly after the kings soune came to Tripolis to visit his father, and seeing our companie, he greatly fancied Richard Burges our purser, and James Smith: they were both young men, therefore he was very desirous to haue them to turne Turkes, but they would not yeeld to his desire, saying, we are your fathers slaues, and as slaues wee will serue him. Then his father the king sent for them, and asked them if they woulde turne Turke? and they saide: If it please your highnes, Christians we were bozne, and so we will remaine, & beseeched the king that they might not be enforced therunto. The king had there before in his house, a soune of a yeoman of our Queenes guard, whom the kings soune had enforced to turne Turke, his name was Iohn Nelson: him the king caused to be brought to these young men, and then said vnto them: I will not you be are this your countreyman companie, and be Turke as he is: and they said, that they would not yeeld therunto during life. But it fell out, that within a moneth after, the kings soune went home to Gerbi againe, being fixe score miles from Tripolis, and carried our two foresaid young men with him, which were Richard Burges, and James Smith: and after their departure from vs, they sent vs a letter, signifying that there was no violence shewed vnto them as yet, but within thre dayes after they were violently used, for that the kings soune demanded of them againe, if that they would turne Turke? then answered Richard Burges, a Christian I am, and so I will remaine.

Then the kings soune very angerly saide vnto him: by Mahomet thou shalt presently bee made Turke. Then called hee for his men, and commaunded them to make him Turke, and they did so, and circumcised him, and would haue had him speake the wordes that therunto belonged, but he answered them stoutly that he would not: and although they had put on him the habite of a Turke, yet said he, a Christian I was bozne, and so I will remaine, though you force mee to doe otherwise.

And then he called for the other, and commaunded him to be made Turke perforce also: but hee was very strong, for it was so much as eight of the kings somes men could doe to holde him, so in the ende they circumcised him, and made him Turke. Now to passe ouer a litle, and so to theue the matter of our deliuerance out of that miserable captiuitie.

In Spay aforesaid, shortly after our apprehension, I wrote a letter into Englande vnto my fa ther, dwelling in Eauisoke in Deuonshire, signifying vnto him the whole estate of our calamities: and I wrote also to Constantine to the English Embassadour, both which letters were faithfully deliuered. But when my father had receiued my letter, and vnderstood the true ty of our misday, and the occasion thereof, and what had happened to the offenders, he certified the right ho norable the earle of Bedford therof, who in short space acquainted her highnes with y<sup>e</sup> whole cause thereof, & her maiestie like a most mercifull princesse, renouing her subiects, presentlyooke order for our deliuerance. Therupon the right worshipful sir Edward Osborne knight, directed his let ters with all speede to the English Embassadour in Constantinople, to procure our deliuerie: and he obtained the great Turkes commission, and sent it forth with to Tripolis, by one master Ed ward Barton, together with a Justice of the great Turkes, and one souldiour, and another Turke, and a Greeke which was his interpreter, which could speake besides Greeke, Turkish, Italian, Spanish and English. And when they came to Tripolis, they were well interteined. And the first night they did lie in a captaines house in the townes all our companie that were in Tripolis, came that night for to to master Barton and the other commissioners to see them. Then master Barton said vnto vs, welcome my good countreyman, and louingly interteined vs, and at our de parture from him he gaue vs two shillings, and saide, serue God, for to morrowe I hope you shall be as free as euer you were. We all gaue him thanks and so departed.

The next day in the morning very early, the king hauing intelligence of their coming, sent hope to the keeper; that none of the Englishmen (meaning our companie) shoulde goe to work. Then hee sent for master Barton and the other commissioners, and demanded of the said master Barton his message: the Justice answered, that the great Turke his Soueraigne had sent them vnto him, signifying that hee was informed that a certaine English shippe called the Iesus, was by him the said king confiscated, about twelue moneths since, and nowe my saide Soueraigne hath here sent his especiall commission by vs vnto you, for the deliuerance of the said ship and goods, and also the free liberte & deliuerance of the Englishmen of the same shippe, whome you haue taken, and kept in captiuitie. And further the same Justice saide, I am author ized by my saide Soueraigne the great Turke to see it done: And therefore I commaunde you by vertue of this commission, presently to make restitution of the premises or the value thereof, and so did the Justices deliver unto the King the great Turkes commission to the effect aforesaid, which commission the King with all obedience received: and after the perusing of the same, hee for he which commanded all the English captiues to bee brought before him, and then willed the keeper to strike off all our yrons, which done, the King saide, You Englishmen, for that you haue offended the lawes of this place, by the same lawes therefore some of your companie were condemned to die as you knowe, and you to be perpetuall captiues during your liues: notwithstanding, seeing it hath pleased my soueraigne lorde the great Turke to pardon your saide offences, and to giue you your freedom and libertie, behold, here I make deliuey of you to this English Gentleman: so hee deliuered vs all that were there, being thirteene in number, to master Barton, who required also those two young men which the kings sonne had taken with him. Then the king answered that it was against their lawe to deliuer them, for that they were turned Turkes: and touching the ship and goods, the king saide, that he had solde her, but would make restitution of the value, and as much of the goods as came vnto his handes, and so the King arose and went to dinner, and commaunded a Jewe to goe with master Barton and the other commissioners, to shewe them their lodging, which was a house provided and appointed them by the saide king. And because I had the Italian and Spanish tongues, by which their most traffique in that countrey is, Master Barton made mee his Cater to buy his victuals for him and his companie, and deliuered mee money needefull for the same. Thus were we let at libertie the 28. day of April, 1585.

The plagues and punishments
that happened to the king and his people.

So we to returne to the kings plagues and punishments, which Almighty God at his will and pleasure sendeth vpon men in the sight of the worlde, and likewise of the plagues that befall his children and others aforesaid. First when we were made bondmen, being the second day of May 1584. the King had 300. captiues, and before the month was expired, there died of them of the plague 150. And whereas there were 26. men of our companie, of whome two were hanged, and one died the same day that we were made bondslaves, that present month there died 9. more of our companie of the plague, & other two were forced to turne Turkes as before is rehearsed: and on the 4. day of June next following, the king lost 150. camels, which were taken from him by the wild Moores: and on the 28. day of the said month of June, one Geoffrey Maltees, a renegado of Malta, ran away to his countrey, & stole a Bigandine which the king had builded for to take the Christians withal, & carried with him 12. Christians more which were the kings captiues. Afterward about the 10. day of July next following, the king rood forth vpon the greatest & fairest mare that might be seen, as white as any swan: he had not ridden 40. paces fro his house, but on a sudden the same mare fell downe vnder him stark dead, & I with 6. more were commaunded to burie her skinn, shoes and all, which we did. And about three monthes after our deliuerie, Master Barton, with all the residue of his companie, departed from Tripolie to Zante, in a vessel, called a Settea, of one Marcus Segoorus, who dwelt in Zante, and after our arrivall at Zante, we remained 15. daies there, aboard our vessel, before we could haue Platego (that is, leane to come a shoare) because the plague was in that place, from whence we came: and about three daies after, we came a shoare, thither came another Settea of Marfills bound for Constantinople. Then did

Two English men shipped to Constantinople with Barton.

The soldiers of Tripolie kill the king.

Master Barton, and his company, with two more of our company, shipped themselves as passengers in the same Settea, and went to Constantinople. But the other nine of vs that remained in Zante, about three monthes after, shipped ourselves in a shippe of the said Marcus Segoorus, which came to Zante, and was bound for England. In which three monthes, the soldiers of Tripolie killed the said king. And then the kings sonne, according to the custome there, went to Constantinople, to surrender vp all his fathers treasure, goods, captiues, and concubines, vnto the Great Turke, and tooke with him our said Purcell, Richard Burges, and James Smith, and also the other two Englishmen, which he the said kings sonne had intored to be corraue Turkes, as is aforesaid. And the y the said Englishmen, finding now some opportunity, concluded with the Christian captiues, which were going with them vnto Constantinople, being in number about one hundred and fiftie, to kill the kings sonne, and all the Turkes which were aboard of the Galley, and principally the said Englishmen commaued vnto the said Christian captiues, weapons for that purpose. And when they came into the maine sea, towards Constantinople (vpon the faithfull promise of the said Christian captiues) these four Englishmen leapt suddenly into the Crosia, that is, into the midst of the Galley, where the canon lieth, and with their swordes bygone, did fight against all the foresaid Turkes, and for want of helpe of the saide Christian captiues, who faulde by their promise, the said Master Blonkers boy was killed, and the saide James Smith, and our Purcell Richard Burges, and the other Englishman, were taken and bound into chaines, to be hanged at their arrivall in Constantinople: and as the Lopes will was, about two daies after, passing millis of the value thereof, and mission to the effect aforesaid, r the perulling of the same, her efore him, and then tolled the Englishmen, for that you did your company were condemn your lives: notwithstanding, edon your saide offences, and to p of you to this English Gen umber, to master Barton, who with him. Then the king were turned Turkes: and to u to make restitution of the King arose and went to dinner, commissioners, to the we then the saide king. And because that countrey is, after Bar anie, and deliuered mee money

 April, 1585.

Almighty God at his will and of the plagues that befall his n, being the second day of Sep tember, there died of them of the wolome two were hanged, and moneth there died 9. more of es as before is rehearsed: and they were taken from him by the sney Maltees, a rennegado of ing had builded for to take the ere the kings captiues. After upon the greatest & fairest mare s fro his house, but on a sudden were commanded to burie her our deliuerie, after Barton, ante, in a vessell, called a Ser passing passing through the gulfe of Venice, at an Island called Cephalonia, they met with 2. of Duke of Venice his Gallies, which tooke that Galley, and killed the kings sonne, and his mother, and all the Turkes that were there, in number, 150, and they saued the Christian captiues, and would haue killed the two Englishmen, because they were circumcised, and become Turkes, had not the other Christian captiues excused them, saying, that they were infourted to be Turkes, by the kings order: shewed the Venecians also, how they did enterprise at sea to fight against all the Turkes, and that their two fellowes were slaine in that fight. Then the Venecians saued them, and they, with all the residue of the said captiues, had their libertie, which were in number, 150. of these boats, and the said Gallie, and all the Turkes treasure, was confiscated to the vse of the State of Venice, and from thence our two Englishmen trauelled homeward by land, and in this meane time, wee had one more of our companie, which died in Zante, and after ward the other eight ship ped themselues at Zante, in a shippe of the saide Marcus Segoorus, which was bound for Eng land: and before we departed thence, there arriued the Assention, and the George Bonauenture of London, in Cephalonia, in a harbour there, called Arrogostoria, whose marchantes agreed with the marchants of our shippe, and so laded all the marchandise of our shippe into the said ship of London, who tooke vs eight also in as passengers, and so we came home, and within two mo neths after our arriual at London, our said Purser Richard Burges, and his fellow, came home also, for the which we are bound to praise Almighty God, during our liues, & as dutie bindeth vs, to pray for the preservation of our most gracious Queene, for the great care her Maestie had ouer vs, her poore subiects, in seeking and procuring of our deliuerance aforesaid: and also for her ho norable yuiue Council, and especially for the prosperitie and good estate of the house of the late deceased, the right honorable the Earle of Bedford, whose howe I must confess, most diligent at the suite of my father now departed, trauelled herein: for the which I rest continually bounden to his, whose soule I doubt not, but is a ready in the heauens in toy, with the Almighty: vnto which place he vouchsafe to bring vs all, that for our sames suffered most vile and shameful death vpon the Crosse, there to liue perpetually world without end, Amen.

Elizabeth by the grace of the most high God, and onely maker of heauen and earth, of England, France, and Ireland Queene, and of the Christian faith, against all the Idolaters and false professors of the name of Christ dwelling among the Christians, most inuincible and puissant defender: to the most valiant and inuincible Prince, Sultan Murad Can, the most mightie Ruler of the kingdome of Musulman, and of the East Empire the onely and highest Monarch above all, health, and many happie and fortunate peeres, with great aboundance of the best things.

Most noble and puissant Emperour, about two peeres now passed, we wrote vnto your Imperiall Maiestie, that our welbeloued seruant, William Harebrowne, a man of great reputation and honour, might be receaued vnder your high authoritie, for our Ambassadour in Constantinople, and other places, vnder the obedience of your Empire of Musulman: And also that the Englishmen, being our subiects, might exercise entrecoure and marchandize in all those Provinces, no lesse freely then the French, Polonians, Venetians, Germanes, and other your confederates, which traueil through diuerse of the East parts: endeavouring that by mutuall traffike, the East may be opened and knit to the West.

Which priuiledges, when as your most puissant Maiestie, by your letters and vnder your dispensation most liberally and fauourably granted to our subiects of England, we could no lesse doe, but in that respect giue you as great thankes, as our heart could conceaue, trusting that it wol come to passe, that this order of traffike, so well obtained, will bring with it selfe most great profits and commodities to both sides, as well to the parties subiect to your Empire, as to the Provinces of our kingdome. Which thing that it may be done in plaine and effectuall manner, when as some of our subiects of late at Tripolis in Barbarie, and at Argier, were by the inhabitants of those places (being perhaps ignorant of your pleasure) euill increased and grieuouly vexed, we doe friendly and lovingly desire your Imperiall Maiestie, that you will vnderstand their causes by our Ambassadour, and afterward giue commaundement to the Lieutenants and Presidents of those provinces, that our people may henceforth freely, without any violence, or iniurie, traueil, and doe their busines in those places.

And we againe with all endeavour, shall studie to performe all those things, which we shall in any wise vnderstand to be acceptable to your Imperiall Maiestie, which God, the onely maker of the world, most best and most great, long keepe in health, and flourishing. Given in our pallace at London, the first day of the moneth of September, in the peere of Iesus Christ our sauour, 1584, and of our raigne, the 26.

Wour Beglerbege of Argier. We certifie thee, by this our commandement, that the right honorable, William Harebrowne, Ambassadour to the Queenes Maiestie of England, hath signified vnto vs, that the shippes of that Countrey, in their coming, and returning to and from our Empire, one the one parts of the seas haue the Spaniards, Florentines, Sicilians, and Portese, on the other part our Countreys, commited to your charge, which aboue sayd Christians, will not quietly suffer their egresse and regress into, and out of our dominions, but doe take, and make the men captiues, and forsee the shippes, and goods, as the last peere the Malceses did one, which they tooke at Gerbi, and to that ende, doe continually lie in waite for them, to their destruction, whereupon they are constrained to stand to their defense; at any indignities as they might meete with them: wherefore considering by this meane they must stand vpon their guard, when they shall see any galley a farre off, whereof yf meeting with any of your galleies, and not knowing them, in their defense they doe shoote at them, and yet after, when they do certainly knowpe them, doe not shoote any more, but requisite to passe peaceably on their voyage, which you woulde denie, saying, the peace is broken; for that you haue shoote at vs, and so doe make priue of them, contrary to our priuiledges, and agaynst reason for the preventing

The Turkes letter to the King of Tripolis in Barbarie, commanding the restitution of an English shippe, called the Iesus, with the men, and goods, sent from Constantinople, by Mahomet Beg, a Iustice of the Great Turkes, and an English Gentleman, called Master Edward Barton. Anno 1584.

Honorable and worthy Passa Romadan Beglerbeg, most wise and prudent Iudge of the West Tripolis, we with the ende of all thy enterprises happie, and prosp erous. By these our Highnes letters, we certifie thee, that the right Honorable, William Harebrowne, Amballadour in our most famous porch, for the most excellent Queenes Maestie of England, in person, and by letters hath certified our Highnes, that a certaine shippe, with all her furniture, and artilerie, worth two thousand duckets, arriuing in the port of Tripolis, and discharged of her la ding, and marchandize, paid our custome according to order, and againe the marchants laden their shippe with oile, which by constraint they were bound to buy of you, and hauing answered in like manner the custome for the same, determined to depart: a Frenchman assidant to the Spar chant, unknown to the Englishmen, caried away with him another Frenchman, indebted to a certaine spoore in foure hundred duckets, and by force cauled the Englishmen, and shippe to de part: who neither suspecting fraude, nor deceite, hoisted sailes. In the meane time, this man, whose debet the Frenchman had stolen away, went to the Passa with the supplication, by whose meanes, and force of the Castle, the Englishmen were constrained to returne into the port, where the Frenchman, author of the null, with the Master of the shippe an Englishman, innocent of the crime, were hangen, and fixe and thwentie Englishmen cast into prison, of whom through famine, shark, and stroke of the prison, eleven died, and the rest like to die. Further, it was signified to our Maestie also, that the marchandize and other goods, with the shippe, were worth 7600. duckets: which things if they be so, this is our commandement, which was granted and giuen by our Ma estie, that the English shippe, and all the marchandize, and whatsoever els taken away, be wholly restored, and that the Englishmen be let goe free, and suffered to returne into their Countrey.
Wherefore when this our commandement shall come vnto thee, we straightly commaund, that the fore said busines be diligently looked vnto, and discharged. And if it be so, that a Frenchman, and an Englishman hath done this craft, and wickednes vnknotwen to the Englishmen, and as au thor of the wickednes is punished, and that the Englishmen committed nothing against the peace and league, or their articles: also if they paid custome according to order, it is against law, custome of Countrey, and their priuiledge, to hinder or hurt them. Neither is it meete, their shippe, mar chandize, and all their goods taken, should be withholden. Wee will therefore, that the English shippe, marchandize, and all other their goods, without exception, be restored to the Englishmen: also that the men be let goe free, and if they will, let none hinder them, to returne peaceably into their Countrey: doe not commit, that they another time complaine of this matter, and to the business is dispatched, certifie vs at our most famous porch. Dated in the Citie of Constantino ple, in the 22. yeere of Mahomet, and in the ende of the moneth of October, and the yeere of Je sus, 1584.

Right honorable Lord, hath bene signified unto us by diverse letters, what hath fallen out concerning a certaine shippe of ours, called the Ictus, into which for the helpe of Richard Skeggs, one of our marchants in the same navy deceased, there was admitted a certaine French man, called Romano Sonings, which for his ill behaviour, according to his velleitie, seeking to carry away with him another Frenchman, which was indebted to certaine of your people, without paying his credits, was hanged by sentence of iustice, together with Andrew Dier, the Master of the said ship, who simply and without fraude, giving credite to the said Frenchman, without any knowledge of his euill fact, did not returne when he was commanded, by your honorable Lordshippe. The death of the said Ictus Frenchman, was approue as a thing well done, but contrariwise, whereas your Lordshippe hath confiscated, the said shippe, with the goods therein, and hath made slaues of the Barriners, as a thing altogether contrarie to the priuiledges of the Grand Signior, granted foure yeeres since, and confirmed by us on the behalfe

Which if you performe not, we protest by these our letters against you, that you are the cause of all the inconueniences which may ensue vpon this occasion, as the author thereof, contrary to the holy league sworn by both our Princes, as by the pmiileidges, which this our seruant will shewe you, may appear: For the seeing of which league performed, wee remaine here as a Ligier in this Stately Court. And by this meanes you shal answer in another world, vnto God alone, and in this world vnto the Grand Signior, for this hainous tume committed by you against so many poore soules, which by this your crueltie are in part dead, and in part detained by you in most miserable captiuitie. Contrary wise, if it shall please you to auoid this mischiefe, and to remaine in the fauour of Almighty God, and of our Princes, you shal friendly fulfill this our iust demand (as it behoueth you to shew your selfe a prudent Gouvernour, and faithfull seruant vnto your Lord,) & the same may turne to your great honour, and profit, by the trade of marchandize, which our men in time to come, may vse in that gouernment of yours: which generally, as well those poore men, as all others, which you shal meete at the sea, ought to be according to the commandement of the Grand Signior, friendly entertained and receiued of your honorable Lordshippe, and we will not faile in the duties of a speciall friend, whensoever you shall haue occasion to vse vs, as we desire. Almighty God grant vnto your Lordshippe, (in the fulfilling of this our iust request, wherby we may be deliuered from further trouble in this matter, and your selfe from further displeasure) all true felicitie, and increase of honour. Ambassadors allowances.

The ambassadour of the Emperour is allowed one thousand Aspers the day, The ambassadour of the French king heretofore enioied the like: but of late yeeres by means of displeasure conceiued by Mahumet then Viceroy, it was reduced to sixe crownes the day, besides the poyson of his Equier of stable.

The ambassadour of Poland, and for the state of Venice are not Lodgers as these two abouesaid. The said Polack is allowed twelue French crownes the day, vuring his abode, which may be for a moneth. Very seldome doe the state of Venice send any ambassadour otherwile, then enioyed of veyent necessitie: but in stead thereof keepe there their Agent, president ouer their merchants, of the termed a Baille, who hath none allowance of the Grand Signior, although his pay & state is in manner as magnificall as y other abovesaid ambassadoys. The Spanish ambassadour was equall with others in familiarities: but for so much as he would not according to custome follow the list of other ambassadoys in making present to the Grand Signior, he had none allowance. His abode there was 3 yeeres, at the end wherof hauing concluded a truce for 6 yeeres, taking place from his first coming in Nouember last past, 158. he was neuer admitted to y presence of the Grand signior.

A letter written from the Queenes maiestie, to Yeladin el Kubar king of Cambaia, by Iohn Newberie. In February. An. 1583.

ELizabeth by the grace of God, &c. To the most inuincible, and most mightie prince, Ioyd Yeladin el Kubar king of Cambaya. Inuincible Emperour, &c. The great affection which our subiects haue, to visit the most distant places of the world, not without good will and intention to introduce the trade of merchandize of all nations whatsoeuer they can, by which means the mutuall and friendly traffique of merchandize on both sides may come, is the cause that the bearer of this letter Iohn Newberie, toinly with those that bee in his company, with a courteous and honest boldnes, doe repaire to the borders and countries of your Empire, we doubt not but that your imperiall maiestie through your roiall grace, will fauourably and friendly accept him. And that you would doe it the rather for our sake, to make vs greatly beholding to your maiestie. We should moze earnestly, & with moze words require it if we did thinke it needfull. But by the singular report that is of your imperiall maiesties humanitie in these veyent most partes of the world, we are greatly eased of that burden, and therefore we vse the sweeter & lesse hopes: onely we request that because they are our subiects, they may be honestly intreated and rewarded. And that in respect of the hard iourney which they haue undertaken to places so far distant, it would please your maiestie with some libertie and securitie of voyage to gratifie it, with such priuiledges as to you shall seeme good: which certesse if your imperiall maiestie shall to our subiects at our requests performe, we, according to our roiall honour will recompence the same with as many benefites as we can. And herewith we bid your Imperiall maiestie to farewell.

A letter written by her maiestie to the king of China, in Febr. 1583.

ELizabeth by the grace of God Queene of England. Most Inueriall and inuincible prince, our honest subiect Iohn Newberie the bringer herof, who with our fauor hath taken in hand the voyage which now he pursueth to the partes & countries of your empire, not trusting vpon any other ground then vpon the fauor of your imperiall clemencie and humanitie, is moued to undertake a thing of so much difficultie, being perswaded that he hauing entered into so many perils, your maiestie will not dislike the same, especially if it may appeare that it be not damageable vnto your roiall maiestie, & that to your people it will bring some profit: of both which things he not doubting, with moze willing mind hath prepared himselfe for his destined voyage vnto vs wel liked of. For by this means we perceiue, that y profit which by y mutual trade on both sides, all the princes our neighbors in the West do rectiue, your imperiall maiestie and those that be subiect vnder your dominion, to their great loy & benefit shal haue the same, which consisteth in the transporting outward of such things wherof we haue plenty, and in bringing in such things as we stand in need of. It cannot otherwile be, but that seeing we are borne and made to haue neede one of another, & that we are bound to aide one another, but that your imperiall maiestie will wel like of it, & by your subiects with like induer will be accepted. For the increase wherof, if your imperiall maiestie shall adde the securitie of passage, with other priuiledges most necessary to vse the trade with your men, your maiestie shal do that which belongeth to a most honorable & liberall prince, and desire so much of vs, as by no continuance of length of time shall be forgotten. Which request of ours, we do most instantly desire to be taken in good part of your maiestie, and so great a benefit towards vs and our men, we shall endeour by diligence to requite when time shall serue thereunto. The God almightie long preserve your imperiall maiestie.

A Letter of M. John Newberie, written from Aleppo, to M.
Richard Hakluyt of Oxford, the 28. of May, An. 1583.

RIght welbeloued, and my assured good friend, I heartily commend me vnto you, hoping of your good health, &c. After we set sail from Grauesende, which was the 13. day of February last, we remained vpon our coast vntill the 11. day of March, and that day we set sail from Falmouth, and neuer anchored till we arriued in the road of Tripolis in Syria, which was the last day of Apriill last past, where we stayed 14. dayes: and the 20. of this present we came hither to Aleppo, and with Gods helpe, within five or sixe dayes goe from hence towards the Indies. Since my comming to Tripolis I haue made very earnest inquirie both there and here, for the booke of Cosmographie of Abilsada Ismael, but by no means can heare of it. Some say that possibly it may be had in Persia, but not withstanding I will not faile to make inquirie for it, both in Babylon, and in Balsara, and if I can finde it in any of these places, I will send it you from thence. The letter which you deliuered me for to copy out, that came from master Thomas Steuens in Goa, as also the note you gaue me of Francis Fernandes the Portugall, I brought thence with me among other writings vnto waies, the which I haue sent you here inclosed. There is great preparation for the warres in Persia, and from hence is gone the Bassha of a towne called Rahemer, and shortly after goeth the Bassha of Tripolis, and the Bassha of Damasco, but they haue not all with them about 6000. men from hence, and they goe to a towne called Asmerome, which is three dayes iourney from Trapezunde, where they shall meete with diuers Capitains and souldiours that come from Constantinople and other places thereof, which goe altogether into Persia. This yeere many men goe into the warres, and so hath there euer yeere since the beginning thereof, which is eight yeeres or thereabouts, but very few of them returne againe. Notwithstanding, they get of the Persians, and make castles and holds in their countrey. I pray you make my hearty commendations to M. Peter Guillame, and M. Phillip Iones, and to M. Walker Warner, and to all the rest of our friends, M. Peter Fitch hath him heartily commended vnto you: and so I commit you to the tuition of the almighty, who blesse and keepe you, and send vs a joyfull meeting. From Aleppo, the 28. of May, 1583.

Leonard Poore of London, from Aleppo,

RIght welbeloued, my very hearty commendations vnto you, and the rest of my friends remembered. My last I sent you was of the 25. of February last, from Deele out of the Downes, after which time with contrary winde me remained vpon our owne coast, vntill the 11. day of March, and then wee set sail from Falmouth, and the 13. day the winde came contrary with a very great storme, which continued 8. dayes, and in this great storme we had some of our goods wet, but God be thanked no great hurt done. After which time we sailed with a faire wind within the Straights, and so remained at sea, and anchored at no place vntill our comming into the road of Tripolis in Syria, which was the last day of Apriill. This was a very good passage, God make vs thankfull for it. The 14. day of this present we came from Tripolis, and the 20. day arriued here in Aleppo, and with the helpe of God to morrow or next day, we begin our voyage towards Babylon and Balsara, and so into India. Our good friend master Barret hath him commended to you, who hath sent you in the Emanuell a ball of nutmegs for the small cristles you sent him, which I hope long since you haue receiued. Also he hath by his letter certified you in what order hee sold those things, whereof I can say nothing, because I haue not seene the accompt thereof, neither haue demanded it: for euer since our comming hither he hath bene still busie about the dispatch of the ship, and our voyage, and I likewise in buying of things here to carie to Balsara, and the Indies. We haue bought in currall for 1200. and odde ducats, and amber for 400. ducats, and some soper and broken glasse, with all other small cristles, all which things I hope will serue very well in those places that we shall goe vnto. All the rest of the account of the Barke Reynolds, was sent home in the Emanuell, which was 3600. ducats, which is 200. pound more then it was rated. For master Stapers rated it but at 1100. li. and it is 1300. pound, so that our part is 200. pound.

Belides such profit as it shall please God to send thereof: wherefore you shall doe very well to fixe ake to master Seapers for the account. And if you would couernt your selfe to trauell for thre or foure yeres, I would wish you to come hither or go to Cair, if any go thither. For we doubt not if you had remained there but thre or foure moneths, you would like so well of the place, that I thinke you would not desire to returne againe in 3. or 4. yeres. And if it should be my chance to remaine in any place out of England, I would choose this before all other that I know. My reason is, the place is healthfull and pleasant, and the gaines very good, and no doubt the profit will be hereafter better, things being used in good order: for there should come in euery ship the fourth part of her Carga- son in money, which would helpe to put away our commodities at a very good price. Also to haue the very good ships to come to gether, would doe very well: for in so doing, the danger of the voy- age might be accounted as little as from London to Antwerpe. Master Giles Porter and master Edmond Porter, went from Tripolis in a small berke to Iaffa, the same day that we came from thence, which was the 14. day of this present, so that no doubt but long since they are in Ierusa- lem: God send them and vs safe returne. At this instant I haue receiued the account of Mr. Bar- ree, and the rest of the rings, with two & twentie ducats, two medins in ready monie, & so there is nothing remaining in his hands but a few bookes, and with Thomas Bostocke I left certaine small trifles, which I pray you demaund. And so once againe with my heartie commendations I commit you to the cution of the almighty, who alwayes preserue vs. From Aleppo the 29. of May, 1583.

Yours assured. John Newbery.

Another letter of M. Newberie to the aforesayd

M. Poore, written from Babylon.

Whilst I sent you, was the 29. of May last past from Aleppo, by George Gill the purser of the Tiger, which the last day of the same month came from thence, and arriued at Feluge the 19. day of June, which Feluge is one dayes journey from hence, notwithstanding some of our company came woe hither till the last day of the last month, which was for want of Camels to carry our goods: for at this time of the yeere, by reason of the great heate that is here, Camels are very hard to be gotten. And since our comming hither wee haue found very small sales, but diuers say that in the winter our commodities will be very well sold, I pray God their words may prooue true. I thinke cloch, hersele and time, haue neuer bene here at so lowe prices as they are now. Notwithstanding, if I had here so much ready money as the commodities are woorth, I would not doubt to make a very good profit of this voyage hither, and to Balsara, and so by Gods helpe there will be reasonable profit made of the voyage. But with halfe money and halfe commodity, may be bought here the best sort of spices, and other commodities that are brought from the Indies, & with our money there is here at this instant small good to be done. With Gods helpe two daies hence, I mind to go from hence to Balsara, & from thence of force I must goe to Ormuz for want of a man that speaketh the Indian tongue. At my being in Aleppo I hired two Nataranics, and one of them hath bene twice in the Indies, and hath the language very well, but he is a very slow seldo, and therefore I will not take him with me.

The best sort of spices at Babylon, Balsara, Ormuz.

Here follow the prices of Wares as they are woorth here at this instant.

- Cloues and Spices, the bateman, 5. ducats.
- Cynamom 6. ducats, and few to be gotten.
- Summege, the bateman, 45. medins, and 40. medins maketh a ducat.
- Ginger, 40. medins.
- Pepper, 75. medins.
- Carderra, the bateman, 50. medins.
- Steel the churle, 70. ducats, and a churle is 27. rottils and a halfe of Aleppo.
- Shille, much better then that which commeth from Persia, 11. ducats and a halfe the bateman, and euery bateman here maketh 7. pound and 5. ounces English weight. From Babylon the 20. day of July, 1583.

Master Newberie his letter from Ormuz, to Iohn Eldred and William Shals at Balsara.

Right welbelouen and my assured good friends, I hartely commend me unto you, hoping of your good healths, &c. To certifie you of my boiage, after I departed fro you, time will not permit but the 4. of this present we arrived here, and the tenth day I with the rest were committed to prison, and about the middle of the next moneth the Capitaine will send vs all in his ship for Goa. The cause why we are taken, as they say, is, for that I brought letters from Don Anthonio. But the truth is, Michael Stropene was the only cause, vpon letters that his brother wrote him from Aleppo. God knoweth how we shall be delt withall in Goa, and therefore if you can procure our matters to send the king of Spaine his letters for our releasement, you should doe vs great good: for they cannot with iustice put vs to death. It may be that they will cut our throates, or keepe vs long in prison: Gods will be done. All those commodities that I brought hither, had bene very well sold, if this trouble had not chanced. You shall doe well to send with all speed a messenger by land from Balsara to Aleppo, for to certifie of this mischance, although it cost 30. or 40. crownes, for that we may be the sooner released, and I shall be the better able to profite this againe which is now like to be lost: I pray you make my heartie commendations, &c. From out of the prison in Ormuz, this 21. of September, 1583.

His second Letter to the foresaid Iohn Eldred, and William Shals.

The barke of the Jewes is arrived here two dayes past, by whom I knowe you did write, but your letters are not like to come to my handes. This bringer hath shewed me here very great curtesie, wherefoze I pray you shew him what fauour you may. About the middle of the next moneth I thinke we shall depart from hence, God be our guide. I thinke Andrew will goe by land to Aleppo, wherein I pray you touch him what you may: but if he should not goe, then I pray you dispatch away a messenger with as much speed as possibly you may. I can say no more, but doe for me as you would I should doe for you in the like cause, and so wish my very heartie commendations, &c. From out of the prison in Ormuz, this 24. day of September, 1583.

Yours, Iohn Newberie.

His third letter to Master Leonard Poore, written from Goa.

Michael Stropene an Italian accused our men to be spies.

Last I sent you was from Ormuz, whereby I certified you what had happened there vnto me, and the rest of my company, which was, that foure dayes after our arrivall there, wee were all committed to prison, except one Italian which came with me from Aleppo, whom the Capitaine neuer examined, onely demanded what countreyman he was, but I make account Michael Stropene, who accused vs, had informed the Capitaine of him. The first day we arrived there, this Stropene accused vs that we were spies sent from Don Antonio, besides diuers other lies: notwithstanding if we had bene of any other countrey then of England, we might freely have traded with them. And although we be Englishmen, I know no reason to the contrary, but that we may trade hither and thither as well as other nations, for all nations doe, and may come freely to Ormuz, as Frenchmen, Flemmings, Almaines, Hungarians, Italians, Greekes, Armenians, Mastarines, Turkes and Hooyes, Jewes and Gentiles, Persians, Moscovites, and there is no nation that they seeke for to trouble, except ours: wherefoze it were contrary to all iustice and reason that they should suffer all nations to trade with them, and to forbid vs. But now I haue as great libertie as any other nation, except it be to goe out of the countrey, which thing as yet I desire not. But I thinke hereafter, and before it be long, if I shall be desirous to goe from hence, that they will not denie me licence. Before we might be suffered to come out of prison, I was forced to put in sureties for 2000. pardoas, not to depart from hence without licence of the Viceroy: otherwile except this, we haue as much libertie as any other nation, for I haue our goods again, and haue taken an house in the chiefest streete in the towne, called the Rue drete, where we sell our goods.

There

There were two causes which moued the captaine of Ormuz to imprison vs, & afterwards to send vs hither. The first was, because Michael Stropens had accused vs of many matters, which were most false. And the second was for that M. Drake at his being at Maluco, caused two pieces of his ordinance to be shot at a gallion of the kinges of Portugal, as they say. But of these things I did not know at Ormuz: and in the shippe that we were sent in came the chiefeest iustice of Ormuz, who was called Queado; generall of that place, he had bene there three yeeres, so that now his time was expired: which Queado is a great friend to the captaine in Ormuz, who certeyne dayes after our comming from thence, sent for me into his chamber; and there began to demand of me many things, to the which I answered: and amongst the rest, he said, that M. Drake was sent out of England with many shippes, and came to Maluco, and there laded cloues, and finding a gallion there of the kinges of Portugal, he caused two pieces of his greatest ordinance to be shot at the same: and so perceiving that this did greatly grieue them, I asked, if they would be reuenged of me for that which M. Drake had done: to the which he answered, No: although his meaning was to the contrary.

He said moreover, that the cause why the captaine of Ormuz did send me for Goa, was, for that the Uiceroy would understand of me, what newes there was of Don Antonio, and whether he were in England, yea or no, and that it might be all for the best that I was sent hither, the which I trust in God will so fall out, although contrary to his expectation: for had it not pleased God to put into the mindes of the archbishop and other two Iudges or Iesuits of S. Pauls college to stand our friends, we might have rotted in prison. The archbishop is a very good man, who hath two yong men to his seruants, the one of them was borne at Hamborough, and is called Bernard Bogers: and the other was borne at Enchulen, whose name is Job: Leiscot, who did vs great pleasure: for by them the archbishop was many times put in minde of vs. And the two good fathers of S. Paul, who trauelled very much for vs, the one of the is called Iudges Marke, who was borne in Flanders, & the other was borne in Wiltshire in England, and is called Padre Thomas Struens.

Also I chanced to finde heere a yong man, who was borne in Antwerpe, but the most part of his bringing up hath bene in London, his name is Francis de Rea, and with him it was my hap to be acquainted in Aleppo, who also hath done me great pleasure heere.

In the prison at Ormuz we remained many dayes, also we lay a long time at sea comming hither, and fortytwich at our arriuall heere were carried to prison, and the next day after were sent for heere the Queado, who is the chiefeest iustice, to be examined: and when we were examined, he presently sent vs backe againe to prison.

And after our being heere in prison thirteene dayes, James Storie went into the monasterie of S. Paul, where he remaineth, and is made one of the companie, which life he liketh very well.

And vpon S. Thomas day (which was two and twentie dayes after our arriuall here) I came out of prison, and the next day after came our Ralph Fitch, and William Bets.

If these troubles had not chanced, I had bene in possibilitie to haue made as good a voyage as euer any man made with so much money. Many of our things I haue solde very well, both heere and at Ormuz in prison, notwithstanding the captaine willed me (if I would) to sell what I could before we imbarked: and so with officers I went diuers times out of the castle in the morning, and sold such things, and at night returned againe to the prison, and all things that I solde they did write, and at our imbarking from thence, the captaine gaue order that I should deliuer all my many wiche goods into the hands of the seruano, or purser of the ship, which I did, and the seruano made a remembrance, which he left there with the captaine, that my selfe and the rest with money & goods he should deliuer into the hands of the Queado; generall of India: but at our arriuall heere, the Queado would neither meddle with goods nor money, for that he could not proue any thing against vs: wherefore the goods remained in the ship nine or ten dayes after our arriual, and then, for that the ship was to saile from hence, the seruano sent the goods on shore, and heere they remained a day and a night, and no body to receive them. In the end they suffered this binger to receive them, who came with me from Ormuz, and put them into an house which he had hired for me, where they remained foure or five dayes. But afterward when they should deliuer the money, it was concluded by the iustice, that both the money and goods should be deliuered into the possessors hands, where they remained foureteeen dayes after my comming out of prison. At my being in Aleppo, I bought a foumeine of silver and gilt, five knives, five spoones, and one fork trimmed with royall so: five and twentie chickens, which the captaine of Ormuz did take, and payed for the same twentie parangs, which is one hundred lardnes, and was woorth there or heere one hundred chickens. Also he had five emerauds set in golde, which were woorth five hundred or five hundred crownes, and payed for the same an hundred pardas. Also he had nineteene & a halfe pikes of cloth, which cost in London twentie shillings the pike, and was worth nine or tenne crownes the pike, and he payed for the same twelue lardes a pike. Also he had two pieces of greene Kerries, which were woorth foure and twentie pardas the piece, and payed for them sixtene pardas a piece: besides diuers other trifles, that the officers and others had in the like order, and some for nothing at all. But the cause of all this was Michael Sropene, which came to Dymuz not woorth a penie, and not worth thirtie or fortie thousand crownes, and he grieueth that any other stranger should trade thither but himselfe. But that shall not skil, for I trust in God to goe both thither and hither, and to buy and sell as freelic as he or any other. There is verie great good to be done in diuers of our commodities, and in like maner there is great profit to be made with commodities of this country, to be carried to Aleppo.

It were long for me to write, and tedious for you to read of all things that haue passed since my parting from you. But for all the troubles that haue chanced since mine arriuall in Dymuz, this bringer is able to certifie you. I minde to stay heere: wherefore if you will write vnto me, you may send your letters to some friend at A. I. bone, and from thence by the shippes they may be coueyed hither. Let the direction of your letters be either in Portugall or Spanishe, whereby they may come the better to my hands. From Goa this 20 day of Januarie. 1584.

A Letter written from Goa by Ralph Fitch to M. Leonard

Poore aboue said.

Dear friend Maister Hooye, &c. Since my departure from Aleppo, I haue not written vnto you any letters, by reason that at Babylon I was sicke of the fluxe, and being sicke, I went from thence for Balsara, which was twelue dayes iourney downe the riuer Tigris, where we had extreme hotte weather, which was good for my disease, ill fare, and woollie lodging, by reason our boate was pestered with people. In eight dayes, that which I did eat was very small, so that if we had stayed two dayes longer vpon the water, I thinke I had died: but coming to Balsara, presently I mended, I thanke God. There we stayed foureteene dayes, and then we imbarked our selues for Dymuz, where we arrived the fifth of September, and went put in prison the ninth of the same month, where we continued vntill the eleuenth of October, and then were thye for this cite of Goa in the capteines shippe, with an hundred and foureteene hoyses, and about two hundred men: and passing by Diu and Chaul, where we went on land to water the twentieth of Nouember, we arrived at Goa the nine and twentieth of the said month, where for our better intertainment we were presently put into a saye strong prison, where we continued vntill the two & twentieth of December. It was the will of God that we found there two Padres, the one an Englishman, the other a Flemming. The English mans name is Padre Thomas Stevens, the others Padre Marco, of the order of S. Paul. These did sue for vs vnto the Vicroy and other officers, and stood vs in as much stead, as our liues and goods were woorth: for if they had not stucke to vs, if we had escaped with our liues, yet we had had long imprisonment.

October 11.

The Italians are great enemies
for the trade in the East.

After foureteene dayes imprisonment they offered vs, if we could get in surties for two thousand duckets, we should goe abroad in the towne: which when we could not doe, the said Padres found surties for vs, that we should not depart the country without the licence of the Vicroy. It doth spite the Italians to see vs abroad: and many maruell at our deliuerie. The painter is in the cloister of Saint Paul, and is of their order, and likely there verie well. While we were in prison, both at Dymuz and heere, there was a great deale of our goods pilfered and lost, and we haue bene at great charges in gifts and ocherwise, so that a great deale of our goodes is consumed. There is much of our things which will sell very well, and some we shall get nothing for. I hope in God that at the returne of the Vicroy, which is gone to Chaul and to Diu, they say, to winne a caille of the Hooyes, whose returne is thought will be about Easter, then we shall get our libertie, and our surties discharged. Then I thinke it will be our best way, either one or both to returne, because our troubles haue bene so great, and so much of our goods spoiled, and lost. But if it please God that I come into England, by Gods helpe, I will returne hither againe. It is a braue and pleasaunt country, and very fruitfull. The Summer is almost all the yeere long, but the chiefest at Christmas.

The day and the night are all of one length, very litle difference, and marvellous great store of fruits. For all our great troubles, yet are we fat and well liking, for victualles are heere plenty of cloeth, which cost in London the pike, and he payed for the s, which were woorth foure piece: besides diuers other clothing at all. But the cause

The money and measures of Babylon, Balsara, and the Indies, with the customes, &c. written from Aleppo in Syria, Anno 1584: by William Barret.

B A B Y L O N:

The weight, measure, and money currant there, and the customes of merchandize.

Spana of Babylon is of Aleppo 1 roue 5 ounces and a halfe: and 68 manacs & three seventh parts, make a quintall of Aleppo, which is 494 li. 8 ounces of London: and 100 manacs is a quintall of Babylon, which maketh in Aleppo 146 rouses, and of London 722 li. and so much is the said quintall: but the merchants accord is by so much the mana, & in the said place they bate the tare in all sorts of commodities, according to the order of Aleppo touching the tare.

The measure of Babylon is greater then that of Aleppo 21 in y 100. For buying 100 pikcs of any measurable ware from Aleppo thither, there is found but 82 pikcs in Babylon, so that the 100 pikcs of Babylon is of Aleppo 121 pike & very little lesse.

The currant mony of Babylō are Sayes, which Say is 5 medines as in Aleppo, & 40 medines being 8 sayes maketh a ducket currant, and 47 medines passeth in value as the ducket of golde of Genire, and the dollers of the best sort are woorth 33 medines. The rials of plate are sold by the 100 drams at pise, according as they be in request: but among the merchants they bargain by the 100 mercals, which are 150 drams of Aleppo, which 150 drams are 135 single rials of plate: but in the mint of castile, they take them by the hundred drams, which is 90 rials of plate, & those of the mint give 5 medines lesse in eery 100 drams then they are woorth to be solde among the merchants, and make payment at the the terme of 40 dayes in Sayes.

The custome in Babylon as well inward as outward, is in this maner: Small wares at 6 per 100. Coall, and amber at 5 and a halfe per 100. Genire cloth, English cloth, Kerlies, Gokaynes, Chamblets, Silks, Telnets, Damaskes, Battins, & such like at 5 per 100: and they rate the goods without reason as they lust themselves. The Coats, Boabo, and other exactions 6 medines per hale, all which they pay presently in readie mony according to the custome and vse of the Emperour.

To the Ermin of the mint the ordinarie vse is to give 30 Sayes in curratie, otherwaise he would by auoytie of his office come aboard, and for despight make such search in the barke, that he would turne all things to his turne.

B A L S A R A:

The weight, measure, and money in the citie of Balsara.

A Spana of Balsara answereth 5 rouses 2 offices & a halfe of Aleppo weight, and 19 manacs & one fourth part of Balsara answereth the quintall of Aleppo, which is 494 rouses, 8 ounces English, & 20 manacs is the quintall of Balsara, which is 104 Alpine, and of London 514 li. 8 offices, and so much is the sayd quintall, but the merchants bargain at so much the mana of tollene (which is all one) and they abate the tare in eery mana, as the sort of spice is, and the order taken therfore in that place.

The measure of Balsara is called a pike, which is iust as the measure of Babylon, to say, 100 pikcs of Balsara maketh of Aleppo 121 pikcs, vt supra in the rate of Babylon.

The currant mony of Balsara is as followeth. There is a sort of shillers of copper called Chial, whereof 12 make a manedine, which is the value of one medine Aleppine, the said manedine is of silver, having the Spoyeske stamp on both sides, and two of these make a damine, which is 2 medines Aleppine.

The said damine is of silver, having the Turkeske stamp on both sides, and 2 & a halfe of these make a say, which is iust in value as the say of Aleppo.

The said say is of the similitude and stamp of Aleppo, being (as apperres) 60 Chialcs. Also one say and 20 Chialcs make a lamine, which is of Aleppo money 6 medines and a halfe.

The said lamine is a strange piece of money, not being round as all other currant money is.
Christianitie,

Chistianitie, but is a small rod of silver of the greatnesse of the penne of a goose feather, wherewith we use to write, and in length about one eighthe part thereof, which is twisted, so that the two ends meet at the full halfe part, and in the head thereof is a stampe Turkesco, and these be the best currant money in all the Indies, and 6 of these larinnes make a ducket, which is 40 medines of eight sayes of Aleppo.

The ducket of golde is worth there 7 larinnes, and one danine, which is of Aleppo money 48 medines and a halfe.

The Venetian money is worth larinnes 88 per 100 meticals, which is 150 dyams of Aleppo, vt supra.

The rials of plate are worth 88 larinnes by the 100 meticals, and albeit among the merchants they sell by the 100 meticals, yet in the mint of castile they sell by the 100 dyams, hauing there lesse then the worth 5 medines in eech hundred dyams, and haue their payment made in 40 dayes, made them in sayes of larinnes.

The custome of the said places, as well in ward as out ward, are alike of all sortes of goods, to say 6 by the 100, and Coaso, Boabo, & scriuan medines 6 by the bale inward and outward, to say, inward, and as much outward: but who so leauech his goods in the custome house payeth nothing, where otherwise at the taking thereof a wap, he should pay 3 med. by the bale, and of the said goods there is no other duty to pay, and this cometh to passe when the customers esteeme the goods too high. For in such a case they may be dyuen to take so much commoditie as the custome amounteth to, and not to pay them in money, for such is the order from the Graud Signior.

Hauing paid the custome, it behoueth to haue a quitance or cocket sealed and firm'd with the customers hand, in confirmation of the dispatch and clearing, and before departure thence, to cause the said customer to cause search to be made, to the end that at the voyages returne there be no caullation made, as it often times happeneth.

Note that 100 meticals of Ballara weigh 17 ounces and a halfe scottish Venetian, and of Aleppo dyams 150, vt supra.

The freight of the barks from Dymuz to Ballara, I would say from Ballara to Dymuz, they pay according to the greatnesse thereof. To say, for cariage of 100 cares 180 larinnes, those of 15 cares 270 larinnes, those of 20 cares 360 larinnes, those of 30 cares 540 larinnes. Note that a care is 4 quintals of Ballara. They pay also to the pilot of the barke for his otme cariage one care, and to all the rest of the martiners amongst them 3 cares freight, which is in the whole 4 cares, and paying the abovesaid prices and freightes, they are at no charges of vidualles with them, but it is requisite that the same be declared in the charter partie, with the condition that they lade not aboard one rottilo more then the freight, vnder paines that finding more in Dymuz, it is forfeite, and besides that to pay the freight of that which they haue laden.

And in this acco<sup>nt</sup>, it behoueth to deale warlike, and in the presence of the Ermin or some other honest man (whereof there are but few) for they are the worst people in all Arabia. And this diligence must be put in execution, to the end the barks may not be overladen, because they are to passe many lands betwixt Ballara and Dymuz.

O R M V Z :

The weight, measure, and money currant in the kingdome of Ormuz.

Spices and drugs they weigh by the barre, and of every sort of goods the weight is different. To say, of some drugs 3 quintals, and 3 erubi or roues, and other some 4 quintals 25 rottiloes, and yet both is called a barre, which barre, as well great as litle, is 20 strafoli, and every strafoli is 10 manars, and every manar 23 chians, and every chians 10 meticals and a halfe. Note that euery quintall maketh 4 erubi or roues, and every roue 32 rottiloes, & every rottilo 16 ounces, and every ounce 7 meticals, so that the quintall cometh to be 128 rottiloes, which is Aleppine 26 rottiloes and one third part, which is 132 li. English weight. And contrariwise the quintall of Aleppo (which is 494 rottiloes 8 ounces English) maketh 477 rottiloes and a halfe of Dymuz, which is 3 quintals 2 roues, 29 rottiloes and a halfe.

What a rottilo is.

Note that there are bars of diuers weights, vt supra, of which they bargin simple, according to the sort of commoditie, but if they bargin of the great barre, the same is 7 quintals and 24 rottiloes, which is 958 li. 9 ounces of London weight, and of Aleppo 193 rottiloes and a halfe.

Touching the money of Dymuz, they bargin in merchandise at so many leches by the barre, which lech is 100 Asarie, and maketh larinnes 190 & a halfe, which maketh pardaos 38, & larinnes one halfe, at larinnes 5 by the pardao. One Asarie is sadines 10, and euery sadine is 100 danarie.

The larinne is worth 5 sadines and one fourth part, so that the sadine is worth of Aleppo money 1 medicine

1 medine & 1 fourth part, & the larinie as in Bassara worth of Aleppo money 6 medincs & a halfe.
The parbae is 5 larinies of Bassara.

There is also stamped in Dymuz a seraphine of golde, which is litle and round, and is worth 24 larinies, which maketh 30 medincs of Aleppo.

The Venetian mony is worth in Dymuz larinies 88 per 100: meticals, and the rials are worth larinies 86 lesse one saebine, which is euery thousand meticals, 382 asures: but those that will not sell them, use to melt them, and make them so many larinies in the king of Dymus his mine, whereby they cleere 2 per 100, and somewhat more: and this they do because neither Venetian mony nor rials runne as currant in Dymuz, per aduise.

The measure of Dymuz is of 2 fozes, the one called Codo which increaseth vpon the measure of Aleppo 3 per 100, for bringting 100 pikas of any measurable wares from Aleppo to Dymuz, it is found in Dymuz to be 103 Codes. Also these measures of Dymuz increaseth vpon those of Bassara and Babylon 25 and two third parts per 100: for bringting 100 pikas of any measurable wares from Bassara or Babylon, there is found in Dymuz 125 codes and two third parts.

The other measure is called a bare, which was sent from the king of Portugall to the India, by which they sell things of small value, which measure is of 5 palmes or spannes, and is one codo and two third parts, so that buying 100 codes of any measurable wares, and returning to measure it by the said bare, there is sold but 60 wares, contrariwise 100 wares maketh 166 codes & 2 third parts.

Note that all such ships as lade hoyses in Dymuz for Goa or any other place of India, lading 10 hoyses or by wares, in what places soeuer the said hoyses be taken a shoze in the India, the merchandize which is to be discharged out of that shippe wherein the said hoyses come, are bound to pay no custome at all, but if they lade one hoyle lesse then tenne, then the goods are bound to pay the whole custome. And this law was made by Don Emanuel king of Portugall, but it is to be diligentely forseeke, whether all those hoyses laden be bound to pay the king his custome: for many times by the king of Portugall his commandement there is fauor shewed to the king of Cochyn his brother of Armes, so that his hoyses that come in the same shippe, are not to answer custome: as for example, if there were foure hoyses laden in one shippe, all which were to pay custome to the king, and one other of the king of Cochins which were not to pay any custome, the same causeth all the merchandize of that shippe to be subiect to pay custome, per aduise. But if they lade ten hoyses vpon purpose to pay the king his custome in Goa, and in the voyage any of them should die in that case, if they bring the taile of the dead hoyle to the custome in Goa, then the merchandize is free from all custome, because they were laden in Dymuz to pay custome in Goa. Howeouer if the hoyses should die before the middelt of the voyage, they pay no custome at all, and if they die in the mids of the voyage, then they pay halfe custome, but if any hoyle die after the mid voyage, they pay custome no lesse then if they arriue safe. Notwithstanding, the merchandize (whether the said hoyses die before or in the mid voyage or after the mid voyage) are free from all custome.

The custome of Dymuz is a leuen in the 100, to say, 10 for the king, and one for the arming of the silks: but for small wares as glasses, and looking glasses of all sorts, and such like, made for apparell, pay no custome. But cloth of Woolle, Karlicks, Pokaynes, Chamlets, and all fozes of Silke, Saffron, and such like, pay custome, being esteemed reasonable.

There is also another custome, which they call calda, which is, that one bringting his goods into Dymuz, with purpose to send the same further into India, the same is bound to pay 3 by the 100, but none other are bound to pay this custome, except the Armenians, Moores, and Iewes: for the Portugalles and Venetians pay nothing thereof.

Note that in Dymuz they abate tare of all fozes of commodities, by an order obserued of custome.
The freight by Dymuz to Chaull, Goa, and Cochyn, as follo weth: Pokaynes larinies 6 per table of 60 pikas, Aquariola 8 larinies by ordinarie chist, readings 10 larinies by chist, which is a quintall of froues 128. Ruuia of Chalang larinies 10 per quintall, glasses larinies 8 per chist, of 4 foot & a halfe, glasses in great chist 14 & 15 larinies by chist. Small wares larinies 12 by chist of 5 foote. Tamari for Galthat ladinies 2 and a halfe; and 3 by the fardle. Tamari for Diu and Chaull 4 larinies, and 4 and a halfe by bale. Other vugges and things which come from Persia pay according to the greatnesse of the bales.

The freight mentioned they pay as appereth, wth they ship 3 said goods in ships where hoyses go:
wherewith not hauing hoyses, they pay somewhat lesse, because of the custome which they are to pay.

The use of the India shippers is, that the patrons thereof are not at any charge neither with any passenger nor yet with any mariner in the shippe, but that euery one at the beginning of the voyage do furnish to mainteine his owne table (if he will eat) & for drinke they haue a great barre of water, which is garded with great custodie.

G O A:

The weight, measure, and money currant in Goa.

The quintall of Goa is 5 manaes, and 8 larines, & the mana is 24 rotiloes, so that the quintall of Goa is 128 rot., and euery rot. is 16 ounces, which is of Venice weight 1 li. and a half, so that the quintall of Goa is 192 li. scilicet Venice, which is 26 rotiloes 8 ounces Aleppo, and of London weight 132 li. English, as the weight of Dymuz.

All the merchandize, spices and drugs, are solde by this quintall, excepte some drugs, as ligni de China, Galanga, & others, whereof they bargin at so much per candill, aduertising that there be two sorts of candill, one of 16 manaes, the other of 20 manaes, that of 16 manaes cometh to be iust 3 quintals, and that of 20 manaes, 3 quintals, 3 roues. Note that 4 roues make a quintall, and the roue is 32 rotiloes, as in Dymuz.

Note that 4 roues make a quintall.

There is also another sort of weight, which they call Marto, which is 8 ounces or one halfe a rotilo of Goa, & 9 ounces of Venice scilicet: with this they weigh amber, muske, ambacran, cinice, and other fine wares.

There is also another sort of weight called Spangialino, which is 5 graines of Venice weight, & there with they weigh diamonds, and otheriewels.

Sparks of Tartaria by the way of China.

Note that in Goa they vse not to abate any tare of any goods, excepte of sacks or wraps, & there fore it requirith great aduise in buying of the goods, especially in the muske of Tartaria which cometh by way of China, in bladders, and so weigh it without any tare relating.

The measure of Goa is called a code, which increaseth vpon the measure of Babylon & Bassara after the rate of 17 & one eight part by the 100, so that bringing 100 pikas of any measurable ware from thence to Goa, it is found 117 pikas 7 eight parts, and bringing 100 codes from Dymuz to Goa there is found but 93 codes and one fourth part.

There is also the vare in Goa, which is iust as the vare of Dymuz, and therewith they measure onely things that are of small value.

For the mony of Goa, there is a kinde of mony made of lead and tin mingled, being thicke and round, and stamped on the one side with the spherate or map of the world, and on the other side two arrowes, & 5 rounds: and this kinde of mony is called Balaruchi, and 15 of these make a vinton of naughtie mony, and 5 vintons make a tanga, and 4 vintons make a tanga of base mony: so that the tanga of base mony is 60 balaruchies, and the tanga of good mony 75 balaruchies, and 5 tangas make a seraphine of golde, which in merc hawoize is worth 5 tangas good mony: but if one would change them into balaruchies, he may haue 5 tangas, and 16 balaruchies, which ouerplus they call cerafagio, & when they bargin of the parday of golde, each parday is ment to be 6 tangas good mony, but in merc hawoize they vse not to demand pardayes of golde in Goa, excepte it be for jewels and hoyses, for all the rest they take of seraphins of silver peraduilo.

The trials of plate, I say the riall of 8 is worth per custome and commandment of the king of Portugall, 400 reyes, and euery rey is one barsuce and one fourth part, which makes tangas 6, and 53 balaruchies as their iust value, but for that the said trials are excellent silver and currant in diuers places of the India, and chiefly in Malacha, where the ships are to depart at their due times (called Spousons) euery one to haue the said trials pay more then they are worth, and the ouerplus, as is abouesaid they call cerafagio. And first they giue the iust value of the 100 trials, of 8 at 5 tangas 50 balaruchies a piece, which done, they giue seraphins 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 12, 15, vntill 22 by the 100, according as they are in request.

The ducket of golde is worth 9 tangas and a halfe good mony, and yet not stable in price, for that when the ships depart from Goa to Cochim they pay them at 9 tangas and 3 fourth parts, and 10 tangas, and that is the most that they are worth.

The larines are worth by iust value balaruchies 93 and 3 fourth parts, and 4 larines make a seraphine of silver, which is 5 tangas of good mony, and these also haue cerafagion of 6, 7, 8, 10, vntill 16, by the 100, for when the ships depart for the Mozet, to say, for Chaul, Diu, Cambaita, or Bassant, all carry of the same, because it is mony more currant then any other.

There is also a sort of seraphins of golde of the stampe of Dymuz, whereof there are but few in Goa, but being there, they are worth 5 larines & somewhat more, according as they are in request.

There is also another little sort of mony, round, hauing on the one side a crosse, and on the other side a crowne, which is worth one halfe a tanga of good mony, and another of the same stampe lesse then that which they call Imicuo de buona moneda, which is worth 18 balaruchies 3 fourth parts a piece.

Note that if a man bargaine in merchandize, it be houery to demaunde tangas of good mony,

The custome of Goa is 8. in the 100. inward, and as much outward, and the goods are elee-med iustly rather to the marchants advantage then the kings. The custome they paye in this order. Comming with a shippe from Ormuz. to Goa without voyles, they pay 8. in the 100. whether they sell part of all, but if they would carle of the saide marchandise to any other place, they pay none other custome, except others buy it and carie it forth of the countrey, and then they pay 8. in the 100. And if one hauing payd the custome should sell to another with composition to passe it though as for his proper account to laue the custome, this may not be, because the seller is ynto his owe, whether he sende the goods for his owne accompt, or for the accompt of any others, that haue bought the same, and being found to the contrary, they pay custome as abouesaid. And in this order the marchants pay of all the goods which come from any part of the Indies. But if they come from Ormuz to Goa with voyles, they are not subject to pay any custome inward, notwithstanding if they send all of any part thereof for any other place, or returne it to Ormuz, they pay the custome outward, although they could not sell.

They vse also in Goa amongst the comon foyle, to bar gaine for coales, wood, lime & such like as so many braganines, amounting 24. basaruches for one braganine, albeit there is no such money stamp. The custome of the Portugals, is, that any Moore or Gentile, of what condition or state soever he be, may not depart from Goa to go within the land, without licence of certaine deputies deputed for that office, who (if they be Moores or Gentiles) doe set a seale vpon the arme, hauing thereon the armes of Portugal, to be knowen of the porters of the citie, whether they haue the saide licence or no.

COCHIN.

The waight, measure, and money, currant in Cochin.

All the marchandise which they sell or buy within the said citie, they bargain for it at so many Aerafines per quintal, which is 128. rotiilos of iust waight with the quintal & Rottilo of Goa, and Ormuz: aduerfiling & there are diuers sorts of barres according to the sort of commodities, and in waighing they reason at so much the barre. Note that there are barres of 3. quintals & 3. quin-tals and a halfe, and 4. quintals. They abate a vsed tare of all marchandise, according to the sort of goods, and order taken for the same.

The measure of Goa, and Cochin are all one.

The money of Cochin are all the same sorts which are currant in Goa, but the ducat of golde is 10. tangas of good money.

The custome of Cochin as well inward, as outward for all strangers, is 8. in the hundred, but that that haue bene married 4. yeres in the countrey pay but 4. in the hundred per adulo.

MALACHA.

The waight, measure, and money of Malaca.

For the marchandise bought and solde in the citie, they reason at so much the barre, which barre is of diuers sorts, great and small, according to the ancient custome of the said citie, and diuer-tie of the goods. But for the clothes they bargain at so much the barre, which barre is 3. quintals
2. ounces, and 10. rotiilos, as I haue abouesaid, all kind of drugs haue their sorts of barres limited, Note that every quintal is 4. rones, and every rone 32. rotiilos, which is 128. rotiilos the quintal, the which answereth to Aleppo 95. rotiilos, and to London 472. li. per quintal.

The measures of Malaca are as the measures of Goa. In Malaca they abate tare according to their distinction and agreement, for that there is no iust tare limited.

For the money of Malaca, the least money currant is of tunc stamped with the armes of Por-tingall, and 12. of these make a Chazza.

The Chazza is also of tunc with the said armes, and 2. of these make a challaine.

The Challaine is of tunc with the said armes, and 40. of these make a Tanga of Goa good money, but not stamped in Malaca.

There is also a sort of siluer money which they call Parachynes, and is worth 6. tangas of good money, which is 300. reyes, and is stamped with two letters, S. T. which is S. Thomas on the one side, and the armes of Portugal on the other side.

There is also a kinde of money called cruzados stamped with the armes of Portugal, and is worth 6. tangas good money, the larines are every 9. of them worth 2. cruzados, which is 12. tan-gas good money, and these larines be of those which are stamped in Balsara, and Ormuz.

The rials of 8, they call Pardaos de Reales, and are worth 7. tangas of good money.

The custome of Malaca is 10. in the 100. as well inwarde as outwarde, and those which pay the custome inwards, if in case they send the same goods for any other place within terme of a year and a day, pay no custome for the same.

The times or seasonable windes called monsons, wherein the ships depart from place to place in the East Indies.

NOte that the cite of Goa, is the principall place of all the Oriental India, & the winter there beginneth the 15. of May which beyn great raine, & so continueth till the 1. of August, so that during that space, no ship can passe ouer the bar of Goa, because though the continual shoures of raine all the lands to yne together were vnto a mountaine called Oghane, & all these lands being to yned together, runne into the shoales of the barre and port of Goa, and can haue no other issue, but to re-maine in that port, and therefore is shut vp until the first of August, but at the 10. of August it openeth by reason of the raine which ceaseth, and the sea doeth then scoure the sands away againe.

The monson from Goa to the Northward, to say, for Chaul, Diu, Cambaia, Daman, Bassani, and other places.

The shippes depart betwixt the tenth and 24. of August, for the Northward places above saide, and to these places they may saile all times of the yeere, except in the winter, which beginneth and endeth at the times above saide.

The monson from the North parts, for Goa.

The shippes depart from Chaul, Diu, Cambaia, and other places Northwardes for Goa, betwixt the 8. and 15. of Januarie, and come to Goa about the ende of Februarie.

The first monson from Diu for the straight of Mecca.

The ships depart from Diu about the 15. of Januarie, and returne from the Straights of Diu in the moneth of August.

The second monson from Diu for the straight of Mecca.

The ships depart betwixt the 25. and first of September, and returne from the Straights of Diu, the 1. and 25. of May.

The monson from Secutra for Ormuz.

The ships depart about the tenth of August for Ormuz: albeit Secutra is an Islande and hath but few ships, which depart as above saide.

The monson wherein the Moores of the firme land come to Goa.

About the 15. of September the Moores of the firme lande beginne to come to Goa, and they come from all parts, as well from Balgatte, Lezanegar, as also from Sudalcao, and other places.

The monson wherein the Moores of the firme land depart from Goa.

They depart from Goa betwixt the 10. and 15. day of November. Note that by going for the North is meant the departing from Goa, for Chaul, Diu, Cambaia, Daman, Bassani, Ghassan, and other places unto Zindi, and by the South is understoode, departing from Goa, for Cochin, and all that coast unto Cape Comorin.

The first monson from Goa for Ormuz.

The shippes depart in the moneth of October from Goa, for Ormuz, passing with Easterly winde along the coast of Persia.

The second monson from Goa to Ormuz.

The ships depart about the 20. of Januarie passing by the like navigation and winde as in the first monson, and this is called of the Portugals and Indians Entremonson.

The 3. monson from Goa to Ormuz.

The ships depart betwixt the 25. of March, and 6. of April, having Easterly winde, till they passe Secutra, and then they haue Westerly winde, and therefore they set their course ouer to the coast of Arabia, till they come to Cape Rafalgate, and the Straight of Ormuz, and this monson is most troublesome of all: for they make 2. navigations in the height of Seylan, which is 6. degrees and somewhat lower.

The first monson from Ormuz for Chaul and Goa.

The ships depart from Ormuz for Chaul, and Goa in the moneth of September, with North, and Northeast winde.

The second monson from Ormuz for Chaul, and Goa.

The second monson is betwixt the 25. and last of December, with like winde as the former monson.

The 3. monson from Ormuz for Chaul, and Goa.

The 3. monson the ships depart from Ormuz, for Chaul, and Goa, betwixt the 1. and 15. of April, & they saile with Southeast winde, East & Northeast winde, coasting upon the Arabia side from Cape Molandon unto Cape Rafalgate, and having lost sight of Cape Rafalgate, they haue Westerly winde, and so come for Chaul and Goa, and if the said ships depart not before the 25. of April, they are not then to depart that monson, but to winter in Ormuz because of the winter.

The first monson from Ormuz for Zindi.

The ships depart for Ormuz betwixt the 15. and 20. of April.

The 2. monson from Ormuz for Zindi.

The ships depart betwixt the 10. and 20. of October for Zindi from Ormuz.

The monson from Ormuz for the red sea.

The ships depart from Ormuz betwixt the 1. and last of Januarie.

Hithero I have noted the monsons of the ships departing from Goa to the Northward: Now folowe the monsons wherem the ships depart from Goa to the Southward.

¶ The monson from Goa for Calicut, Cochin, Seilan, and all that coast.

The ships depart from those places betwixt the 1. and 15. of August, and there they staid it navigable all the yeere except in the winter, which continueth as is abovesaid, from the 15. of Note. Appril the 10. of August. In like manner the ships come from these places for Goa at euery time in the yeere except in the winter, but of all other the best time is to come in November, December and Januarie:

The first monson from Goa for Pegu.

The ships depart from Goa betwixt the 15. and 20. of April, and winter at S. Thomas, and after the 5. of August, they depart from S. Thomas for Pegu.

The 2. monson from Goa for Pegu.

The ships depart from Goa, betwixt the 8. and 24. of August, going straight for Pegu, and if they passe the 24. of August, they cannot passe that monson, neither is there any more monsons till Appril, as is abovesaid. Note that the chief trade is, to take money of S. Thomas rials, and paracion, and to goe to S. Thomas, and thers to buy T.ellami, which is fine cloth of India, wherof there is great quantitie made in Chara Mandel, and brought thither, and other merchandize are not good for that place except some dozen of very faire Emeraude orientall. For of golde, silver, and Rubies, there is sufficient store in Pegu.

The monson from Pegu for the Indies.

The ships depart from Pegu betwixt the 15. & 25. of Januarie, and come to Goa about the 25. of March, in the beginning of April. Note, that if it passe the 10. of May before the saide ships be arriued in Goa, they can not come thither that monson, and if they haue not then set the coast of India, they shall with great perill fetch S. Thomas.

The first monson from Goa, for Malaca.

The ships depart betwixt the 15. and last of September, and arriue in Malaca about the ende of October.

The second monson from Goa to Malaca.

The second monson from Malaca to Goa.

The ships depart from Malaca about the 10. of February, and come to Goa about the ende of March. But if the said ships should stay till the 10. of May, they can not enter into Goa, and if at that time also they should not be arriued at Cochin, they are forced to returne to Malaca, because the winter and contrary windes then come vpon them.

Helena, and so are not able that time being past to fetch the coast of India, and to come straight for Goa. Therefore (as is aboue said) they returne to the Island of S. Helena, and if they cannot make the saide Island, then they rime a loss vpon the coast of Guinea: but if the saide shippes bee arriued in time vpon the coast of Melinde, they set forwardes for Goa, and if by the sithene of

The monson from India for Portingall.

The Shippes depart from Cochin betwene the 15. and last of January, going on til they have sight of Capo de buona speranza, and the Isle of S. Helena, which Islande is about the midway, being in 16. degrees to the South. And it is a litle Island being fruitful of all things which a man can imagine, with great soye of fruite: and this Islande is a great succour to the Shippes which returne for Portingall. And not long since, the said Island was founde by the Portingals, and was discovered by a Shippe that came from the Indies in a great storme, in which they founde such abundance of wilde beastes, and boates, and all soye of fruite, that by meanes thereof that poore Shippe, which had bene 4. moneths at sea, refreshed themselves both with water and meate very well, and this Island they called S. Helens, because it was discovered upon S. Helens day. And undoubtedly this Island is a great succour, and so great an ayde to the Shippes of Portingall, that many would surely perish if that helpe wanted. And therefore the king of Portingal caused a Church to be made there for deuotion of S. Helena: where there are onely resident Eremites, and all other are forbidden to inhabit there by the kings commaundement, to the ende that the Shippes may be the more sufficiently furnished with victuals, because the Shippes which come from India come but slenderly victualled, because there groweth no corne there, neither make they any wine: but the Shippes which come from Portingal to the Indies touch not in the saide Island, because they set out being sufficiently furnished with bread, and water from Portingal for 8. moneths voyage. Any other people then the 2. Eremites abovesaide, can not inhabit this Island, except some Act man that may be seethere a boare to remaine in the Eremites companie, for his helpe and recourtie.

The voyage passed by sea into Egypt, by John Euesham Gentleman. Anno 1586.

The 5. of December 1586, we departed from Grauesend in the Tiger of London, wherein was Master under God for the voyage Robert Rickman, and the 21. day at night we came to the Isle of Wight: departing from thence in the morning following we had a faire winde, so that on the 27. day we came in sight of the rocke of Lisbon, and so sayling along we came in sight of the South Cape, the 29. of the same, and on the morrowe with a Westerly winde we entered the Straights: and the 2. of January we being as high as Cape de Gate, we departed from our sette to wards Argier. And the 4. day we arrived at the port of Argier abovesaid, where we stayed till the first of March. At which time we set saile to wards a place called Tunis, to the Eastward of Argier 100. leagues, where we arrived the 8. of the same. This Tunis is a small cite by 12. miles from the sea, and at the port of rode where shipping doe ride, is a castle of fort called the Goletta, sometimes in the handes of the Christians, but now in the Turkes: at which place we remained till the thirde of April: at which time we set saile to wards Alexandria, and having sometime faire windes, sometime contrary, we passed on the 12. day betwene Sicilia and Malta, (where weere advoyning hath bene the soye and holde of the Knights of the Rhodes) and so the 19. day we set with the Isle of Candie, and from thence to Alexandria, where we arrived the 27. of April, and there continued till the 5. of October.

we arrived the 27. of April, and having bene a faice and great abundon of fresh water, which water

water cometh thither but once every peere, out of one of the foure riuers of paradise (as it is termed) called Nilus, which in September floweth neere eightene foote uppbe higher, then his accustomed manner, and so the banke being cut, as it were a fluce, about thirtie miles from Alexandria, at a towne called Rocetto, it doth so come to the saide Cite, with such abundance, that barres of the lue runne doe come upon the same water, which water doth fill all the valleys, festernes, and wels in the said Cite, with very good water, and doth so continue good, till the next peere following; for they haue there very litle raine, or none at all, yet haue they exceeding great wells. Also they haue very good coyne, and very plentifull: all the Countrey is very hot, especially in the moneths of August, September, and October. Also, within the saide Cite, there is a pillar of Marble, called by the Turkes, King Pharoos needle, and it is foure square, euery square is twelue foote, and it is in height 90. foote. Also, there is without the wals of the said Cite, about twentie scope paces, another marble piller, being rounde, called Pompey his piller: this piller standeth vpon a great square stone, euery square is sixtene foote, and the same stone is sixtene foote high, and the compass of the piller is 27. foote, and the height of it is 101. feete, which is a wonder to thinke how euer it was possible to set the said piller vpon the said square stone. The port of the said Cite is strongly fortified with two strong Castles, and one other Castle within the Cite, being all very well planted with munition: and there is to the Eastward of this Cite, about three daies iourney the Cite of Grand Cayro, otherwile called Memphis: it hath in it by repose of the registers booke, which we did see, to the number of 2400. Churches, and is wonderfully populous, and is one daies iourney about the wals, which was iourneyed by one of our sparriners, for triall thereof. Also, neere to the said Cite, there is a place called the Pyrammides, being, as I may well terme it, one of the nine wonders of the world: that is, seven severall places of flint and marble stone, foure square, the wals thereof are seven partes thicke in those places that we did see: the height is in length about twentie scope euery square, being built as it were a pointed diamond, broad at the foote, and small or narrow at the toppe: the height of them, to our iudgement, doth surmount twice the height of Paules steeple: within the saide Pyrammides, no man doth know what there is, for that they haue no entrance, but in the one of them, there is a hole where the wall is broken, and so we went in there, hauing torch light with vs, for that it hath no light to it, and within the same, is at it were a great hall, in the which there is a colly tombe, which tombe they say, was made for King Pharo in his life time, but he was not buried there, being drowned in the red sea: also there are certaine barres, or dungions, which goe downe very depe vnder those Pyrammides, with faire staires, but no man dare dence to go down into them, by reason that they can carry no light with them, for the damp of the earth doth put out the light:
the red sea is but three daies iourney from this place, and Ierusalem about seven daies iourney from thence: but to returne to Cayro. There is a Castle, wherein is the house that Pharoos wifes were kept in, and in the Pallace of Court thereof, standeth 55. marble pillars, in such order, as our Exchange standeth in London: the saide pillars are in height 60. foote, and in compass 14.
foote: also in the said Cite, is the Castle where Ioseph was in prison, where to this day they put in rich men, when the King would haue any summe of money of them: there are seven gates to the said prison, and it goeth neere 50. partes downe right: also, the water that serueth this Castle, cometh out of the foresaid riuer of Nilus, vpon a wal made with arches, sixe miles long, and it is twelue foote thicke. Also there are in old Cayro two Monasteries, the one called S. Georges, the other S. Maries: & in the Courts where the Churches be, was the house of King Pharo. In this Cite is great store of marchandize, especially pepper, and nutmegs, which come thither by land, out of the East India: and it is very plentifull of all manner of victuals, especially of bread, meats, and hearbes: to the Eastward of Cayro, there is a Well, sixe miles of, called Maria, and as they say, when the Virgin Marie fled from Bethleem, and came into Aegypt, and being there, had neither water, nor any other thing to sustaine them, by the prouidence of God, an Angel came from heauen, and strake the ground with his wings, where presently issued out a fountaine of water: and the wall did open, where the Israelites did hide themselves, which fountaine of wel, is walled foure square, to this day. Also we were at an olde Cite, all ruined and destroyed, called in olde time, the great Cite of Carthage, where Hannibal, and Queene Dido dwelt: this ci-tie was but narrow, but was very long: for there was, and is yet to bee seene, one streete three miles long, to which Cite fresh water was brought vpon arches (as afoze) about 25. miles, of which arches, some are standing to this day. Also we were at diuers other places, on the coast, as we came from Cayro, but of other antiquities, we saw but fewe. The towne of Argier, which was our first of last year, within the streights, standeth vpon the side of an hill, close vpon the sea Shore:
it is very strong both by sea, and land, and it is very well victualled with all manner of fruites, bread

bread, and fish, good store, and very cheape: It is inhabited with Turkes, Moores, and Jewes, and so are Alexandria and Cayro. In this towne are a great number of Christian captives, whereof there are of Englishmen onely 15. from which port we set saile towards England, the twenty of Januarie, Anno 1587. and the 30. day of the said moneth, we arrived at Dartmouth, on the coast of England.

The second voyage of Master Laurence Aldersley, to the Cities of Alexandria, and Cayro in Egypt. Anno 1586.

Embarked my selfe at Bristol, in the Hercules a good ship of London, and we saile the 21. day of February, about ten of the clocke in the morning, having a merry wind: but the 23. day there arose a very great storme, and in the mid of it we descried a small boate of the burden of ten tunnes, with foure men in her, in very great danger, who called a maine for our helpe. Whereupon our Master made towards them, and tooke them into our shippe, and let the boate, which was laden with timber, and appertained to Chesham, to runne a drift. The same night about midnight, arose another great storme, but the wind was latge with vs, untill the 27. of the same moneth, which then grew somewhat contrary: yet notwithstanding, we held on our course, and the tenth day of March, we descried a saile about Cape Sprac, which is a litle on this side the streight of Gibraltar, but we spake not with her. The next day we descried twelue saile more, with whom we thought to haue spoken, to haue learned what they were, but they made very fast away, and we gaue them ouer.

Thursday the 16. of March, we had sight of the streights, and of the coast of Barbaric. The 18. day we passed them, and sailed towards Petras. Upon the 23. of March, we met with the Centurion of London, which came from Genoa, by whom we sent letters to England, and the same men also which we tooke in, vpon the coast of England, before mentioned.

The 29. of March, we came to Goleta, a small Island, and had sight of two shippes, which we iudged to be of England.

Tuesday the fourth of April, we were before Malta, and being there becalmed, our Master rescued the two shippe boates to be had out, and they towed the shippe, till we were out of sight of the Castle of Malta. The 9. day of April, we came to Zante, and being before the towne, William Aldridge, seruant to Master Thomas Cordall of London, came aboard vs, with whom our Master, and 12. more of our companie, thought to haue gone on shoare, but they could not be permitted: so we all came aboard againe, and went to Petras, where we arrived vpon good Friday, and lay there with good entertainment, at the English house, where was the Consul Master Grims, Ralfe Ashley, & Iohn Doddington, who very kindly went with vs, and shewed vs the pleasures of the towne.

They brought vs to the house of the Cady, who was made then to vnderstand of the 20. Turkes that we had aboard, which were to go to Constantinople, being redeemed out of captiuitie, by Sir Francis Drake, in the west Indias, and brought with him into England, & by order of the Queenes Maiestie, sent now into their Countrey. Whereupon the Cady commanded them to be brought before him, that he might see them: and when he had talked with them, and vnderstoode how strangely they were deliuered, he maruailed much, and admited the Queenes Maiestie of England, who being but a woman, is notwithstanding of such power and renowne amongst all the princes of Christendome, with many other honorable words of commending her Maiestie. So he tooke the names of those 20. Turkes, and receyued them in their great booke, so remaine in perpetuall memorie. After this, our foresaid countrey men brought me to the Chappell of S. Andrew, where his tombe or sepulchre is, and the boord vpon which he was beheaded, which boord is now so rotten, that if any man offer to cut it, it falleth to powder, yet I brought some of it away with me. Upon Tuesday in Easter weeke, we set out towards Zante againe, and the 24. of April, with much a doo, we were all permitted to come on shoare, and I was carried to the English house in Zante, where I was very well entertained. The commodities of Zante, are currans, and of the situation of the towne is vnder a very great high hill, vpon which standeth a very strong Castle, which commandeth the towne. At Zante we tooke in a captaine, and 16. souldiers, with other passengers. We departed from Zante, vpon Tuesday 15. of April, & the next day we ankred at a small Island, called Scriualia, which is desolate of people, hauing a few religious men, who entertained vs well, without taking any moue: but of curtesie we bestowed vnto what vsd them

The last day of April, we arrived at Candie, at a Castle, called Sowdaye, where we sette the Captaine, souldiers, and mariners a shoare, which we took in at Zante, with all their car riage.

The second day of May we set saile againe, and the fourth day came to the Islands of Milo. where we anchored, and found the people there very curteous, and took in such necessaries as we wanted. The Islands are in my judgement a hundred in number, and all within the compass of a hundred miles.

The 11. day, the Chaus, which is the greatest man there in authoritie, for certaine offences done in a little Chappell by the water side, which they said one of our shippe had done, and impu tied it to me, because I was seene goe into it three daies before, came to vs, and made much a doe, so that we were faine to come out of our shippe armed, but by three peeces of golde the bragging was ended, and we came to our shippe. This day we also set saile, and the next day passed by the Castle of Serpeto, which is an olde ruinaced thing, and standeth vnder a high side.

The 13. day, we passed by the Islands of Paris, and the Island of the bankes of Helicon, and the Island called Dixer, where are many Boares, and the women be Wittches. The same day also we passed by the Castle of Tino, standing vpon a very high mountaine, and neere vnto it is the Island of Diana.

The 15. of May, we came to Sio, where I staid 33. daies. In it is a very proper towne, after the building of that Countrey, and the people are cruill: and while we were here, there came in five gallies, which had bene at Alexandria, and one of them which was the Admirall, had a Prince of the Moores prisoner, to whom they took about Alexandria, and they went to present him to the Turke. The towne standeth in a valley, and along the water side pleasantly. There are about 26. windmills about it, and the commodities of it, are cotton wooll, cotton parne, mallike, and some o ther huyes.

As we remained at Sio, there grew a great controuersie betweene the mariners of the Her cules, and the Grekes of the towne of Sio, about the bringing home of the Turkes, which the Grekes took in ill part, and the boies cried out, Viue el Re Philippi: whereupon our men beate the boies, and they threw stones, and to a byotle began, and some of our men were hurt: but the Grekes were fetcht out of their houses, and manacled together with yrons, and threatened to the gallies: about foure of them were sent to the prison, and what became of them, when wee were gone, we know not, for we went thence within 2. daies after, which was the nineteenth of June.

The 20. day we passed by the Island of Singonina, an Island risen by the casting of stones in that place: the substance of the ground there is bymstone, and burneth sometimes so much, that it bloweth vp the rocks.

The 22. of June, we came to Cyprus, and had sight in the way of the aforesaid five gallies, that came from Alexandria, one whereof came vnto vs, and required a present for himselfe, and for two of the other gallies, which we for quietnes sake gaue them.

The 27. of June, we came to Tripolis, where I staid till the sixt of July, and then tooke pas sage in a small barke, called a Caramafate, which was a passage boate, and was bound for Bick bert, thirtene miles on this side Alexandria, which boate was freighted with Turkes, Moores, and Jewes.

The 20. day of July, this barke which I passed in, ranne vpon a rocke, and was in very great danger, so that we all began, some to be ready to swimme, some to leape into the shippe boate, but it pleased God to set vs quickly off the rocke, and without much harme.

The 28. of July, I came to Bickbert, where I was well entertained of a Iewe, which was the Customier there, giuing me good hadue, and vsinking water himselfe: having broken my fall with him, he prouiden me a Camell for my carriage, and a Spule for me to ride vpon, and a Spooze to runne by me to the Citie of Alexandria, who had charge to see me safe in the English house, whether I came, but found no English men there: but then my guide brought me aboard a shippe of a Dutchman Martyns, called the Tyger of London, where I was well receaued of the Mastor of the said shippe, whose name was Thomas Rickman, and of all the companie.

The said Mastor hauing made me good cheere, and made me also binke of the water of Ni lus, hauing the keyes of the English house, went thither with me himselfe, and appointed me a faire Chamber, and left a man with me, to prouide me all things that I needed, and euery day came himselfe to me, and carried me into the Citie, and showed me the monuments thereof, which be these.

He brought me first to Pompey his pillar, which is a mighty thing, of gray marble, and all of one stone, in height by estimation, about 52. paces, and the compass about five fadome.

The Citie hath three gates, one called the gate of Barbaria, the other of Merina, and the third of Rosetto.

He brought me to a stone in a street of the Citie, whereupon S. Marke was beheaded: to the place where S. Catherine died, having there hid her selfe, because she would not marrie: also to the Bath of S. Catherine.

I sawe there also, Pharoes needle, which is a thing in height almost equall with Pompeys pillar, and is in compass sixe fadome, and a halfe, and all of one stone.

It was brought also to a most brave and daintie Bath, where we washed our selves: the Bath being of marble, and of very curious workmanship.

The Citie standeth upon great arches, or bowes, like unto Churches, with mightie pillars of marble, to holde up the foundation: which arches are built to receive the water of the river of Nilus, which is for the use of the Citie. It hath three Castles, and a hundred Churches: but the part that is destroyed of it, is five times more then that part which standeth.

Rosetto. The last day of July, I departed from Alexandria, towards Cayro, in a passage boate, where, in first I went to Rosetto, standing by the river side, having thirtene or foureene great Churches in it, their building there is of stone & hycke, but as for lodging, there is little, except we bring it with vs.

From Rosetto, we passed along the river of Nilus, which is so famous in the world, stiffe as broad as the Thames at London: on both sides growe Date trees, in great abundance. The people be rude, insomuch that a man can not trauell without a Janissar, to conduct him.

The Turkes Lent. The time that I staid in Aegypte, was the Turkes and Moores Lent, in all which time they burne lamps in their Churches, as many as may hang in them: their Lent dureth 40. daies, and they haue three Lents in the yeere: during which time they neither eate nor drinke in the day time, but all the night they doe nothing els.

Between Rosetto, and Cayro, there are along the water side thre hundred cities and townes, and the length of the way is not about thre hundred miles.

Cayro. To this famous Citie of Cayro, I came the sixt day of August, where I found Master William Alday, and William Caesar, who entertained me in very good sort. Master Caesar brought me to see the Pyramides, which are three in number, one whereof King Pharao made for his owne tombe, the tombe it selfe is almost in the top of it: the monuments be high, and in forme 4. square, and euery of the squares is as long, as a man may shoot a rowing arrowe, and as high as a church. I sawe also the ruines of the Citie of Memphis, hard by these Pyramides.

The house of Ioseph is yet standing in Cayro, which is a sumptuous thing, having a place to walke in of 56. mightie pillars, all gilt with gold, but I sawe it not, being then lame.

The 11. day of August, the land was cut at Cayro, to let in the water of the river of Nilus, which was done with great joy, and triumph.

The 12. of August, I set from Cayro, towards Alexandria againe, and came thither the 14. of August. The 26. day, there was kept a great feast of the Turkes, and Moores, which lasted two daies, and for a day they neuer ceased shooting off of great Ordnance.

The English Consul at Argier. From Alexandria I sailed to Argier, where I lay with Master Typron, Consul of the English nation, who vsed me most kindly, and at his owne charge. He brought me to the kings Court, and into the presence of the King, to see him, and the manners of the Court: the King doth onely beare the name of a King, but the greatest government is in the hands of the souldiers.

The King of Poranca is prisoner in Argier, who coming to Constantinople, to acknowledge a dutie to the great Turke, was betrayed by his owne Nephew, who wrote to the Turke, that he went onely as a spie, by that meanes to get his kingdome. I heard at Argier of seven gallies that were at that time cast away at a towne called Formenera, thre of them were of Argier, the other foure were the Christians.

We found here also thirtene English men, which were by force of weather put into the Bay of Tunes, where they were very ill vsed by the Moores, who forced them to leaue their bark: whereupon they went to the Council of Argier, to require a redress and remedie for the injury. They were all belonging to the shippe, called the Golden Noble of London, whereof Master Birde is owner. The Master was Stephen Haselwood, and the Captaine Edmond Bence.

The third day of December, the pinnace called the Mooneshine of London, came to Argier with a prize, which they tooke upon the coast of Spaine, laden with sugar, hides, and ginger: the pinnace also belonging to the Golden Noble: and at Argier they made sale both of shippe and goods, where we left them as our coming away, which was the seventh day of January:

A true report of a worthie fight, performed in the voyage from Turke, by five shippes of London, against eleven gallies, and two fri-gats of the King of Spaines, at Pantalarea within the Streights, Anno, 1586. Written by Philip Iones.

The Merchants of London, being of the incorporation for the Turke trade, hauing receaued intelligence, and aduertisements, from time to time, that the King of Spaine grudging at the prosperitie of this kingdome, had not onely of late arrested all English shippes, bodies, and goods, in Spaine, but also malign-ing the quiet traffike which they vsed to and in the dominions, and prouinces, vnder the obedience of the Great Turke, had giuen order to the Capitaines of his gallies, in the Leuant, to hinder the passage of all English shippes, and to endeavour by their best meanes, to intercept, take, and spolie them, their persons, and goods: they hereupon thought it their best course to sette out their flecte for Turke, in such strength and abilitie for their defence, that the purpose of their Spanish enemy, might the better be preuened, and the voyage accomplished with greater securitie to the men and shippes. For which cause, five sai. and foure shippes, appertaining to London, and intending onely a Sparchaues voyage, were provided and furnished with all things belonging to the seas, the names whereof were these.

1. The Marchant Royall, a very braue and goodly shippe, and of great report.
2. The Tobie.
3. The Edward Bonauenture.
4. The William, and Iohn.
5. The Susan.

These five departing from the coast of England, in the month of Nouember, 1585, kept together as one flecte, till they came as high as the Isle of Sicilie, within the Leuant. And there according to the order and direction of the voyage, each shippe began to take leaue of the rest, and to separate himselfe, setting his course for the particular porte, whereunto he was bound: one for Tripolis in Syria, another for Constantinople, the chiefe Citie of the Turkes Empire, situated vpon the coast of Romania, called of olde Thracia, and the rest to those places, whereunto they were piously appointed. But before they deuided themselves, they altogether consulted, of and about a certaine and speciall place for their meeting againe after the lading of their goods at their severall portes. And in conclusion, the generall agreement was to meete at Zante, an Islande nere to the maine continent of the West part of Morea, well known of all the Pilots, & thought to be the fittest place for their Rendeuous. Concerning which meeting, it was also couenanted on eche side, and promised, that whatsoeuer ship of these 5. should first arrive at Zante, should there stay and expect the coming of the rest of the flecte, for the space of 20. dayes. This being done, the man made his best hast according as winde and weather would serue him to fulfill his course, and to dispatch his businesse; and no neede was there to admonish or incourage any man, seeing no time was ill spent, nor oportunitie omitted on any side, in the performance of eche mans buerie, according to his place.

It fell out that the Tobie which was bound for Constantinople had made such good speede, and gotten such good weahter, that the first of all the rest came backe to the appointed place of Zante, and not forgetting the former conclusion, did there call ancre, attending the arrivall of the rest of the flecte, which accordingly (their busines first perfoymed) failed not to keepe promise. The first next after the Tobie was the Royal marchant, which together with the William & Iohn came from Tripolis in Syria, and arrived at Zante within the compasse of the foresaide time limited.
 These ships in token of the ioy on all parts conceiued for their happy meeting, spared not to dishearging of their ordnance, the sounding of drummes and trumpets, the speading of Ensignes, with other warlike and ioyfull behaviours, expressing by these outward signes, the inward gladnesse of their myndes, being all as ready to ioyne together in mutuall consent to resist the cruel enemy, as ioyne in sporting manner they made mythe and pastime among themselves. These thre had not bene long in the haven, but the Edward Bonauenture also, together with the Susan her consyle, were come from Venice with their lading, the sight of whom increased the ioy of the rest, and they no lesse glad of the presence of the others, saluted them in most friendly and kinde sort, according to the maner of the seas: and whereas some of these ships stode at that instant in some want of

of victuals they were all content to stay in the port, till the necessities of each Shippe were supplied, and nothing wanted to set out for their returne.

In this port of Zante, the newes was fresh and current, of two severall armies, and fleets, provided by the King of Spaine, and lying in waite to intercept them: the one consisting of 30. strong gallies, so well appointed in all respects for the warre, that no necessarie thing wanted: and this fleet hovered about the Streights of Gibraltar. The other armie had in it 20. Gallies, whereof some were of Sicilie, and some of the Island of Malta, under the charge and government of Iohn Andreas Dorea, a Captaine of name, serving the King of Spaine. These two victuals and strong fleets, waited and attended in the Seas for none, but the English Shippes, and no doubt, made their accompt and sure reckoning, that not a Shippe should escape their furie. And the opinion also of the Inhabitantes of the Isle of Zante, was, that in respect of the number of gallies in both these armies, having received such streight commandement from the king, our King and men being but few, and litle, in comparison of them, it was a thing in humane reason impossible, that we should passe either without spoiling, if we resisted, or without composition at the last, and acknowledgement of dutie to the Spanish king.

But it was neither the report of the attendance of these armies, nor the opinions of the people, nor any thing els, that could daune, or dismay the courages of our men, who grounding themselves upon the goodnes of their cause, & the promise of God, to be delivred from such as with our reason, sought their destruction, carried resolute mindes, notwithstanding all impediments to adventure thorough the seas, and to finish their navigation, maugre the beautes of the Spanish soldiers. But least they should seeme too carelesse, and too secure of their estate, and by laying the whole and entire burden of their safetie, upon Gods providence, should foolishly presume altogether of his helpe, and neglect the meanes which was put into their hands, they failed not to enter into counsell among themselves, and to deliberate advisedly for their best defense. And in the end, with generall consent, the Marchant Royall was appointed Admirall of the Fleets, and the Tobie Viceadmirall, by whose orders the rest promised to be directed, and each Shippe vowed not to speake from another, whatsoever extremitie should fall out, but to stand to it to the death, for the honour of their Countrey, and the frustrating of the hope of the ambitious, and proud enemye.

Thus in good order they left Zante, and the Castle of Grecia, and committed themselves to gaine to the seas, and proceeded in their course and voyage, in quietnes, without sight of any enemye, till they came neere to Pantalarea, an Island so called, betwixt Sicilie, and the coast of Africa: into sight whereof, they came the 13. day of July, 1586. And the same day in the morning, about 7. of the clocke, they descried 17. sailes in number, which were of the gallies, lying in waite of purpose for them, in and about that place. As soone as the English Shippes had spied them, they by and by, according to a common order, made themselves ready for a fight, laid out their Ordnance, stooped, charged, and primed them, displayed their ensignes, and left nothing indone to arme themselves thoroughly. In the meane time, the gallies moze and moze approached the Ship, and in their banners there appeared the armes of the Isles of Sicilia, and Malta, being all as then in the service and pay of the Spaniards. Immediately, both the Admiralls of the gallies, sent from each of them a frigate, to the Admirall of our English Shippes, which being come neere them, the Christian frigate first hailed them, and demanded of them whence they were: they answered that they were of England, the armes whereof appeared in their colours. Whereupon the said frigate communicated with them, & asked, why they delated to send or come with their captaines and purfers to Don Pedro de Leiva, their Generall, to acknowledge their dutie, & obedience to him, in the name of the Spanish king, Lord of those seas: our men replied, & said, that they owed no such dutie or obedience to him, & therefore would acknowledge none, but commanded the frigate to depart with that answer, & not to stay longer a halving, upon her peril. With that away she went, & by comes toward them the other frigate of Malta, & she in like sort hailed the Admirall, & would needs know whence they were, & where they had bene. Our Englishmen in the Admirall, not obtaining an answer, tolde them that they were of England, Merchants of London, had bene at Turkie, & were now returning home: & to be requited in this case, they also demanded of the frigate whence she, & the rest of the gallies were: the messenger answered, we are of Malta, & for mine owne part, my name is Cavalero. These gallies are in service, & pay to the king of Spaine, under the conduct of Don Pedro de Leiva, a noble man of Spaine, who hath bene commanded hither by the King, with this present force and armie, of purpose to intercept you. You shal therefore (quoth he) be well to repaire to him, to know his pleasure, he is a noble man of good behaviour & curtesie, & meanes you no ill. The Captaine of the English Admirall, whose name was Master Edward Wilkinson now one of the 6. masters of her Majesties royal navie, replied, & said, we purpose not at this time our & curtesie, & means Mastur Edward Wilkinson

we purpose not at this time to make trall of Don Pedro his curtesie, whereof we are suspitious and doubtfull, and not with one good cause: using withall good words: the messenger, and willing him to come aboard him, promittin securitie and good usage, that thereby he might the better know the Spaniards minde:

whereupon he in deed left his frigate, and came aboard him, whom he entertained in friendly sort, and caused a cuppe of wine to be brayne for him, which he tooke, and begame, with his cappe in his hand, and with returned termes, to drinke to the health of the Queene of England, speaking very honorable of her Maiestie, and giuing good speeches of the courteous usage, and intertainment that he himselfe had receiued in London, at the time that the Duke of Alensou, brother to the late French King was last in England: and after he had well drunke, he tooke his leaue, speaking well of the sufficientie and goodnesse of our shippes, and especiallie of the Merchaut Royall, which he confessed to haue seene before, riding in the Thames neere London. He was no sooner come to Don Pedro de Leuia, the Spanish generall, but he was sent off againe, and returned to the Eng lish Admirall, saying that the pleasure of the generall was this, that either their captaines, mai sters, and puruers should come to him with speed, or els he would set upon them, and either take them or slake them. The replie was made by M. Wilkinson aforesaid, that not a man should come to him: and for the byagge and threat of Don Pedro, it was not that Spanissh byauado that should make them yeeld a roe to their hindrance, but they were as readie to make resistance, as he to offer an iniurie. Whereupon Caualiero the messenger left byagging, and began to perswade them in quiet sort, and with many words, but all his laboz was to no purpose, and as his threat did nothing terrifie them, so his persuation did nothing moue them, to doe that which he required. At the last he increased to haue the merchant of the Admirall caried by him as a messenger to the generall, that so he might be satisfied, and assured of their mindes by one of their owne companie. But M. Wil kinson would agree to no such thing, although Richard Rowie the merchant himselfe seemed willing to be employed in that message, and labozed by reasonable persuations to induce M. Wil kinson to grant it, as hoping to be an occasion by his presence and discreet answers to satisfie the generall, and thereby to saue the effusion of Christi an blood, if it should grow to a battell. And he knew so much the more willing to be sent, by how much deeper the othes and protestations of this Caualiero were, that he would (as he was a true knighe and a souldior) deliuer him backe a gain in safetie to his companie. Albeit, M. Wilkinson, which by his long experience had receiued sufficient triall of Spanissh inconstancie and periurie, wisshed him in no case to put his life and li bertie in hazard vpon a Spaniards oth. But at last, vpon much intreatie, he yeilded to let him goe to the generall, thinking in deed that good speeches, and answers of reason would haue con tented him, whereas otherwise, refusal to doe so, might peraduenture haue prouoked the more discontentment.

Spanissh Rowie therefore passing to the Spanissh generall, the rest of the gallies hauing espied him, thought in deed that the English were rather determined to yeeld then to fight, and therefore came flocking about y frigate, euerie man crying out, Que nuemas, que nuemas, haue these English men yeilded: the frigate answered, No so, they neither haue, nor purpose to yeeld, onely they haue sent a man of their companie to speake with our generall: and being come to the gallie where can he was, he throwd himselfe to M. Rowie in his armor, his gard of souldiors attending vpon him in armor also, and begame to speake very proudly in this sort: Thou Englishman, from whence is your fleet, why stand ye aloofe off, know ye not your dutie to the Catholike king, whose person I here represent: Where are your billes of lading, your letters, passports, and the chiefe of your men? Thinke ye my attendance in these seas to be in vaine, or my person to no purpose? Let all these things be done out of hand as I command, vpon paine of my further displeasure & the spoile of you all: These wordes of the Spanissh generall were not so outrageously pronounced, as they were mildly answered by mastur Rowie, who, tolde him that they were all merchant men, being traffike in honest sort, and seeking to passe quietly, if they were not byged further then reason: as for the king of Spaine, he thought (for his part) that there was amitie betwixt him and his soue reigne the Queene of England, so that neither he nor his officers should goe about to offer any such iniurie to English merchants, who as they were farre from giuing offence to any man, so they would be loath to take an abuse at the handes of any, or lie downe to their losse, where their abili tie was able to make defence. And as touching his commandement aforesaid, for the acknow ledging of dutie; in such particular sort, he tolde him, that where there was no dutie owing, there none should be performed, assuring him that their whole companie, and shippes in generall, stood resolute vpon the negative, and would not yeeld to any such vntreasonable demand, ioynd with such importunous and absolute manner of commanding. They then said he, if they will neither come to yeeld, nor shew obedience to me in the name of my king, I will either slake them or bring them to

to harbor, and so tell them from me. Which that the frigot came away with Sp. Rowit, and brought him aboard the English Admirall againe, according to promise: who was no sooner entred in, but by and by defiance was sounded on both sides, the Spaniards hewed off the noses of the gallees, that nothing might hinder the leuell of the shot, and the English on the other side courageously prepared themselves to the combat, euery man according to his roome, bent to performe his office with alacritie and diligence. In the meane time a cannon was discharged from out the Admirall of the gallees, which being the onset of the fight, was presently answered by the English Admirall with a culuering: so the skirmish began, and grew hot and terrible, there was no powder nor shot spared: ech English shippe matched it selfe in good order against two Spanish gallees, besides the inequality of the frigats on the Spaniards side: and although our men performed their parts with singular valure, according to their strength, insomuch that the enimie as amazed therewith would often times pause and stay, and consult what was best to be done, yet they ceased not in the midst of their businesse to make prayer to almighty God the reuenger of all euils, and the giuer of victories, that it would please him to assist them in y good quarrell of theirs, in defending themselves against so proud a tyrant, to teach their hands to war, & their fingers to fight, that y glory of the victory might rebound to his name, and to the honoz of true religion, which the insolent enemy sought to much to ouerthrow. Contrarily, the foolish Spaniards they cryed out according to their maner, uoe to God, but to our Lady (as they terme the virgin Spary) saying, O Lady helpe, O blessed Lady giue vs the victory, and the honoz therof shalbe thine. Thus with blowes and papers on both sides the fight continued furious and sharpe, and doubtfull a long time to which part the victory would incline: till at the last the Admirall of the gallees of Sicilie began to waurre from the fight, & to holde by her side for feare of sinking, and after her went also two others in like case, whom all the foze of them inclosed, laboring by all their meanes to keepe them about water, being ready by the foze of English shot which they had receiu'd to perish in the seas: and what slaughter was done among the Spaniards themselves, the English were vncertaine, but by a probable coniecture apparant a far off, they supposed their losse was so great, that they wanted men to continue the charging of their pieces: wherupon with shame and dishonoz, after sixe houres spent in the battell, they with their themselves: and the English contented in respect of their deepe lading rather to continue their voyage then to follow the chase, ceased from further blowes, with the losse onely of two men slaine, amongst them all, and another hurt in his arme, whom Sp. Wilkinson with his good words & friendly promises did so comfort, that he nothing esteemed the smart of his wound in respect of the honoz of the victory, and the shameful repulse of the enemy.

A fight of sixe houres.

This with dueittfull thanks to the mercy of God for his gracious assistance in that danger, the English ships proceeded in theirs navigation, & comming as high as Alger, a port to lye vpon the coast of Barbarie they fell with it, of purpose to refresh themselves after their wearinesse, & to take in such supplie of fresh water & victuals, as they needed: they were no sooner entred into the port, but immediatly the king therof sent a messenger to the ships to know what they were, with which messenger the chiefe maister of ech ship repaired to the king, and acquainted him not onely with the state of their ships, in respect of marchandize, but with the late fight which they had passed with the Spanish gallees, reporting euery particular circumstance in word as it fell out in action: wherof the said king shewed himselfe maruellous glad, intertaining them in the best sort, and promising abundant reliefe of all their wances, making generall proclamation in the citie vpon paine of death, that no man of what degree or state soeuer he were, should presume either to hinder them in their affaires, or to offer them any manner of iniury in body or goods. By vertue wherof they dispatched all things in excellent good sort, with all fauoz and peaceableness: onely such prisoners & captiues of the Spaniards as were in the citie, seeing the good vantage which they receiued, & hearing also what seruice they had performed against the foze laid gallees, grudged exceedingly against them, & sought as much as they could to practise some mischief against them: and one amongst the rest seeing an Englishman alone in a certaine lane of the citie, came vpon him suddenly, and with his knife thrust him in the side, yet made no such great wound, but that it was easily recovered. The English company hearing of it, acquainted the king with the fact, who immediatly sent both for the party that had receiued the wound, and the offender also, and caused an executioner in the presence of himselfe and the English, to chastise the slaue euen to death, which was performed to the end that no man should presume to commit the like part, or to do any thing in contempt of his royall commandment.

The English hauing receiued this good iustice at the kings hands, & all other things that they wanted, or could craue for the furnishing of their shippes, took their leaue of him, and of the rest of their friends, that were resident in Alger, and put out to sea, looking to meet with the second arme of the Spanish king, which waited for them about the mouth of the strights of Cybalat, which with S. Rowat, and brought laughter was done among the diable countere apparant a far his assistance in that danger, the quainted him not onely with the which they had p: sessed with the ely sent both for the party that out in the presence of himselfe formed to the end that no man pe of his royall commandement, s, & all other things that they leante of him, and of the rest of ing to meet with the second arof the straight of Gibraltar, which

which they were of necessitie to passe, But comming nere to the said straight, it pleased God to raile at that instant, a very darke and mistie fogge so that one shippe could not discern another, if it were 40 paces off: by means whereof, together with the notable faire Easterne windes that then blew most fixe for their course, they passed with great speed through the straight, and might haue passed with that good gale, had there bene 500 galleys to withstand them, and the ayre neuer so clere for euery shippe to be seene. But yet the Spanish galleys had a sight of them when they were come within three English miles of the towne, & made after them in all possible haste, and although they saw that they were farre out of their reach, yet in a vaine furie & foolish pride, they shot off their ordnance, and made a fire in the sea as if they had bene in the midst of them, which vanity of theirs ministered to our men noceable matter of pleasure and mirth, seeing men to fight with shadowes, and to take so great paines to so small purpose.

But thus it pleased God to deride, and delude all the forces of that proud Spanish king, which he had provided of purpose to distresse the English, who notwithstanding, passed through both his armies, in the one, little hurt, and in the other nothing touched, to the glory of his immortall name, the honoy of our prince and countray, and the iust commendation of each mans seruice, performed in that voyage.

The voyage of M. Iohn Eldred to Tripolis in Syria by sea, and from thence by land and riuer to Babylon and Balsara. 1583.

Departed out of London in the ship called the Tyger in the companie of S. John Newberie, S. Ralph Fitch, and six or seuen other honest merchants vpon Shroue munday 1583, and arriued in Tripolis of Syria the first of May next insuing: at our landing we went on maping vpon S. Georges Island, a place where Christians dying aboard the shippes are wont to be buried. In this cite our English marchantes haue a consull, & our nation abide together in one house with him called Fondeghi Ingles, builded of stone, square, in maner like a cloister, and euery man his seuerall chamber, as it is the vse of all other Christians of seuerall nations. This towne standeth vnder a part of the mountaine of Libanus two English miles distant from the port: on the side of which port, trending in foyme of an halfe moone, stand sixe blockeboules of smal foyses, where in is some very good artillerie, and the foyses are kept with about an hundred Janissaries. Eighte before this towne from the seaward, is a banke of mouing sand, which gathereth and increaseth with the Western windes, in such sort, that, according to an olde prophetic among them, this banke is like to swallow vp and ouertwheime the towne: for euery yeere it increaseth and eateth vp many gardens, although they vse all pollicie to diminish the same, and to make it firme ground. The cite is about the bignesse of Byzantion, and walled about, though the walles be of no great foice. The chief strength of the place is in a citadell, which standeth on the South side within the walles, and ouerlooketh the whole towne, and is stronglie kept with 200 Janissaries and good artillerie. A riuer passeth through the middelt of the cite, wherewith they water their gardens and mulberie trees, on which there grow abundance of silke woymes, wherewith they make great quantity of very white silke, which is the chiefest naturall commoditie to be found in and about this place.
This towne is moxe frequented with Christian marchantes, to wit, Venetians, Genouois, Florentines, Spartians, Sicilians, Ragules, and lately with Englishmen, then any other port of the Turks dominions. From Tripolis I departed the 14 of May with a carauan, passing three dayes vnder the ridge of moue Libanus, at the end wherof we arriued in a cite called Hammah, which standeth on a goodly plaine replenished with corne & cotton ywooll. On these mountaines which he passeth, grow great quantity of gail trees, which are somewhat like our oaks, but lesser & moxe crooked: on the best tree a man shall not finde aboue a pound of gail: s. This towne of Hammah is fallen, and falleth moxe & moxe to decay, and at this day there is scarce one halfe of the wall standing, which hath bene very strong and faire: but because it cost many mens liues to win it, the Turke will not haue it repayed, and hath written in the Arabian tongue ouer the castle gate, which standeth in the middelt of the towne, these woordes: Cursed be the father & the sonne that shall lay their hands to the repairing heerof. Refreshing our selues one day here, we passed forward with cauels three dayes moxe vntill we came to Aleppo, where we arriued the 21 of May. This is the greatest place of trade for a dry towne that is in all those parts: for herbe refoze Ietues, Carta-gians, Perlians, Armenians, Egyptians, Indians, & many sorts of Christians, & inioy freedom of their consciences, & bring thither many kindes of rich merchandizes. In the middelt of this towne also standeth a goodly castle raised on hie with a garison of 4 or 5 hundred Janissaries, within foure

miles round about are goodly gardens and vineyards and trees, which beare goodly fruit were vnto the rivers side, which is but small, the walles are about thre English miles in compass, but the suburbs are almost as much more. The towne is greatly peopled. We departed from thence with our camels the last of May with Sp. John Herberic and his companie, and came to Birrah in thre dayes, being a small towne situated vpon the riuer Euphrates, where it beginneth first to take his name, being here gathered into one channell, whereas before it runneth downe in many folde branches, and is therefore called by the people of the countrey by a name which signifieth a thousand heads. There is plentie of victualles wherof we all furnished our selues for our long journey downe the aforesaid riuer. And according to the manner of those that trauell downe by water, we prepared a small barke for the conuoyance of our selues and of our goods. These boates are flatte bottomed, because the riuer is shallow in many places: and when men trauell in the moneth of Julie, August, and September, the water being then at the lowest, they are constrained to carie with them a spare boate or two to lighten their owne boates: if they chance to fall on the shoalders. We were eight and twentieth dayes vpon the water betwene Birrah and Felugia, where we disembarked our selues and our goodes. Eueny night after the Sunne setteth, we tie our barke to a stake, goe on land to gather stiches, and set on our pot with rice or hused wheat, and hauing supped, the merchants lie aboard the barke, and the mariners vpon the shores side as nere as they can into the same. In many places vpon the riuers side we mette with troopes of Arabians, of whom we bought milke, butter, egges, and lambes, and gaue them in barter, (for they care not for money) glasses, combes, corall, amber, to hang about their armes and neckes, and for churned milke we gaue them bread and pomgranat peeles, wherewith they vse to tamic their goats skinnes which they churme with ball. Their haire, apparell, and colour are altogether like to those that abound Egyptians, which heretofore haue gone about in England. Their women all without exception, weare a great round ring in one of their nostrils, of golde, silver, or yron, according to their abilitie, and about their armes & smalles of their legs they haue hoopcs of golde, silver, or yron. All of them as well women and children, as men, are very great swimmers, and often times swimming they brought vs milke to our barke in vessels, vpon their heads. These people are very cheerefull, which I proued to my cost: for they stole a casket of mine, with thinges of good value in the same, from vnder my mans head as he was asleepe: and therefore traouellers keepe good watch as they passe downe the riuer. Euphrates at Birrah is about the breadth of the Chames at Lambeth, and in some places narrower, in some broader: it runneth very swiftly, almost as fast as the riuer of Trent: it hath diuers foyses of fish in it, but all are scaled, some as bigge as salmons, like barbels. We landed at Felugia the eight and twentieth of June, where we made our abode seuen dayes, for lacke of camels to carie our goods to Babylon: the beate at that time of the yeere is such in those partes, that men are loath to let out their camels to trauell. This Felugia is a village of some hundred houses, and a place appointed for discharging of such goods as come downe the riuer: the inhabitants are Arabians. Not finding camels here, we were constrained to vnload our goods, and hired an hundred asses to carie our English merchandizes ouer to New Babylon, ouer a long desert, in crossing wherof we spent eightene hours traouelling by night, and part of the morning, to avoid the great heat.

In this place which we crossed ouer, stood the olde mightie citie of Babylon, many olde ruines wherof are easilie to be seene by day light, which I John Eldred haue often beheld, at my good leisure, hauing made thre voyages betwene the New citie of Babylon and Aleppo ouer this desert. Here also are yet standing the ruines of the olde towne of Babell, which being vpon a plaine ground seemeth a farre off very great, but the nearer you come to it, the lesse and lesse it appeereth: sundry times I haue gone thither to see it, and found the remanens yet standing about a quarter of a mile in compass, and almost as high as the stone worke of Pauls steeple in London, but it is much bigger. The hyckes remaining in this most auncient monument be halfe a yard thicke, and thre quarters of a yard long, being dyed in the Sunne onely, and betwene euery course of hyckes there lieth a course of mattes made of canes, which remaine founde and not perished, although they had bene laped within one yeere. The citie of New Babylon ioynech vpon the aforesaid small desert where the Olde citie was, and the riuer of Cygris runneth close vnder the wall, and they may if they will open a sluice, and let the water of the same runne round about the towne. It is about two English miles in compass, and the inhabitant's generall y speak thre languages, to wit, the Persian, Arabian and Turkish tongues: the people are of the Spaniards complexion: and the women generallie weare in one of the nostrils of their noses a ring like a wedding ring, but somewhat greater, with a pearle and a Turkish Stone set therein: and thus they doe be they neuer so poore.

This is a place of very great traffique, and a very great thonghsare from the East Indies to Aleppo. The towne is very well furnished with victuals which come downe the river of Tigris from Mosul which was called Ninine in olde time. They bring these victuals and diuers sortes of merchandises vpon raftes bozue vpon goatcs skins blowne vp ful of wind in maner of bladders.
 And when they haue discharged their goods, they sell the raftes for fire, and let the wind out of their goatcs skins, and carry them home agame vpon their asses by land to make other voyages downe the river. The building here is most of brycke dyed in the sunne, and very little of no stone to be found: their houses are all flat roofed and lowe. They haue no fire for eight moneths together, nor almost any cloudes in the skie, night nor day. Their Winter is in Nouember, December, Ja nuarie and Februarie, which is as warme as our Sommer in England in a maner. This I know by good experience, because my abode at seuerall times in this cite of Babylon, hath bene at the less the space of two yeeres. As we come to the cite, we passe ouer the river of Tigris on a great brydge made with boates chained together with two mightie chaines of iron. From thence we departed in flat bottom barkes moze strong and greater then those of Euphrates, and were eight and twen tie dayes also in passing downe this river to Balsara, but we might haue done it in eightene or tesse, if the water had bene higher. Upon the waters side by the way stand diuers towncs resem bling much the names of the old prophets: the first towne they call Ozeah, and another Zecchi ah. Before we come to Balsara by one dayes iourney, the two rivers of Tigris and Euphrates meete, and there standeth a Caste called Curra kept by the Turkes, where all merchants pay a small custome. Here the two rivers ioined together, begin to be eight or nine miles broad: here al so it beginneth to ebbe and flow, and the water ouerflowing maketh the counrey all about very fr itle of coye, rice, pulse, and dates. The towne of Balsara is a mile and an halfe in circuit: all the buildings, castle and wals, are made of brycke dyed in the sunne. The Turke hath here sixe hun dred Janineries, besides other souldiours continually in garison and pay, but his chief strength is of gallies which are about sixe and twentie or thirtie very faire and furnished with goodly ordi nance. To this port of Balsara come monethly diuers ships from Ormuz, laden with all sortes of Indian merchandise, as spices, drugs, Indico, and Calcut cloth. These ships are usually from foure to three foye tonnes, hauing their planks sowed together with coye made of the barke of Dates, and in stead of Deane they vse the shuicrings of the barke of the Apprees, and of the same they also make their tarking. They haue no kind of yron worke belonging to these vessels, but onely their ankercs. From this place sixe dayes sayling downe the Gulfe, they goe to a place called Baharem in the midway to Ormuz. There they fish for pearles foure moneths in the yeere, to wit, in June, Iulij, August, and September. My abode in Balsara was full sixe moneths, during which time I receiued diuers letters from master John Newberie from Ormuz, who as hee passed that way with her maiesties letters to Yeladin el Kubar, that is, Yeladin the great, king of Cambaia, and vnto the mightie Emperour of China, was traiterously there arrested, and all his company by the Portugals, and afterward sent prisoner to Goa: where after a long and cruell imprisonment, he and his companions were deliuered vpon suertes, not to depart the towne with out leaue, at the sute of one father Thomas Struens, an English religious man which they found there, but what became afterward of thre of them, is not knowen vnto this day. The fourth which was a painter called John Storie, became religious in the Colledge of S. Paul in Goa, as we vnderstood by their letters. I and my companion William Shales hauing departed our business at Balsara imbarcad our selues in company of securtie barkes all laden with merchan dise, hauing euery barke fourtene men to draw them, like our Westerne bargemen on y<sup>e</sup> Thames, and we were foure dayes comming by against the streame to Babylon, where arriuing and paying our custome, we with all other sortes of merchants bought vs camels, hired vs men to lade and drawe them, furnished our selues with rice, butter, bisket, honie made of Dates, Onions and Dates: and euery merchant bought a proportion of liue mutons, and hired certaine shepheards to drawe them with vs: we also bought vs tentes to lie in, and to put our goods vnder, & in this our Carauan were foure thousand Camels laden with spices and other rich merchandises. These Ca melcs will liue very well two or thre dayes without water: their feeding is on Tuffles, Clove wood, Bagdalene and other ston y weeds which they find vpon the way. The gouernment and berding of all quartels and duties to be paid, the whole Carauan committeth to one speciall rich merchant of the company, of whom honestie they conceiue best. In passing from Babylon to A leppo, we spent foure dayes, traouailing twente and foure and twentie miles a day, resting one selues commonly from two of the clocke in the afternoone, vntill thre in the morning, at which time we begin to take our iourney. Eight dayes iourney from Babylon toward Aleppo, nere vnto a is a valley wherein are many springes thowring out aboundantly at great mouthes, a kinde of black substance like unto tarre, which serueth all the countrey to make stanch their barkes and boates: euerie one of these springes make a noise like vnto a smiches foage in the blowing and puffing out of this matter, which neuer ceaseth night nor day, and the noise may be heard a mile off continually. This vale swaloweth up all heauie things that come vpon it. The people of the countrey call it in their language Babil gehenam, that is to say, Hell doore. As we passed through these deserts, we saw certaine wild beasts, as wild asses all white, Roebucks, wolues, leopards, foxes, and many hares, whereof we chased and killed many. Aborise, the king of the wandring Arabians in these deserts, hath a dutie of foerie shillings sterling, vpon euery Camels lode, which he sendeth his officers to receiue of the Carauans, and in consideration hereof, he taketh vpon him to conduct the said Carauans if they need his helpe, and to defend them against certaine prowling cheeues. I and my companion William Shales came to Aleppo with the Carauan the eleuenth of June, 1584, where we were hospitably receiued twentie miles distant from the towne by master William Barret our Consul, accompanied with his people and Janissaries, who fell sick immediately and departed this life within eight dayes after, and elected before his death, M. Anthonie Bate Consul of our English nation in his place, who laudably supplied the said gouernment thre yeeres. In which meane time I made two voiages moxe vnto Babylon, and returned by the way aforesaid, ouer the deserts of Arabia, And afterwards as one desirous to see other partes of the countrey, I went from Aleppo to Antioch, which is distant thence 60. English miles, and from thence went down to Tripolis, where going aboard a small vessel, I arriued at Ioppe, and traualled to Rama, Lyria, Gaza, Ierusalem, Bethleem, to the riuer of Iordban, and the sea of lake of Sodome, and returned backe to Ioppe, and from thence by sea to Tripolis, of which places because many others haue published large discourses, I surcease to write. Within few dayes after imbarcking my selfe at Tripolis the 22. of December, I arriued (God be thanked) in safetie here in the riuer of Thames with diuers English merchants, the 26. of March, 1588, in the Hercules of London, which was the richest ship of English merchants goods that euer was knowen to come into this realme.

The Ambassage of M. Henrie Roberts, one of the sworne Esquires of her Maiesties person, from her highnesse to Mully Hamet Emperour of Marocco, and king of Fes, and Sus, in the yere 1585 who remained there as Liger for the space of 3. yeere. Written briefly by himselfe.

Vpon an incorporation granted to the companie of Barbarie Marchants resident in London, I Henrie Roberts one of her Maiesties Sworne Esquires of her per son, was appointed her highnesse messenger, and Agent unto the aforesaid Mully Hamet Emperour of Marocco, king of Fes and Sus. And after I had received my Commission, instructions, and her Maiesties letters, I departed from Lon don the 14. of August in the yere 1585, in a tall Shippe called the Ascension, in company of the Minion and Hopewel, and we all arrived in safetie at Alasi a port of Barbarie, the 14. of September next following. The Alcaide of the towne (being the kings officer there, and as he were Governor of the place) received mee with all humanitie and honour, according to the customs of the countrey, lodging me in the chiefe house of the towne, from whence I dispatched a messenger (which in their language they call a Trottero) to advertise the Emperour of my ar rival: who immediatly gaue order, and sent certaine souldiers for my guard and conduct, and hor ses for my selfe, and mules for mine owne and my companies carriages. Thus being accompa nied with Sr. Richard Evans, Edward Saltcor, and other English marchants resident there in the countrey, with my traine of Moores and cariages, I came at length to the river of Ansis, which is within 4. miles of Marocco: and there by the water side I pitched my tents under the Olive trees: where I mette with all the English marchants by themselves, and the French, the Dutch, and divers other Chyilians, which attended my coming. And after we had dined, and spent one the heat of the day, about 4. of the clocke in the afternoone wee all set forwarde toward the citie of Marocco, where wee arrived the said day, being the 14. of September, and I was lodged by the Emperours appointment in a faire house in the Iudaria or Iurie, which is the place where the Jewes have their abode, and is the fairest place, and quiettest lodging in all the citie.

After I had rested my selfe three dayes, I had access to the kings presence, delivered my mes sage and her Maiesties letters, and was received with all humanitie, and had favourable audience from time to time for thre yeeres: during which space I abode there in his Court, as her Ma iesties Agent and Liger: and whensoever I had occasion of business, I was admitted either to his Maiestie himselfe, or to his vice Roy, whose name was Alcaide Brene Saphiana, a very wise and discrete person, & the chiefeest about his Maiestie. The particulars of my service for divers good and reasonable causes, I forbeare here to put downe in writing.

After leave obtained, and an honourable reward bestowed by the Emperour upon me, I depar ted from his Court at Marocco the 18. of August 1588. toward a garden of his, which is called Shoresdenares, where hee promised mee I should stay but one day for his letters: howbeit, upon some occasion I was stayed untill the 14. of September at the kings charges, with 40. or 50. horse attending upon me for my guard and safetie.

From thence at length I was conducted with all things necessarie to the port of Sanra Cruz, being the dayes journey from Marocco, and the place where our shippes doe commonly take in their lading, where I arrived the 21. of the same moneth. In this port I stayed 43. dayes, and at length the second of November I imbarqued myselfe, and one Marshok Reiz a Captaine and a Gentleman, which the Emperour sent with mee upon an Embassage to her Maiestie: and after much toment and foule weather at sea, on the 21. peeres day I came on land at S. Iues in Corne wall, from whence passing by lands both together by towards London, we were met withou the citie with the aylered marchants of the Barbarie companie, well mounted all on horsebacke, to the number of 40. or 50. horse, and so the Embassage and my selfe being both in Coche, entered the Citie by archlight, on Sunday at night the 12. of Januarie 1589.

Right high and mightie Prince, Having vnderstoode from our Agent the great affec tion & good wil which you beare vs, and how great honour and fauoz you shewe him for our sake, to the end to giue vs moze ample testimonie of your friendship, we haue recei ued ver y great contentment & satisfaction, as wel of the vne as of the other: and withall we could not omit to magnifie you, according to your desert. We haue also receiued your letters, and do not a little reioyce therof, because they come from a yince vnto whome we are so much be holden. Our Agent hath writtern vnto vs concerning certaine things which you desire to be sent vnto you from hence. And albeit we wish that wee could particularly satisfie you, as you de sire, yet it is fallen out, that the warres, wherewith at this present we be busted, will not suffer vs fully to doe the same: neuerthelesse, we haue commanded to satisfie you in part, and according as the present necessitie doeth permit vs, as our Agent will declare vnto you moze particularly, hoping you will receiue it in good part, and according to the good will wherewith we graunt the same, And because it hath bene signified vnto vs that you haue promised to procede in iustice against which they may raise against him, nor to doubt that we will not accomplish at large all that he shal

A Patent graunted to certaine marchants of Exceter, and others of the West parts, and of London, for a trade to the riuer of Senega and Gambia in Guinea, 1588.

Lizabeth by the grace of God Queene of England, France and Ireland, sendour of the faith, &c. To our Treasurer and Admirall of England, our Treasurer and Barons of our Exchequer, and all and eury our officers, ministers and subiects whatsoeuer, greeting. Whereas our welbeloued subiects William Brayley, Gilbert Smith, Nicolas Spicer, and John Doricot of our Citie of Exceter marchants, John Yong of Coliton in our Countie of Deuon marchant,

Richard Doderidge of Barnestable in our saide Countie of Deuon Marchant, Antonie Dassel, and Nicolas Turner of our citie of London marchants, haue bene perswaded and earnestly moued by certaine Portingals resident within our Dominions, to undertake and set forwarde a voyage to certaine places on the coast of Guinea: videlicet, from the Southemmost part of the Riuer commonly called by the name of the Riuer of Senega, and from and within that Riuer all along that coast vnto the Southemmost part of another Riuer commonly called by the name of Gambia, and within that Riuer: which, as we are informed, they haue already ones performed accordingly: And for that we are credibly giuen to vnderstand that the further prosecuting of the same voyage, and the due and orderly establishing of an orderly traffique and trade of marchandise into those countreys, will not onely in time be very beneficiall to these our Realmes and dominions, but also be a great succour and reliefe vnto the present distressed estate of those Portingals, who by our princely fauour liue and continue here vnder our protection: And considering that the aduenturing and enterprising of a newe trade can not be a matter of small charge and hazard to the aduenturers in the beginning: we haue therefore thought it conuenient, that our said louing subiects William Brayley, Gilbert Smith, Nicholas Spicer, John Doricot, John Yong, Richard Doderidge, Antonie Dassel, and Nicholas Turner, for the better encouragement to proceede in their saide aduenture and trade in the saide countreys, shall haue the sole vse and exercise thereof for a certaine time. In consideration whereof, and for other weightie reasons and considerations vs specially mouing, of our speciall grace, certaine knowlege and meere motion, we haue giuen & graunted, and by these presents for vs, our heires and successors doe giue and graunte vnto the saide William Brayley, Gilbert Smith, Nicholas Spicer, John Doricot, John Yong, Richard Doderidge, Antonie Dassel and Nicholas Turner, and to eury of them, and to such other our subiects as they or the most part of them shall thinke conuenient to receiue into their companie and societie, to be traders with them into the saide countreys, that they and eury of them by themselves or by their seruants or Factors and none others, shall and may for and during the full space and terme of tenne yeeres next ensuing the date of these presents, haue and enioy the free & whole traffique, trade and seate of marchandise, to & from the saide Southemmost part of the saide Riuer, commonly called by the name of the Riuer of Senega: and from and within that Riuer all along the coast of Guinea, vnto the Southemmost part of the saide Riuer, commonly called by the name of the Riuer of Gambia, and within that Riuer also. And that they the said William Brayley, Gilbert Smith, Nicholas Spicer, John Doricot, John Yong, Richard Doderidge, Antonie Dassel and Nicholas Turner, & eury of them, by themselves or by their seruants or Factors, & such as they or the most part of them shall receiue into their companie and societie, to be traders with them into the saide Countreys (as is aforesaid) and none others, shall and may, for, and during the saide space and terme of tenne yeeres, haue and enioy the sole & whole traffique or trade of marchandise into & from the saide places afoze limited and described, for the buying & selling, bartering and changing of and with any goods, wares, and marchandises whatsoeuer, to be vended had or found, at or within any of the cities, townes, or places situated or being in the countreys, parts & coasts of Guinea before limited, any law, statute, or graunt, matter, custome or priuiledges to the contrary in any wise not withstanding. And for the better ordering, establishing, and governing of the saide societie & companie in the saide trade and traffique of marchandise, and the quiet, orderly and lawfull exercise of the same, We for vs, our heires, and successors, doe by these presents giue and graunt full license and authoritie vnto the said William Brayley, Gilbert Smith, Nicholas Spicer, John Doricot, John Yong, Richard Doderidge, Antonie Dassel, and Nicholas Turner, and to such others as they shall receiue into their saide societie and companie to be traders into the saide countreys, as is aforesaid, and to eury of them, that they or the most part of them shall and may at all conuenient times at their pleasures, assemble and meete together in any place or places conuenient, as well within our principall Navigations, Voyages and Discoveries of the English nation, made to the North and Northeast quarters of the World, with the directions, letters, priuiledges, discourses & obseruations incident to the same.

Certaine testimonies concerning king Arthur and his Conquests of the North Regions, taken out of the historie of the Kings of England, written by Galfridus Monmouthensis, and newly printed at Heidelberge, An. 1587.

Lib. 9. cap. 10.

¶ Anno Christi, 517. Arthurus, secundo regni sui anno, subiugatis totius Hyberniæ partibus, classem suam direxit in Islandiam, eamque debellato populo subiugauit. Ex in diuulgato per cæteras insulas rumore, quod ei nulla Prouincia resistere poterat, Doldauius Rex Gotlandiæ, & Gunfacius Rex Orcadum vitro venerunt, promissioq; vestigali subiectionem fecerunt. Emenis deinde hyeme, reuersus est in Britanniam, statimq; Regni in firmam pacem renouans, moram duodecim annis ibidem fecit.

In the yeere of Christ, 517, king Arthur in the second yeere of his raigne, hauing subdued all partes of Ireland, sailed with his fleet into Island, and brought it and the people thereof vnder his subiection. The rumour, after wards being spread throughout all the other Islands, that no countrey was able to withstand him, Doldauius the king of Godland, and Gunfacius the king of Orkney, came voluntarily vnto him and yielded him their obedience, promising to pay him tribute. The Winter being spent, he returned into England, and establishing his kingdom in perfect peace, he continued there for the space of 12. yeeres.

Lib. 9. cap. 12.

Missis deinde in diuersa regna Legatis, inuitantur tam ex Gallijs, quam ex collateralibus Insulis Cæani, qui ad curiam venire deberent, &c. Et pauld post: Ex collateralibus autem Insulis, Guillaumurius Rex Hyberniæ, Maluasius Rex Islandiæ, Doldauius Rex Gotlandiæ, Gunnafus Rex Orchardum, Lot Rex Noruegiæ, Aschilius Rex Danorum.

As for that king Arthur sending his messengers into diuers kingdoms, he summoned such as were to come to his Court, as well out of France, as out of the adiacent Islands of the Sea, &c. and a little after. From those adiacent Islands came Guillaumurius king of Ireland, Maluasius king of Island, Doldauius king of Godland, Gunnafus king of Orkney, Lot the king of Norway, and Aschilius the king of Denmarke.

Lib. 9. cap. 19.

AT Reges cæterarum insularum, quoniam non duxerant in morem Equites habere, pedes quot quisque debebat promittunt, ita ut ex sex Insulis, videlicet, Hyberniz, Islandiz, Gotlandiz, Orcadum, Noruegiz, atque Daciz, sexies viginti millia essent annumerata.

¶ The same in English.

But the kings of the other Islands, because it was not their custome to beare by horses, promised the king as many footmen, as every man was bound to send: so that out of the six Islands, namely, of Ireland, Island, Gotland, Orkney, Norway, and Denmarke, the king had five hundred thousand souldiers sent him.

A testimonie out of the foresaid Galfridus Monumetensis, concerning the Conquests of Malgo, king of England.

Lib. 11. cap. 7.

Vortiporio successit Malgo, omnium ferè Britanniz pulcherrimus, multorum tyrannorum depulsor, robustus armis, largior cæteris, & vltra modum probitate præclarus. Hic etiam totam Insulam obtinuit, & sex conprouinciales Oceani Insulas: Hyberniam videlicet, atque Islandiam, Gotlandiam, Orcades, Noruegiam, Daciam, adiecit dirissimis præliis; potestati sue.

¶ The same in English.

Malgo succeeded Vortiporius which was the goodliest man in person of all Britaine, a prince that expelled many tyrants. He was strong and valiant in warre, taller then most men that then liued, and exceeding famous for his vertues. This king also obtained the government of the whole Island of Britaine, and by most sharpe battailes he recovered to his Empire the six Islands of the Ocean sea, which before had bene made tributaries by king Arthur, namely, Ireland, Island, Gotland, Orkney, Norway and Denmarke.

A testimonie of the right and appendances of the crowne of the kingdome of Britaine, taken out of Master Lambard his

Peripetula, fol. 137. pag. 2.

Arthurus quæ fuit quondam incleissimus Rex Britonum, vir magnus fuit & animosus, & miles illustris. Parum fuit ei regnum istud, non fuit animus eius contentus regno Britanniz. Subiugauit igitur sibi strenuè Scantiam totam, que modo Noruegia vocatur, & omnes insulas vltra Scantiam, scz. Islandiam, & Grenlandiam, quæ sunt de appendicijs Noruegiz, & Suechordam, & Hyberniam, & Gutlandiam, & Daciam, Semelandiam, Winlandiam, Cutlandiam, Roc, Femelandiam, Wirelandiam, Flandriam, Cherelam, Lappam, & omnes alias terras & insulas Orientalis Oceani vsq; Russiam (in Lappa scilicet posuit Orientalem metam regni Britanniz) & multas insulas vltra Scantiam, vsq; dum sub Septentrione, quæ sunt de appendicibus Scantiz, quæ modo Noruegia vocatur. Fuerunt autem ibi Christiani occultè. Arthurus autem Christianus optimus fuit, & fecit eos baptizari, & vnum Deum per totam Noruegiam venerari, & vnam fidem Christi semper inuoluntatim custodire, & suscipere. Ceperunt vniuersi proceres Noruegiz vxores suas de nobili gente Britonum tempore illo, vnde Noruegenses dicunt se exisse de gente & sanguine regni huius. Impetrauit eius temporibus illis Arthurus Rex à domino Papa, & à Curia Romana, quod confirmata sit Noruegia, in perpetuum coronæ Britanniz in augmentum regni huius, vocauitq; illam dictam Arthurus Cameram Britanniz. Hac verò de causa dicunt Noruegenses, se debere in regno isto cohabitare & dicunt se esse de corpore regni huius, scilicet de coronâ Britanniz. Maluerunt enim manere in regno isto, quam in terra eorum propria. Terra enim eorû arida est, & montuosa, & sterilis, & non sunt ibi segetes nisi per loca. Ista verò opulenta est, & fertilis, & crescunt hic segetes, & cætera vniuersa. Qua ex causa sæpius per vices gesta sunt vella atrocissima inter Anglos & Noruegenses, & interfecti sunt innumerabiles. Occupauerunt verò Noruegenses terras multas & insulas regni huius, quas adhuc detinent occupatas, nec potuerunt vnquam postea penitus euelli. Tandem modò confederati sunt nobis fide, & sacramentis, & per vxores suas, quas postea ceperunt de sanguine nostro, & per affinitates, & coniugia. Ita deum constituit, & eis cõcessit bonus rex Edouardus propinquus noster (qui fuit optimus filius pacis) per commune consilium totius regni. Qua de causa possent, & debent prædicti de castris nobiscum cohabitare, & remanere in regno, sicut coniurati fratres nostri.

of The same in English.

A Rthur which was sometimes the most renowned king of the Britains, was a mightie, and valiant man, and a famous warrior. This kingdome was too little for him, and his mind was not contented with it. He therefore valiantly subdued all Scantia, which is now called Norway, and all the Islands beyond Norway, as witte Island and Greenland, which are appertaining unto Norway, Sweeland, Ireland, Godland, Denmarke, Semeland, Windland, Curland, Roe, Ferneland, Wireland, Flanders, Cherilland, Lapland, and all the other lands and Islands of the East Sea even unto Russia (in which Lapland he placed the Easterly bounds of his Britissh Empire) and many other Islands beyond Norway, even under the North pole, which are appendances of Scantia, so called Norway. These people were wild and savage, and had not in them the love of God nor of their neighbors, because all evil cometh from the North, yet there were among them certain Christians living in secret. But king Arthur was an exceeding good Christian, and caused them to be baptized, and throughout all Norway to worship one God, and to receive and keepe inviolably for ever, faith in Christ onely. At that time all the noble men of Norway tooko witness of the noble nation of the Britains, who upon the Norfes say, that they are descended of the race and blood of this kingdome. The aforesayd king Arthur obtained also in those dayes of the Pope of court of Rome that Norway should be for ever annexed to the crowne of Britaine for the enlargment of this kingdome, and he called it the chamber of Britaine. For this cause the Norfes say, that they ought to dwell with us in this kingdome, to wit, that they belong to the crowne of Britaine: for they had rather dwell here then in their owne native countrey, which is drie and full of mountains, and barren, and no graine growing there, but in certaine places. But this countrey of Britaine is fruitfull, whererin corne and all other good things doe grow and increase: for which cause many cruell battels have bene oftentimes fought betwixt the Englishmen and the people of Norway, and infinite numbers of people have bene slain, and the Norfes have possessed many lands and Islands of this Empire, which unto this day they doe possesse, neither could they ever afterwards be fully expelled. But now at length they are incorporated with us by the receiving of our religion and sacraments, and by taking wives of our nation, and by affinity, and marriages. For so the good king Edward (who was a notable maintainer of peace) obtained and granted unto them by the generall consent of the whole kingdome, so that the people may, and ought from henceforth to dwell and remaine in this kingdome with us as our loving and sworne brethren.

The nauigation of king Edgar, taken out of M. Dee his discourie of the British Monarchie, pag. 54, 55, &c.

Have oftentimes (said he) and many waies looked into the state of earthly kingdomes, generally the whole world ouer (as farre as it may be yet knowne to christian men commonly) being a studie of no great difficultie, but rather a pur pose somewhat amicable to a perfect Cosmographer, to find himselfe Cosmopolites, a citizen and member of the whole and ouerly one mysticall citie vniuersall, and so consequently to meditate of the Cosmopolicall government thereof, vnder the king almightie, passing on very swiftly toward the most dreadfull and most comfortable terme prefixed.

And I find (said he) that if this Britissh Monarchie would heretofore haue followed the aduantages which they haue had outward, they might very well ere this, haue surpassed by iustice, and godly loy, any particular Monarchie els, that euer was on earth since mans creation: and that to all such purposes as to God are most acceptable, and to all perfect common wealths, most honorable, possible, and comfortable.

But yet (said he) there is a little Locke of Lady Occasion, sticking in the stre, by our bandes to each hold on, whereto we may yet once more (before all be utterly past, and for euer) discreetly and valiantly recover and enjoy, if not all our ancient and due appurtenances to this Imperiall Britissh monarchie, yet at the least some such notable portion thereof, as (all circumstances duly and iustly appertaining to peace and amitie with foreyn princes being offered & used) this may become the most peaceable, most rich, most puissant, & most flourishing monarchie of all els (this day) in christendome. Peaceable, I say, euen with the most part of the selfe same respectes that good king Edgar had (being but a Saxon) and by such means, as he chiefly in this Empire did see in proofe and see triumphantly, wherupon his surname was Pacificus, most aptly and iustly. This peaceable king Edgar had in his minde about six hundred yeeres past, the representation of a great part of the selfe same Idæa, which from about 600 y, & by no mans deulle hath dreamed down into my imagination, Novus Hidor.

For, AEdgarus pacificus, Regni sui prospiciens utilitati, pariter & quieti, quatuor milia octingentas sibi robustas congregavit naues, & quibus mille ducentas, in plaga Angliæ Orientali, mille ducentas in Occidentali, mille ducentas in Australi, mille ducentas in Septentrionali pelago constituit, vt ad defensionē regni sui, contra exterarū nationes, bellorū discrimina sustinerent.

A wise dome imperiall, most diligently to be imitated, videlicet, prospicere, to foresee. A charitable kingly parent, that was toucht with ardent zeale, for procuring the publike profite of his kingdome, yea and also the peaceable enjoyng thereof. A of an incredible masse of treasure, a kingly portion, yet, in his coffers remaining: if then he had, (or late before) any warres, seeing no notable tax, or contribution publike is hystorically mentioned to haue bin for the charges leuied: if in peace he himselfe flourish'd to wealth; A marueilous politicall, and princely prouidence, in time of peace to foresee, and prouene, (and that most piously, and inuincibly) all possible malice, fraude, force, and mischief foraine. A most discrete libera little to such excellent vles, putting out his treasure so abundantly. A faithfull English people (then,) and worthe subjects, of such an Imperiall and godlie Governour. A your true, and willing hearts, and blessed ready hands (then,) so to impart such abundance of victuals for those huge Nauies maintenance: so (I say) as neither want of famine, seemed (sonly) to be feared of you, for any intollerable want likely to ensue thereby, by vnices of victuals complained of to be vnrasonably enhauns'd by you, finding for their great talcs to good, and rare opportunitye.

This peaceable king Edgar, was one of the perfect Imperiall Monarches of this British Empire, and therefore thus his fame remaineth (for euer) receyued.

Chera Regia,
Henrici secundi.

Anglici orbis Basileus, flos, & Decus AEdgarus, non minus memorabilis Anglis, quam Cyrus Persis, Romulus Romanis, Alexander Macedonibus, Arfaces Parthis, Carolus Francis. Anno vitæ 37. Regni sui cum fratre, & post 21. Idibus Iulij obiit, & apud Glascon sepelitur.

O Glastonbury, Glastonbury, the treasure of the carcases of so famous, and so many persons (Quæ olim mater sanctorum dicta es, & ab alijs, riuulus sanctorum, quam ab ipsis discipulis Domini, & edificatam fuisse venerabilis habet Antiquorum auctoritas) How lamentable is thy case now? howe hath hypocritie and pride wrought thy desolation? though I omit here the names of very many other, both excellent holy men, and mighty princes, whose carcases are committed to thy custody, yet that Apostolike Joseph, that triumphant British Arthur, & now this peaceable and prouident Monarch king Edgar, doe force me with a certaine sorrowfull recurrence, here to celebrat thy memory.

This peaceable king Edgar (as by ancient Records may appere) his Sommer progress, and peregrin chief pastimes were, the sayling round about this whole Isle of Albion, garden with his grand nauie of 4000, sayle at the least, parted into 4. equall partes of petite Nauies, each one being of 1000. ships, for so it is anciently receyued.

Ramphus Celensis.

Idem quoque AEdgarus, 4000. naues congregauit, ex quibus omni anno, post festum Paschale, 1000. naues ad quamlibet Angliæ partem statuit, sic, ætate Insulam circumnauigauit: hyeme verò, iudicia in Prouincia exercuit: & hæc omnia ad sui exercitium, & ad hostium fecit terrorem.

Could, and would that peaceable and wise king Edgar, before need, as being in peace and quiet with all nations about him, and notwithstanding mistrusting his possible enemies, make his pastimes so royally, politically, and triumphantly, with so many thousand ships, and at the least with ten times so many men as ships, and that peregrin: and that we being not assured of such neigbours friendship, as may become to vs as cruel and tyrannicall enemies as neuer king Edgar needed to dread the like, and they as many and mightie princes, as neuer king Edgar coped with the like, shall we (said he) not iudge it some part of wisdom, to simulate carefully in some liell proportion (though not with so many thousands) the prosperous pastimes of peaceable king Edgar, that so Antonicall Alexander? yea prosperous pastimes these may be iustly counted, by which he also made euident to the whole world, that as he wisely knew the ancient bounds and limits of this British Empire, so that he could and would totally, iustly, & triumphantly erise the same, spite of the deuil, & manage the force of any foreign power. And all that, so highly and faithfull to the glory of God finally intended and brought to passe, as the wisest and godliest prelates and counsellors of those dayes (so counted of and receyued) could best advise & direct him, or perchance, but sincerely commend and virtuously encourage him in, he being of himselfe so bent, as purposing first inuincible to forside the chiefest and uttermost walls of his Islandish Monarchie, against all foreign encombrance possible.

And in this fortification... and assisting to crush best his owne overlighte and iudgement, in preely vntoing the same in every quarter thereof, and that as it were for his pastime Imperiall, also in Summer time, to the end that afterward in all securitie, he might in Winter time (vacare) be at convenient leisure on land, chiefly to see how Gods due honour, and secondly to vnderstand, and diligently to listen to the causes & complaints of his commons. For as Mathewus Westmonasteriensis of him to his Imperiall commendation hath left vs a remembrance, Habebat autem praeterea consuetudinem, per omnes Regni prouincias transire, vt intelligeret quomodo legum iura, & suorum statuta decretorum, a principibus obseruarentur, & ne pauperes a potentibus praediciam passi, opprimerentur, diligenter inuestigare solebat: in vno fortitudini, in altero Iusticie studens, & Reipub. regniq; vtilitati consulens in vtroque. Hinc hostibus circumquaq; timor, & amor omnium erga eum excreuerat subditorum.

Thus we see how in opportunity, this peaceable Edgar mortured to this Empire such prosperous securitie, that his true and faithful subjects, all manner of waies (that is at home and also at sea, both our ward and in ward) might peaceably, safely and securely employ their toyes and trauels for the maruelous enriching of this kingdome, and pleasuring very many other, carrying forth the naturall commodities of this land, abounding here about our necessarie vses (and due scope reserved) and like wise againe furnishing the same with all necessarie and not superfluous foreign commodities, left from force of foreign conquests. This was in deed (as before is recorded) a kingly prouidence, Religijs, Regniq; vtilitati consulens, &c. besides with great diligence and industrie publique to be seene, and by his meanes enjoyed, he himselfe vied most gladly the aduantage of that securitie, in administering of Iustice, or causing the same to be executed all his kingdome ouer, not querulosity, thowningly or thowningly spinning the ragged and tattered serue of his supplaine, holding by to his simple called bits of complaint or petition, and that homely conuersed, or afraid at, and timorously bawling from the sickly pale face of feeble limmed iustice, extremely constrained to so speake for himselfe, and partially smothering his owne conscience, so fauour of maintain the foule fault and trespass, vnto a full of any his subjects, how mightie or necessarie soeuer, they (eis) were, due diligently made teare, least Pauperes a potentibus praediciam passi, opprimerentur.

Thus his publique securitie was for aye, and true loue of his owne subjects, guarding him at home, and the heavenly spirits directing all his good purposes, as well iustice and equitie in all quarters of this Albion to flourish. For which his peaceable and prosperous beatus as the excellent king his grand obedience, he became not in silent by declined to tyrannicall regnment (as some princes in other countries haue made their liues Constantinopolitane) but with all his foresaid: fruitful and abundant wealth, triumphant peace, with securitie and Justice ouer all his Christianitie prevailing, his heart was continually, and most zealously bene to set forth the glory, laud and honour of the almighty Creator, the beautifull and euerlasting king, by such vniuersall and purely meanes, as (they) were deemed to God most acceptable, as many monuments yet to our eyes remaining, doe of him vniuocably testifie: As this, for one.

occupor addendis: Ne unum inertia, nostritq; diebus (plus æquo) seruitus eius tepescere videatur, &c. 18. mei terreni Imperij anno, &c. Anno Incarnationis Dominicæ, 973.

Ego AEdgarus totius Albionis Basileus hoc priuilegium (tanta roboratum auctoritate) crucis Thaumate confirmauit.

So that by all these rehearsed Records, it is most euident, the peaceable king Edgar, was one of those Monarchs, in whose hands (if life had sufficed) the incredible valour and priuilege granted by God and nature unto this British monarchie, might haue bene peaceably purchased in such sort, as the very blessing and fauour of the diuine Trinitie hath laid means for our industrie to attaine to, and enioyed the same by.

And though sundry other valiant princes and kings of this land I could recite, which in times past haue either by intent gone about, or by wise and valiant exploit, haue mettelly well prospered towards this Islandish appropiate Supremacie attaining, yet neuer any other reasonable meanes was used, or by humane wit, or industrie can be contriued, to all purposes sufficient, but only by our sea forces prevailing, and so by our surmountable enioying all within the sea limites of our British royaltie contained.

To which incredible polietical miſterie attaining, no calter, reader, or perfecter place and introduction, is (as yet) come to my imagination, then is the present and continuall seruice of thre score good and tall warlike shippes, with twentie smaller barkes, and thre 80. shippes (great and small) with 6600. seamen furnished, and all singularly well appointed for seruice both on sea and land, faithfully and diligently to be done in such circumstances and discrete order, as partly I haue in other places declared, and further (upon good occasion offered) may declare.

This grand naute of peaceable king Edgar, of so many thousand shippes, and they furnished with an hundred thousand men at the least, with all the final insignes of those sea forces, so inuincible, continually maintained, the order of the execution of these seruices, the godly and imperiall successe thereof, see in a manner kingly lessons and propheticall encouragements to be left, euen now to be as prouident for publique securitie as he was, to be as skillfull of our sea right and royall limites, and wisely to find our selues as able to recouer and enioy the same as he was, who could not chuse, but with the passing and secretly saying about this British Albion, with all the lesser Isles next adiacent round about it, he could not chuse I say, but by such full and peaceable possession, since himself (accepting to right, and his hearts desire) the true and soueraigne Monarch of all the British Ocean, questioning any way his empire of Albion and Ireland, with the lesser Islands next adiacent: with memorie all together, as with one very precious jewel Imperiall, he adioyned the title and crowne of his regalitie, as with the testimonie auncient of the States and nobles of his Empire, to continue to perpetuall memorie the title of his chiefe lordly dignitie, in this very tenor of words before also remembered.

Ego AEdgarus Anglorum Basileus, omniumq; Regum, Insularum, Oceanaq; Britanniam circumiacentis, cunctarumq; nationum, quæ in ista eam includuntur, Imperator, & Dominus.

T During the description of the North parts I haue taken the same out of the voyage of James Cnopen of Hartzeuan Duf he, which allegeth certaine conquests of Arthur king of Britaine: and the most part, and chiefest things among the rest, he learned of a certaine priest in the king of Norwayes court, in the yeere 1364. This priest was descended from them which king Arthur had bene to inhabit these Islands, and he reported that in the yeere 1360, a certaine Eng lish frier, a Franciscan, and a Mathematician of Oxford, came into those islands, who leauing them, and passing further by his Spagittall Arte, described all those places that he saw, and tooke the height of them with his Astrolabe, according to the forme that I (Gerard Mercator) haue set downe, in my mappe, and as I haue taken it out of the aforesaid James Cnopen. He said that these foure Indyaughes were dyuine into an inward gulfe of whirtpoolle, with so great a force, that the shippes which once entered therein, could by no meanes be dyuyn backe againe, and that there is neuer in those partes so much winde blowing, as mighte be sufficient to dyuyn a coyne mill.

Giraldus Cambrensis (who flourished in the yeere 1210, vnder king John) in his booke of the miracles of Ireland, hath certeine wordes altogether alike with theſe, videlicet:

How farre from these islands (namely the Delphides, Island &c.) towards the North there is a certaine wonderfull whirtpoolle of the sea, wherein all the maurs of the sea from farre haue their course and recourse, as it were without stoppe: which, there conueying themselves into the secret recesses of nature, are swallowed up, as it were, into a bottomlesse pit, and if it chance that any shippe do pass this way, it is pulled, and dyuyn with such a violence of the maurs, that estimation without remedy, the force of the whirtpoolle demoueth the same.

The Philosophers describe the foure indyaughes of this Ocean sea, in the foure opposite quarters of the world, from whence many do coniecture that as well the flowing of the sea, as the blasts of the winde, haue their first originall.

A Nno. 1360 (that is to wit, in the 34 yeere of the reigne of the triumphant king Edward the third) a frier of Oxford, being a good Astronomer, went in companie with others to the most Northern islands of the world, and there leauing his company together, he trauelled alone, and purposely descried all the Nor thern islands, with the indyauing seas: and the record thereof at his returne he deliuered to the king of England. The name of which booke is Inuentio Fortu

It is to be noted, that from the bayes of Lynne in Norfolk (wherof the foresaid Franciscan frier tooke his name) to Island, it is not above a fowntyges sayling with an ordinarie winde, and hath bene of many yeeres a very common and usuall trade: which further appeareth by the pri uileges granted to the Fishermen of the towne of Blacknie in the said countie of Norfolk, by king Edward the third, for their exemption and freedom from his ordinarie leuie, in respect of their trade to Island.

A declaration of the Indies and landes discovered, and subdued unto the Emperour, and the king of Portugall: And also of other partes of the Indies and rich Countries to be discovered, which the woshipfull M. Robert Thorne merchant of London (who dwelt long in the citie of Siuill in Spaine) exhorted king Henrie the eight to take in hand.

MOST EXCELLENT PRINCE,

Experience proueth that naturallly all Princes be desirous to extend large their dominions and kingdomes. Wherefor it is not to be maruelled, to see them every day procure the same, not regarding any cost, perill, and labour, that may thereby chance, but rather it is to be maruelled, if there be any prince content to liue quiet with his owne dominions. For surely the people would thinke he lacketh the noble courage and spirit of all other.

The world knoweth that the desires of Princes haue bene so stricke to obtaine their purpose, that they haue adventured and yppoued thinges to mans coniecture impossible, the which they haue made possible, and also thinges difficult haue made easill: and thus to obtaine their purpose, haue in maner turned by and downe the whole world so many times, that the people inhabiting in the farthest regions of the Occident haue pursued with great diffire, labours and perils, to pro-cease and enter into the farthest regions of the Orient: and in likewise those people of the same partes of the Orient, haue had no less labour and desire to enter and penetrate into the farthest lend of the Occident, and so following their purchase haue not ceased vntill they could passe no further by reason of the great seas.

This naturall inclination is cause, that scarcely it may be said, there is any kingdome that is not king quiet, but that his owne imagination, or other Princes his neighbours doe trouble him.
God and nature hath prouided to your Grace, and to your Gracious progenitors, this Realme of England, and set it in so fruitefull a place, and within such limits, that it should seeme to be a place quiet and aparted from all the foresaid desire. One speciall cause is, for that it is compassed with the Sea: by reason thereof it seemes, this notwithstanding, their desires and noble courages haue bene most commonly like vnto others: and with maruelous great labours, costes and perils, they haue trauelled and passed the Seas, making warre, not onely with Kinges and domi-ons nigh neighbours, but also with them of farr countries, and so haue wonne and conquered many rich and fayre dominions, and amplified this your Graces Realme with great victorie and glory. And also now of late your Grace hauing like couragious desire, and not without iust cause, to enlarge this your kingdome, and demand your limits and tribute of the Frenching, which at that present he restrained, your Grace in person passed with a great power into France, putting your Graces person to great paine and labour, and without doubt victoriously you haue conquered the said Realme of France, as he began, if your aduersitie had not returned himselfe, and knowledged your Graces right and title: and so promised trustly to pay the tribute then due, and fulfill your request in all thinges, and also desired your Grace for peace, the which of your demerite you could not refuse.

Now I considering this your noble courage and desire, and also percelling that your Grace may at your pleasure, to your greater glory, by a godly meane, with little cost, perill, or labour, your Grace or any of your subiects, amplify and enrich this your said Realme, I know it is my duty to write to you this secret vnto your Grace, which hitherto, as I suppose, hath bene hid: which is, that with a small number of ships there may be discovered sundry rich lands and kingdomes, in the which without doubt your Grace shall winne perpetuall riches, and your subiects infinite profit: To which places there is less way to discover, which is into the East: for that of the four parts of the world, it seemeth thre parts are discovered by other princes. For out of Spaine they haue discovered all the Indies and Seas Orientall, and our Portingall all the Indies and Seas Orientall: so that by this part of the Orient and Occident, they haue compassed the world. For the one of them departing toward the Orient, and the other toward the Occident, were againe in the course or way of the middelt of the day, and so then had discovered a great part of the same Seas and coastes by the Spaniards. So that now rest to be discovered the said North partes, the which it seemeth to me, is onely your charge and duty.
Because the situation of this your Realme is thereunto necesse and appetit of all other: and also for that you haue already taken it in hande. And in mine opinion it will not seeme well to desire.

to leave so great and profitable an enterprise, seeing it may be easily and with so little cost, labour, and danger, be followed and obtained it though heretofore your Grace hath made thereof a proofe, and found not the commodities thereby as you trusted; at this time it shall be no impediment: For there may be now found remedies for the things then lacked, and the inconveniences and lets removed, that then were cause your Graces desire tooke no full effect, which is, the courts to be changed, and follow the aforesaid new courts. And concerning the mariners, shippes, and provision, an order may be devised and taken more convenient, much better then hitherto. The reason wherof, and by Gods grace, no doubt your purpose shall take effect. Surely the cost herein will be nothing, in comparison to the great profit. The labour is much less, yea nothing at all, where so great honour and glory is hoped for: and considering well the courses, trust the danger and way is shorter to us, then to Spaine or Portugall, as by evident reasons appeareth.

And now to declare something of the commoditie and vantage of this Navigation and discovery, it is very cleere and certaine, that the Seas that commonly men say, without great danger, difficultie and perill, yea rather it is impossible to passe, that those same seas be navigable and without any such danger, but that shippes may passe and have in them perpetual clearness of the way without any darkeness of the night: which thing is a great commoditie for the navigantes, to see at all times round about them, as well the safegardes as daungers, and how great difference it is betwene the commoditie and perils of other which lesse the most part of every foure and threentie houres the said light, and goe in darkeness groping their way, I thinke there is none so ignorant but perceiveth this more plainly, then it can be expressed. Yea what a vantage shall your Graces subjects have also by this light to discover the strange Landes, countries, and coastes: for if they that be discovered, to saile by them in darkeness is with great danger, much more then the coastes not discovered be dangerous to traueil by night or in darkeness. Yet these dangers or darkeness hath not letted the Spaniards and Portugals and other, to discover many unknown Realmes, to their great perill. Which considered (and that your Graces subjects may have the same light) it will seeme your Graces subjects to be without any such danger, in leauing to do this glorious and noble enterprise. For they being past this little way which they named so dangerous, (which may be two or three leagues before they come to the Pole, and as much more after they passe the Pole) it is cleere that from thence forth the seas and Landes are as temperate as in these partes, and that then it may be at the will and pleasure of the mariners, to choose whether they will saile by the coastes that be colde, temperate or hot. For they being past the Pole, it is plain, they may decline to what part they will.

If they will goe toward the Orient, they shall into the regions of all the Tartarians that extend toward the midday, and from thence they may goe and proceed to the land of the Chinas, and from thence to the land of Cathay Orientall, which is of all the maine land most Orientall that can be reckoned from our habitation. And if from thence they doe continue their navigation, following the coastes that returne toward the Occident, they shall fall in with Malacca, and so with all the Indies which we call Orientall, and following that way, may returne hither by the Cape of Buona Speranza: and thus they shall compass the whole worlde. And if they will take their course after they be past the Pole, toward the Occident, they shall goe in the backe side of the new found land, which of late was discovered by your Graces subjects, untill they come to the backe side and South Seas of the Indies Occidentall. And so continuing their voyage they may returne thow the Arright of Magellan to this countrey, and so they compass also the world by that way: and if they goe this third way, and after they be past the Pole, goe right toward the Pole Arctique, and then decline toward the Landes and Islands situated betwene the Tropikes, and vnder the Equinoctiall, without doubt they shall finde there the richest Landes and Islands: of the world of golde, precious Stones, balines, spices, and other things that we heere see: none which come out of strange countreies, and may returne the same way.

By this it appeareth, your Grace hath not onely a great advantage of the riches, but also your subjects shall not traueil halfe of the way that other doe, which goe round about as aforesaid.

The booke made by the right worshipfull M. Robert Thorne in the yeere 1527, in Siuill, to Doctour Ley, Lord ambassadour for king Henrie the eight, to Charles the Emperour, being an information of the parts of the world, discovered by him and the king of Portugall:
and also of the way to the Moluccaes by the North.

Right noble and reuerend in Gt. I haue receiued your letters, and haue procured and sent to him of your seruant, who your Loydschippe wrote, should be sicke in Merchena. I cannot there by els where heare of him, without he be returned to you, or gone to S. Lucas, and Saxe. I cannot iudge but that of some contagious sickness he died, so that the owner of the house for destroying his house would bury him secretly, and not be knowne of it. For such things haue often times happened in this countrey.

Also to write unto your Loydschippe of the new trade of Spicerie of the Emperour, there is no doubt but that the Islands are fertile of Cloues, Nutmegs, Peace, and Cinnamon: and that the said Islands, with other there about, abound with golde, Rubies, Diamonds, Ballasit, Sanaces, Facinets, and other Stones & pectles, as all other lands that are vnder and nere the Equinoctiall. For we see, where nature giuech anything, she is no nigard. For as with vs and other, that are aparted from the said Equinoctiall, our metalls be Lead, Tinne, and Iron, so theirs be Golde, Siluer, and Copper. And as our fruites and graines be Apples, Nuts, and Come, so theirs be Dates, Nutmegs, Pepper, Cloues, and other Spices. And as we haue Icar, Amber, Cristall, Jasper, and other like stones, so haue they Rubies, Diamonds, Ballasit, Sapphyres, Facinets, and other like. And though some say that of such precious metalls, graines, or kinde of spices, and precious stones, the abundance and quantie is nothing so great, as our metalle fruites or Stones about rehearsed: yet if it be well considered, how the quantie of the earth vnder the E-quinoctiall to both the Tropheall lines, (in which space is found the said Golde, Spices and precious Stones) is as much in quantie, as almost all the earth from the Tropicks to both the Poles: it can not be denied but there is more quantie of the said metalls, fruites, spices, and precious Stones, then there is of the other metalls and other things before rehearsed. And I see that the preciousness of these things is measured after the distance that is betwene vs, and the things that we haue appetite vnto. For in this nauigation of the Spicerie was discovered, that these I-lands nothing set by Golde, but set more by a knife and a nail of Iron, then by his quantie of Golde: and with reason, as the thing more necessarie for mans seruice. And I doubt not but to them should be as precious our coyne and seeds, if they might haue them, as to vs their spices: and likewise the pieces of glasse that here we haue counterfeited, are as precious to them, as to vs their Stones: which by experience is scene daily by them that haue trade thither. This of the riches of those counteries is sufficient.

Doctour Ley's
letters.

Touching that your Loydschippe wrote, whether it may be profit able to the Emperour or no, it may be without doubt of great profit: if as the king of Portugall doth, he would become a merchant, and prouide shippes and their lading, and trade thither alone, and defend the trade of these Islands for himselfe. But other greater businesse withholdeth him from this. But still, as now it is begunne to be occupied, it would come to much. For the shippes comming in safetie, there would thither many euery yeere, of which to the Emperour is due of all the wares and icicles that come from thence the fifth part for his custome cleare without any cost. And besides this he purceth in euery floze a certaine quantie of money, of which he enioyeth of the gaines poynt and poundes like as other aduenturers doe. In a floze of three shippes and a carauell that went from this cite armed by the merchants of it, which departed in April last past, I and my partener haue one thousand foure hundred duckets that we employed in the said floze, principally for that two Englishmen, friends of mine, which are somewhat learned in Cosmographie, should goe in the same shippes, to bring me certaine relation of the situation of the countrey, and to be expert in the nauigation of those seas, and there to haue informations of many other things, and aduise that I desire to know especially. Seeing in these quarters are shippes, and mariners of that countrey, and cardes by which they saile, though much be like ours: that they should procure to haue the said cardes, and learne how they vnderstand them, and especially to know what nauigation they haue for those Islands Northwards, and North-eastward.

leagues, they should come to the New founde islandes that were discovered, and so we should be nere to the said Spiceries by almost two thousand leagues then the Emperour, or the king of Portingall are. And to aduise your Loydschippe whether of these Spiceries of the king of Portin-gall of the Emperours is nere, and also of the titles that either of them hath, and how our New founde landes are parted from it, (for that by writing without some demonstration, it were hard to give any declaration of it) I haue caused that your Loydschippe shall receiue herewith a little Shappe of Carte of the world: the which, I feare me, shall put your Loydschippe to moye labour to vnder-stand, then me to make it, onely for that it is made in so litle roome that it cannot be but obscurely set out, that is desired to be seene in it, and also for that I am in this science litle expert: Yet to remedy in part this difficultie, it is necessary to declare to your Loydschippe my intent, with which I trust you shall perceiue in this Card part of your desire, if, for that I can not expresse mine intent, with my declaration I do not make it moye obscure.

First, your Loydschippe knoweth that the Cosmographers haue diuided the earth by 360 degrees in latitude, and as many in longitude, vnder the which is comprehended all the roundness of the earth: the latitude being diuided into foure quarters, ninetie degrees amount to euery quarter, which they measure by the altitude of the Poles, that is the North and South partes, being from the line Equinoctiall till they come right vnder the North parte the said ninetie degrees: and as much from the said line Equinoctiall to the South parte be other ninetie degrees. And as much more is also from either of the said partes againe to the Equinoctiall. Which imagined to be cross, is soone perceiued thus, 360 degrees of latitude to be consumed in the said foure quarters of ninetie degrees a quarter, so that this latitude is the measure of the world from North to South, and from South to North. And the longitude, in which are also counted other 360, is counted from West to East, or from East to West, as in the Card is set.

The said latitude your Loydschippe may see marked and diuided in the end of this Card on the left hand: so that if you would know in what degrees of latitude any region or coast standeth, take a compass, and set the one foot of the same in the Equinoctiall line right against the said region, and apply the other foot of the compass to the said region or coast, and then set the said compass at the end of the Card, where the degrees are diuided. And the one foot of the compass standing in the line Equinoctiall, the other will shew in the scale the degrees of altitude or latitude that the said region is in. Also the longitude of the world I haue set out in the nether part of the Card, containing also 360 degrees: which begin to be counted after Palestine and other Cosmographers from an head land called Capo verde, which is ouer against a little cross made in the part Occidentall, where the diuision of the degrees be ginnereth, and endeth in the same Capo verde.

Now to know in what longitude any land is, your Loydschippe must take a ruler or a compass, and set the one foot of the compass vpon the land or coast whose longitude you would know, and extend the other foot of the compass to the next part of one of the transferral lines in the Orientall or Occidentall part: which done, set the one foot of the compass in the said transferral line at the end of the nether scale, the scale of longitude, and the other foot sheweth the degree of longitude that the region is in. And your Loydschippe must vnderstand that this Card though litle, containeth the vniuersall whole world betwix two Collateral lines, the one in the Occidentall part descendeth perpendicular vpon the 175 degree, and the other in the Orientall on the 170 degree, whose distance measurith the scale of longitude. And that which is without the two said transferral lines, is onely to shew how the Orientall part is ioyned with the Occident, and Occident with the Orient. For that that is set without the line in the Orientall part, is the same that is set within the other line in the Occidentall part: and that that is set without the line in the Occidentall part, is the same that is set within the line on the Orientall part, to shew that though this figure of the world in plaine of flate seemeth to haue an end, yet one imagining that this said Carde were set vpon a round thing, where the ends should touch by the lines, it would plainly appaere how the Orient part ioyneth with the Occident, as there without the lines it is described and figured.

And for moye declaration of the said Card, your Loydschippe shall vnderstand, that beginning on the part Occidentall within the line, the first land that is set out, is the maine land and Island of the Indies of the Emperour. Which maine land or coast goeth Northward, and finisheth in the land that we found, which is called herre Terra de Labrador. So that it appeareth the said land that we found, and the Indies to be all one maine land.

The said coast from the said Indies Southward, as by the Card your Loydschippe may see, contineth to a certaine straight Sea, called Estrecho de todos Santos: by which straight Sea the Spaniards goe to the Spiceries, as I shall declare moye at large: the which straight Sea is right against the three hundred fiftene degrees of longitude, and is of latitude or altitude from the Equinoctiall three and fiftie degrees. The first land from the said beginning of the Card toward the Orient are certaine Iſlandes of the Canaries, and Iſlandes of Capo verde. But the first maine land west to the line Equinoctiall is the said Capo verde, and from thence Northward by the streight of this Sea of Italie. And so followeth Spaine, France, Flanders, Flaimes, Denmark, and Norway, which is the highest part toward the North. And ouer against Flanders are our Iſlandes of England and Ireland. Of the landes and coastes within the streights I haue set out onely the Regions, diuiding them by lines of their limits, by which plainly I thinke your Lordship may see, in what situation euery region is, and of what height, and with what regions it is ioynd. I do thinke few are left out of all Europe. In the parts of Asia and Africa I could not so well make the said diuisions: for that theye are not so well knowne, nor need not so much. This I write because in the said Card be made the said lines and strikes, that your Lordship should vnderstand wherefoe they doe strue. Also returning to the foresaid Capo verde, the coast goeth Southward to a Cape called Capo de buona speranza: which is right ouer against the 60 or 65 degree of longitude. And by this Cape goe the Portugals to their Spicerie. For from this Cape toward the Orient is the land of Calicut, as your Lordship may see in the head land ouer against the 130 degree. From the said Cape of Buona speranza the coast returneth toward the line Equinoctiall, and passing forth, entereth the red sea, & returning out, entereth againe into the gulf of Persia, & returneth toward the Equinoctiall line, all that it commeth to the head land, called Calicut aforesaid, and from thence the coast making a gulfe, where is the riuer of Ganges, returneth toward the line to a head land called Malaca, where is the principall Spicerie: and from this Cape returneth and maketh a great gulfe, and after the coast goeth right toward the Orient, and ouer against this last gulfe and coast, be many Iſlandes, which be Iſlandes of the Spicerie, of the Emperour. Upon which the Portugals and he be at variance.

Not.

The said coast goeth toward the Orient, and endeth right against the 155 degrees, and after returneth toward the Occident Northward: which coast not yet plainly knowen, I may suppose to the New found land found by vs, that I spake of before. So that I finish with this brief declaration of the Card aforesaid. Well I know I should also haue declared how the coastes within the streights of the Sea of Italie runne. It is plaine that passing the streights on the North side of that Sea after the coast of Granada, and with that which pretaines to Spaine, is the coast of that which France hath in Italie. And then followeth in one piece all Italie, which land hath an arme of the Sea, with a gulfe which is called Mare Adriaticum. And in the bottom of this gulfe is the cite of Venice. And on the other part of the said gulfe is Sclauonia, and next Syria, then the streights of Constantinople, and then the sea called Euxinus, which is within the said streights: and coming out of the said streights, followeth Turcia maior (though now on both sides it is called Turcia.) And so the coast runneth Southward to Syria, and ouer against the said Turcia are the Iſlandes of Rhodes, Candie, and Cypus. And ouer against Italie are the Iſlandes of Sicilia and Sardinia. And ouer against Spaine is Gatoza and Pinocza. In the end of the gulfe of Syria is Iudea. And from thence returneth the coast toward the Occident, till it commeth to the streights where we beganne, which all is the coast of Aſſike or Barbarie. Also your Lordshippe shall vnderstand that the coastes of the Sea throughout all the world, I haue coloured with yellow, for that it may appeare that all that is within the line coloured yellow, is to be imagined to be maine land or Iſland: and all without the said line so coloured to be Sea: whereby it is easie and light to know it. Albeit in this little roome any other description would rather haue made it obscure then cleere. Also the said coastes of the Sea are all set iustly after the manner and forme as they lie, as the navigation appooueth them throughout all the Card, saue onely the coastes and Iſles of the Spicerie of the Emperour which is from ouer against the 160 to the 125 degrees of longitude. For these coastes and situations of the Iſlands, euery of the Cosmographers and pilots of Portugall and Spaine do set after their purpose. The Spaniards more toward the Orient, because they should appertaine to the Emperour: and the Portugals more toward the Occident, for that they should fall within their iurisdiction. So that the pilots and nauigants whither, which in such cases should declare the truth, by their industrie do set them fallily euer one to fauor his prince. And for this cause can be no certaine situation of that coast and Iſlands, till this difference betwixt them be verified. Now to come to the purpose of your Lordships demand touching the difference betwixt the Emperour and the king of Portugall, I vnderstand it better, I must declare the beginning of this discovery. Though peradventure your Lordship may say that in that I haue written ought of purpose, I fall in the proverbe, A gemino ouo bellum: But your Lordship commanded me to be large, and I take licence to be voligious, and so the peradventure tedious, but your Lordship knoweth that Nihil ignorantia verbosius.

In the yere 1484. the king of Portingall minded to arme certaine Caruelles to discover the Spierie. Then forasmuch as he feared that being discovered, euery other Prince would sende an arme thither, so that the cost and perill of discovering should be his, and the profitte common: wherefore first he gaue knowledge of this his minde to all princes Christianes, saying that he would seeke amongst the indoles newe possessions of regions, and therefore would make a cer taine arme: and that if any of them would helpe in the cost of the said arme, he should enioy his part of the profitte of honour that should come of it. And as then this discovering was holden for a strange thing and vncertaine. Nowe they say, that all the Princes of Christenome answered, that they would be no part of such an arme, nor yet of the profitte that might come of it. After the which he gaue knowledge to the Pope of his purpose, and of the answer of all the Princes, desir ing him that seeing that none would helpe in the costes, that he would iudge all that should be founde and discovered to be of his iurisdiction, and commaunde that none other Prince should in termeddle therewith. The Pope said not as Christ saith, Quis me constituat iudicem inter vos? The Pope re sponded. He did not refuse, but making himselfe as Lord and Iudge of all, not onely graunted that all that should be discovered from Orient to Occident, should be the kings of Portingall, but also, that by on great censures no other Prince should discover but hee. And if they did, all to be the kings of Portingall. So he armed a flecter, and in the yere 1497. were discovered the Islands of Calicut, from whence is brought all the spice he hath.

The Pope re sponded.

After this in the yere 1492. the king of Spaine willing to discover lands toward the Occident without making any such diligence, or taking licence of the king of Portingall, armed certaine Caruels, and then discovered this India Occidentall, especially two Islands of the sayde India, that in this Card I set forth, naming the one la Dominica, and the other Cuba, and brought the cer taine golde from thence. Of the which when the king of Portingall had knowledge, hee sent to the king of Spaine, requiring him to giue him the said Islands. For that by the sentence of the Pope all that should be discovered was his, and that hee should not proceede further in the discoverie without his licence. And at the same time it seemeth that out of Castill, into Portingall had gone a number of burning infinite number of Jewes that were expelled out of Spaine, for that they would not turne to be Christians, and carried with them infinite number of golde and silver. So that it seemeth that the king of Spaine answered, that it was reason that the king of Portingall shold be obedient to that which the Pope had decreed, hee would giue him the sayde Islands of the Indies. Nowe for as much as it was decreed betwixt the sayde kings, that none should receive the others subiects fugitiues, nor their goods, therefore the king of Portingall should pay and returne to the king of Spaine a million of golde or more, that the Jewes had caried out of Spaine to Portingall, & that in so doing he would giue these Islands, and desist from any more dis couering. And not fulfilling this, hee would not onely not giue these Islands, but procure to disco uer more where they thought best. It seemeth that the king of Portingall would not, or could not with his ease pay this money. And so not paying, that he could not let the king of Spaine to disco uer: so that hee encrept not toward the Orient where he had begun to founde the Spierie. And contented to the king of Spaine, that touching this discovering they should deuide the world be twene them two. And that all that should be discovered from Cape Verde, where this Card be ginneth to be counted, the degrees of longitude to 180. of the sayde scale of longitude, which is half the world toward the Orient, & sinth in this Card right ouer against a litle crosse made at the said 180. degrees, to be the king of Portugals. And all the land from the said Crosse toward the Occident, vntill it ioyneth with the other Crosse in the Orient, which conteineth the other hundred and eightie degrees, that is the other halfe of the world, to be the king of Spaines. So that from the land ouer against the said hundred & eightie degrees vntill it sinth in the three hun dred and eightie on both the ends of the Card, is the iurisdiction of the king of Spaine. So after this manner they deuided the world betweene them.

Now for that these Islands of Spierie fall neere the terme and limits betweene these Prin ces (so) as by the said Card you may see they beginne from one hundred and eightie degrees of lon gitude, and ende in 215. It seemeth all that falleth from 160. to 180. degrees, should be of Por tingall: and all the rest of Spaine. And so) that their Cosmographers and Pilots could not agree in the situation of the sayde Islandes (for the Portugals set them all within their 180. degrees, and the Spaniards set them all without): and so) that in measuring, all the Cosmo graphers of both parties, or what other that euer haue bene cannot giue certaine order to measure the longitude of the world, as they doe of the latitude: for that there is no starre fixed from East to West, as are the starres of the Poles from North to South, but all mo ueth with the moving diuine: no manner can bee founde howe certainly it may be measured, but

but by coniectures, as the Navigants haue esteemed the way they haue gone. But it is manifest that Spaine had the situation of all the lands from Cape Verde, toward the Orient of the Portingals to their 180. degrees. And in all their Cardes they neuer hitherto set the said Islands within their limitation of the said 180. degrees, (Though they knewe very well of the Islands) will note that the Spaniards discovered them. And it is knowne that the king of Portingall had trade to these Islands also, but would neuer suffer Portingall to goe thither from Calicut: for so much as hee knewe that it fell out of his dominion: least by going thither there might come some knowledge of those other Islands of the king of Spaine, but bought the cloues of Merchants of the countrey, that brought them to Calicut, much dearer then they would haue cost, if hee had sent for them, thinking after this maner it would abide alwayes secret. And now that it is discovered hee sendes and keepes the Spaniards from the trade all that he can.

Also it should seeme that when this foresaid consent of the diuision of the world was agreed of betwene them, the king of Portingall had already discovered certaine Islands that lye ouer against Cape Verde, and also certaine part of the maine lande of India toward the South, from whence hee sette Brasil, and called it the lande of Brasil. So for that all should come in his terme and limites, hee tooke three hundred and seuenie leagues beyonde Cape Verde: and after this, his 180. degrees, being his part of the world, should begin in the Carde right ouer against the 340. degrees, where I haue made a litle compass with a crosse, and should be smyth at the 160. degree, where also I haue made another litle marke. And after this computation without any controuersie, the Islands of the Spicerie fall out of the Portingals domination. So that now the Spaniards say to the Portingals, that if they would beginne their 180. degrees from the said Cape Verde, so the intent they should extend more toward the Orient, and so to touche those Islands of the Spicerie of the Emperour, which is all that is betwene the two crosses made in this Carde, that then the Islands of Cape Verde and the lande of Brasil that the Portingals now obtaine, is out of the said limitation, and that they are of the Emperours. Or if their 180. degrees they count from the 370. leagues beyonde the said Cape Verde, to include in it the said Islands and lande of Brasil, then plainly appeareth the said 180. degrees should finish long before they came to these Islands of the Spicerie of the Emperour: As by this Carde your Lordship may see. For their limites should begin at the 340. degrees of this Carde, and end at 160. degrees, where I haue made two litle markes of the compass with crosses in them.

So that plainly it should appeare by reason, that the Portingals should leaue these Islands of Cape Verde and lande of Brasil, if they would haue part of the Spicerie of the Emperour: or els holding these, they haue no part there. To this the Portingals say, that they will beginne their 180. degrees from the selfe same Cape Verde: for that it may extend so much more toward the Orient, and touche these Islands of the Emperours: and would winne these Islands of Cape Verde and land of Brasil neuertheless, as a thing that they possessed before the consent of this limitation was made.

So none can verely tell which hath the best reason. They be not yet agreed, Quare sub iudice lis est.

But without doubt (by all coniectures of reason,) the said Islands fall all without the limitation of Portingall, and pertaine to Spaine, as it appeareth by the most part of all the Cardes made by the Portingals, save those they haue fallen of late purpose.

But now touching that your Lordship wote, whether that which we discovered toucheth any thing the foresaid coastes: once it appeareth plainly, that the Newe founde lande that wee discovered, is all a maine lande with the Indies Occidental, from whence the Emperour hath all the golde and pearles: and so continueth of coast more then 5000. leagues of length, as by this Carde appeareth. For from the said Newe lande it proceedeth toward the Occident to the Indies, and from the Indies returneth toward the Orient, and after turneth Southward by till it come to the Straites of Todos Santos, which I reckon to be more then 5000. leagues.

So that to the Indies it should seeme that wee haue some title, at least that for our discovering wee might trade thither as other doe. But all this is nothing nere the Spicerie.

So we thin (if from the said Newe founde lande the Sea bee navigable) there is no doubt, but sailing Northward and passing the Pole descending to the Equinoctiall line, wee shall hitte these Islands, and it should be a much shorter way, then either the Spaniards or the Portingals haue. For wee be distant from the Pole but thirtie and nine degrees, and from the Pole to the Equinoctiall be 90. the which added together, be an hundred twenty and nine degrees, leagues 1480. and miles 7440: Where wee should finde these Islands. And the Navigation of the Spaniards to the Spicerie is, as by this Carde you may see, from Spaine to the Islands

Islands of Canarie, and from these Islands they runne <sup>now</sup> the line Equinoctiall Southward to the Cape of the maine land of the Indians, called the Cape of S. Augulline, and from this Cape Southward to the Straites of Todos Sanctos, in the which Navigation to the saide Straites is 1700. or 1800. leagues: and from these Straites being past them, they returne towarde the line Equinoctiall to the Islands of Spicrie, which are distant from the saide Straites 4200. or 4300. leagues.

By the Straites of Magellan.

The Navigation of the Portingals to the saide Islands, is departing from Portingall Southward towarde the Cape Verde, and from thence to another Cape passing the line Equinoctiall called Capo de bona Iperansa, and from Portingall to the Cape is 1800. leagues, and from this Cape to the Islands of Spicrie of the Emperour is 2500. leagues.

So that by this Navigation amounteth all to 4300. leagues. So that (as afoze is said,) if betwene our the we founde landes of Norway, or Island, the seas towarde the North be Navigable, we should goe to these Islandes a shorter way by more then 2000. leagues.

And though wee went not to the saide Islandes, for that they are the Emperours of kings of Portingall, we should by the way and coming once to the line Equinoctiall, finde landes so full rich of golde and Spicrie, as all other landes are under the saide line Equinoctiall: and also should, if we may passe under the North, enjoy the Navigation of all Tartarie. Which should be no lesse profitable to our commodities of clothe, then these Spicries to the Emperour, and king of Portingall.

Howe to write to England.

But it is a generall opinion of all Cosmographers, that passing the seventh clime, the sea is all Ice, and the cold so much that none can suffer it. And hitherto they had all the like opinion, that under the line Equinoctiall for much heate the land was uninhabitable.

Objection.

Yet since (by experience is proved) no land so much habitable nor more temperate. And to conclude, I thinke the same should be founde under the North, if it were experimented. For as all things, Nihil sit vacuum in rerum natura: So I judge, there is no lande uninhabitable, nor Sea unnavigable. If I should write the reason that persuadeth this unto me, it should be to praise, and if seeme not requisite for this present matter. God knoweth that though by it I should have no great interest, yet I have had and still have no litle minde of this businesse: So that if I had facultie to my will, it should be the first thing that I woulde understande, even to attempt, if our Seas Northward be Navigable to the Pole, or no. I reason, that as some sicknesses are hereditariou, and come from the father to the sonne, so this inclination of desire of this discoverie I inherit of my father, which with another merchant of Brittowe named Hugh Eliot, were the discoverers of the first new found landes, of the which there is no doubt, (as nowe plainly appeareth) if the mariners would then have bene ruled, and followed their Pilots minde, the lands of the West Indies (from whence all the golde cometh) had bene ours, for all is one coast, as by the Carte appeareth, and is afoze said.

Answers.

A true opinion.

A voyage of discoverie by the Pole.

The cause why the West Indies were not ours: which also should be written in an English map.

Also in this Carte by the coastes where you see C. your Lordship shall understande it is set for Cape of head land, where I. for Island, where P. for Point, where R. for River. Also in all this litle Carte I thinke nothing be erred touching the situation of the lande, save onely in these Islands of Spicrie: which, for that (as afoze is said,) every one seetheth them after his minde, there can be no confirmation howe they stande. I doe not denie, that there lacke many things, that a confirmate Carte should have, or that a right good demonstration bestreth. For there should be expressed all the mountaines and Rivers that are principall of name in the earth, with the names of Portes of the sea, the names of all principall cities, which all I might have set, but not in this Carte, for the litle space would not consent.

Your Lordship may see that seeing onely the names almost of every Region, and yet not of all, the roome is occupied, many Islands are also left out, for the said lacke of roome, the names almost of all Portes put to silence, with the roses of the windes or pointes of the compasse: For that this is not for Pilots to saile by, but a summarie declaration of that which your Lordship commandeth. And if by this your Lordship cannot wel perceive the meaning of this Card, of the which I woulde not marvelle, by reason of the rude composition of it, will it please your Lordship to advise mee to make a bigger and a better Mappe, or els that I may cause one to be made. For I knowe my selfe in this and all other nothing perfect, but Licet semper discens, nunquam tamen ad perfectam scientiam perveniens. Also I knowe, to set the forme Sphericall of the world in Plano after the true rule of Cosmographie, it would have bene made otherwise then this is: howbeit the demonstration should not have bene to plaine.

And also these degrees of longitude, that I set in the lower part of this card, should have bene set along by the line Equinoctiall, & to them must be imagined. For the degrees of longitude neede either of the poles are nothing equal in bignesse to them in the Equinoctiall; But these are set so by that setting them along the Equinoctiall, it woulde haue made obscure a great part of the mappe. Many other curiosities may bee required, which for the nonce I did not see fit to write, as well for that the intent I had principally was to satisfie your doubt touching the Spicerie, as in that I lacke treasure and time. I trust your Lordship correcting that which is erred, will accept my good will, which is to doe any thing that I may in your Lordships seruice. But from henceforth I knowe your Lordship will rather commaund me to keepe silence, then to be large, when you shall be wearied with the reading of this discourse. Iesus p̄s̄erue your estate and health.

Your Lordships
Robert Thorne 1527.

Also this Carte and that which I wrote touching the variance betwene the Emperor and the king of Portugall, is not to bee shewed or communicated there with any of that Court. For though there is nothing in it prejudiciall to the Emperours, yet it may bee a cause of paine to the makers; as well for that none may make these Cartes, but certayne appointed and allowed for makers, as for that peradventure it would not sounde well to them, that a stranger should knowe or discouer their secrets: and woulde appeare worst of all, if they vnderstand that I write touching the short way to the Spicerie by our Seas. Though peradventure of troth it is not to be looked to, as a thing that by all opinions is impossible, and I thinke neuer will come to effect: and therefore neither here nor elsewhere is it to be spoken of. For to moue it amongst wise men, it should be had in derision. And therefore to none I woulde haue written nor spoken of such things, but to your Lordshippe, to whom boldly I commit in this all my foolish fancie as to my selfe. But if it please God that into Englands I may come with your Lordshippe, I will shewe some coniectures of reason, though against the generall opinion of Cosmographers, by which shall appeare this that I say not to lacke some foundation. And till that time I beseeche your Lordshippe let it bee put to silence: and in the meane season it may please God to sende our two Englishmen, that are gone to the Spicerie, which may also bring more plaine declaration of that which in this case might be desired.

Also I knowe I needed not to haue bene so p̄s̄erue in the declaration of this Carte to your Lordship, if the said Carte had bene very well made after the rules of Cosmographie. For your Lordship would soone vnderstande it better then I, or any other that could haue made it: and so it should appeare that I shewed Delphinum narac. But for that I haue made it after my rude manner, it is necessarie that I be p̄s̄erue of glosse of mine owne worke, or els your Lordship should haue had much labour to vnderstande it, which now with it also cannot be excused, it is so grossly done. But I knowe you looked for no curious things of mee, and therefore I trust your Lordship will accept this, and holde me for excused. In other mens letters that they write they crave pardon that at this present they write no larger: but I must finish, as being pardon that at this present I write so largely. Iesus p̄s̄erue your Lordship with augmentation of dignities.

Your seruant Robert Thorne, 1527.

In the Captaine general, with the piloe maior, the matters, marchantes & other officers, to be so knit and accorded in unitie, loue, conformitie, and obedience in euery degre on all sides, that no dissention, variance, or contention may rise or spring betwixt them and the marchants of this companie, to the damage or hindrance of the voyage: for that dissention (by many experiences) hath ouerthromen many notable intrudes and likely enterprises and exploits.

- 2 Item, where furthermore euery marchant or passenger in his shippe, hath given like othe to be obedient to the Captaine general, and to euery Captaine and matter in his ship, for the obseruation of these present orders contained in this booke, and all other which hereafter shall be made by the said countailers in this present booke named, as the most part of them, for the better conduction, and preservation of the fleet, and achieving of the voyage, and to be prompt, ready and obedient in all acts and orders of honorable action, and dutie to be ministered, shewed & executed in accordance and performance of the voyage and exploit: therefore it is conuenient that this present booke shall once euery weeke (by the discretion of the Captaine) be read to the said companie, so the intent that euery man may the better remember his othe, conscience, dutie and charge.
- 3 Item, euery person by virtue of his othe, to doe effectually & with good will (as farre forth as him shall compele) all and euery such act and deed, verbe and deede, as shall be him of them from time to time commaunded, committed and enjoyned (during the voyage) by the Captaine general, with the assent of the Countail and assistants, as well in and during the whole Navigation and voyage, as also in discouering and landing, as cases and occasions shall require.
- 4 Item, all courses in Navigation to be set and kept, by the aduice of the Captaine, Piloe maior, matters, & matters mates, with the assents of the countailers, & the most number of them, and in hopes uniformly agreeing in one to preuaile, and take place, so that the Captaine general, shall in all countailles and assemblies haue a double voyer.
- 5 Item, that the fleet shall keepe together, and not separate themselves asunder, as much as by winde & weather may be done or permitted, & that the Captaines, Piloes & matters shall speedily come aboard the Admiral, when and as often as he shall seme to haue iust cause to assemble them for counsaile or consultation to be had concerning the affaires of the fleet and voyage.
- 6 Item, that the marchantes and other faithful persons in writing, shall dayly write, describe, and put in memoire the Navigation of euery day and night with the points, and obseruation of the lands, sides, elements, a kinde of the sunne, course of the moone and Starres, and the same notes by the order of the Matter and piloe of euery ship to be put in writing, the Captaine general assembling the Matters together once euery weeke (if winde and we other shal serue) to conferre all the obseruations, and notes of the said ships, so the intent it may appeare wherein the notes doe agree, and wherein they differ, and upon good debatement, deliberation, and conclusion determined, to put the same into a common ledger, to remaine of record for the companie: the like order to be kept in proportioning of the Cardes, Astrolabes, and other instruments prepared for the voyage, at the charge of the companie.

Exemplar Epistolæ seu literarum Misiviarum, quas illustrissimus Princeps Eduardus, eius nominis Sextus, Angliæ, Franciæ, & Hiberniæ Rex, misit ad Principes septentrionalem, ac Orientalem mundi plagam inhabitantes iuxta mare glaciale, nec non Indiam Orientalem. Anno Domini 1553. Regni sui anno septimo, & vltimo.

Eduardus sextus, Angliæ, Franciæ, & Hiberniæ Rex, &c. Omnibus Regibus & principibus ac dominis, & cunctis Iudicibus terræ, & Ducibus eius, quibuscumque est excellens aliqua dignitas in ea, cunctis in locis quæ sunt sub vniuerso caelo: Pax, tranquillitas, & honor vobis, terris, & regionibus vestris quæ imperio vestro subiacent, cuique vestrum quemadmodum conuenit ei. Propterea quod indidit Deus Opt. Max. hominibus præ cunctis aliis viuentibus, cor & desiderium tale, vt appetat quisque cum aliis societatem habere, amare, & vicissim amari, beneficijs afficere, & mutua accipere beneficia studeat, id eo cuique pro facultate sua hoc desiderium in omnibus quidem hominibus beneficijs fouere & conseruare conuenit, in illis autem maxime, qui hoc desiderio adducti, à remotis etiam regionibus ad eos veniunt. Quo enim longius iter eius rei gratia ingressi sunt, eo ardentius in eis hoc desiderium fuisse declarant. Insuper etiam ad hoc, nos patrum maiorumque nostrorum exempla inuitant, qui semper humanissime susceperunt, & benignissime tractauerunt illos, qui tum à locis propinquis, tum à remotis, eos amice adibant, eorum se protectioni commendantes. Quod si omnibus id præ stare æquum est, certe mercatoribus imprimis præstari debet, qui per vniuersum orbem discurrunt, mare circumnaustrantes & aridam, vt res bonas & viles, quæ Dei beneficium in regione eorum inueniuntur, ad remotissimas regiones & regna adferant, atque inde vicissim referant, quod suæ regioni vtile ibi repererint: vt & populi ad quos eunt, non destituantur commodis quæ non profert illis terra eorum, & ipsi sint participes rerum quibus illi abundant. Nam Deus cæli & terræ humano generi maxime consulens, noluit vt omnia in qualis regione inuenirentur, quò regio ope alterius regionis indigeret, & gens ab alia gente commo dum aliquod expectaret, ac ita stabiliiretur amicitia inter omnes, singulisque omnibus beneficijs quærenter. Hoc itaque incunde, ac stabiliendæ amicitij desiderio moti viri quidam regni nostri, in remotas maritimas regiones instituerunt, vt inter nostros & illos populos, vicijs & mercibus inferendis & efferendis aperirent, nosque rogauerunt vt id illis concederemus. Qui petitioni petitioni illorum annuentes, concessimus viro honorabili & forti, Hugoni Wilbeo, & alijs qui cum eo sunt seruis nostris fidei & charis, vt pro sua voluntate, in regiones eis prius incognitas eant, quæ situri ea quibus nos caremus, & adducant illis ex nostris terris, id quo illi carent. Atque ita illis & nobis commodum inde accedat, sitque amicitia perpetua, & fœdus indissolubile inter illos & nos, dum permittent illi nos accipere de rebus, quibus superabundant in regionis suis, & nos concedemus illis ex regnis nostris res, quibus deficiuntur. Rogamus itaque vos Reges & Principes, & omnes quibus aliqua est potestas in terra, vt virtus istis nostris, transitum permittatis per regiones vestras. Non enim tangent quicquam ex rebus vestris inuitis vobis. Cogitate quod homines & ipsi sunt. Et si qua re caruerint, oramus pro vestra beneficentia, cum vos illis tribuatis, accipientes vicissim ab eis, quod poterunt rependere vobis. Ita vos gerite erga eos, quemadmodum cuperitis vt nos, & subditi nostri, nos gereremus erga seruos vestros, si quando transferint per regiones nostras. Atque promittimus vobis per Deum omnium quæ celo, terra & mari continentur, perque vitam nostram, & tranquillitatem regnorum nostrorum, nos pari benignitate seruos vestros accepturos, si ad regna nostra aliquando venerint. Atque à nobis & subditis nostris, ac si nati fuissent in regnis nostris ita benigne tractabuntur, vt rependamus vobis benignitatem, quam nostris exhibueritis. Postquam vos Reges, Principes, &c. rogauimus, vt humanitate & beneficentia omni prosequamini seruos nostros nobis charos, oramus omnipotentem Deum nostrum, vt vobis diurnam vitam largiatur, & pacem que nullam habeat finem. Scriptum Londini, quæ ciuitas est primaria regni nostri. Anno 5515, à creato mundo, mense Iar, 14. die mensis, anno septimo regni nostri.

The copie of the letters missiue, which the right noble Prince

Edward the sixt sent to the Kings, Princes, and other Potentates, inhabiting the Northeatt partes of the world, toward the mightie Empire of Cathay, at such time as Sir Hugh Willoughby knight, and Richard Chancelor, with their companie, attempted their voyage thither in the yeere of Christ, 1553. and the seuenth and last yeere of his raigne.

Edward the sixt, by the grace of God, King of England, France, and Ireland, &c. To all Kings, Princes, Rulers, Judges, and Governours of the earth, and all other hauing any excellent dignitie on the same, in all places vnder the vniuersall heauen: peace, tranquillitie, and honour, be vnto you, and your lands and regions, which are vnder your dominions, and to euery of you, as is comement.

Forasmuch as the great and Almighty God hath giuen vnto mankind, aboue all other living creatures, such a heart and desire, that euery man desireth to ioyne friendship with other, to loue, and be loued, also to giue and receaue mutuall benefites: it is therefore the duetie of all men, according to their power, to maintaine and increase this desire in euery man, with well desiring to all men, and especially to the we this good affection to such, as being moued with this desire, come vnto them from farre Countreies. For howe much the longer voyage they haue attempted for this intent, so much the more doe they thereby declare that this desire hath bene ardent in them. Furthermore also, the examples of our fathers and predecessors doe inuite vs hereto, forasmuch as they haue euer gently and louingly intreated such as of friendly minde came to them, as well from Countreies neere hand, as farre remote, commending themselves to their protection. And if it be right and equitie to thewe such humanitie toward all men, doubtles the same ought chiefly to be the wep to Harribants, who wandering about the world, search both the land and the sea, to carry such good and profitable things, as are found in their Countreies, to remote regions and kingdomes, and againe to bring from the same, such things as they finde their commodious for their owne Countreies: both as well that the people, to whom they goe, may not be destitute of such commodities as their Countreies bring not foorth to them, as that also they may be partakers of such things, wherof they abound. For the God of heauen and earth, greatly prouiding for mankind, would not that all things should be founde in or giuen, to the ende that one should haue neede of another: that by this means friendship might be established among all men, and euery one seeke to grauntie all. For the establishing and furtherance of which vniuersall amitie, certayne men of our Realme, moued herewith by the same desire, haue intreated and taken vpon them a voyage by sea into farre Countreies, to the intent that betwixte our people and them, a way may be opened to bring in, & carry out marchandise

... , Hagoni Wilbeo, & alij in regiones eis prius incognitas terris, id quo illi carere perpetua, & fecus indissolubilibus superabundant in reguntur. Rogamus itaque vos ut viris istis nostris, transsum ex rebus vestris inuitis vobis, sicut pro vestra beneficentia, committimus vobis. Ita vos gerere ceteremus erga seruos vestros, sicut vobis per Deum omnium quae utilitatem regionum nostrorum a nostra aliquando venient, sicut ita benigne tractabuntur, sicut sicutquam vos Reges, Principes, & alij seruos nostros nobis charitativam largiatur, & pacem quae a regni nostri. Also assenting to their petition, have licensed the right valiant and worthy sir Hugh Willoughby, knight, and other our trustie and faithfull servants, which are with him, according to their desire, to goe to Countreies to them heretofore unknowne, as well to seeke such things as we lacke, as also to carry unto them from our regions, such things as they lacke. So that hereby not onely commoditie may ensue both to them and us, but also an indissoluble and perpetuall league of friendship be established betwene us both, while they permit us to take of their things, such whereof they have abundance in their regions, and we againe grant them such things of ours, whereof they are destitute. We therefore desire you kings & princes, and al other, to whome there is any power on the earth, to permit unto these our servants, free passage by your regions and dominions: for they shall not touch any thing of yours buttelling unto you. Consider you that they also are men. If therefore they shall stand in neede of any thing, we desire you of all humanitie, and for the nobilitie which is in you, to aide and helpe them with such things as they lacke, receiving againe of them such things as they shall be able to give you in recompence. Show your selves so towards them, as you would that we and our subiects should receive our selves towards your servants, if at any time they shall passe by our regions.

Thus doing, we promise you by the God of all things that are contained in heauen, earth, and the sea, and by the life and tranquillitie of our kingdomes, that we will with like humanitie accept your servants, if at any time they shall come to our kingdomes, where they shall as friendly and gently be entertained, as if they were borne in our Dominions, that we may hereby recompence the favour and benignitie which you have shewed to our men. Thus after we have desired you Kings and princes, &c. With all humanitie and favour, to entertaine our welbelovied servants, we will pray our Almighty God, to grant you long life, and peace, which never shall have ende. June.

The first of June the winde being at North contrary to vs; we came backe againe to Harewell, and remained there vntill the 15 day, carping for the winde, for all this time the winde was contrary to our purpose.

The 15 day being at Harewell in the latitude of 52 degrees, in the morning we wayed our anchors, and went sooth into the wandes about two miles from the towne, and lay there that night.

The 16 day at eight of the clocke we set forward, and sailed vntill we came adwarth Alborough, and there stayed that night.

The 17 day about five of the clocke before noone we went backe vnto Orfordness, and there remained vntill the 19 day.

The 19 day at eight of the clocke in the morning we went backe to Harewell, and abode there three dayes tarrying for the winde.

The 23 day of June the winde being faire in the South-west we sailed into the seas to Orfordness, and from thence into the seas ten leagues North-east: then being past the sands, we changed our course five leagues North-north-east: about midnight we changed our course againe, and went due North continuing in the same vnto the 27 day.

The 27 day about seven of the clocke North-north-west 42 leagues, to the end to fall vnto Shetland: then the winde beared to the West, so that we could lie but North and by West, continuing in the same course 40 leagues, whereby we could not fetch Shetland: then we sailed North 16 leagues by estimation, after that North and by West, and North-north-west, then South-east, with diuers other courses, traueling and tracing the seas, by reason of stormie and manifold contrary windes, vntill the 14 day of July: and then the same entering into Leo, we discovered land Eastward of vs, vnto the which we sailed that night as much as we might: and after we went on shoze with our pinnelle, and found little houses to the number of 30, where we knewe that it was inhabited, but the people were fled away, as we iudged, for feare of vs.

July.

The land was all full of little Islands, and that innumerable, which were called (as we learned afterwards) Aegeland and Walgeland, which lieth from Orfordness North and by east, being in the latitude of 66 degrees. The distance betwene Orfordness and Aegeland 250 leagues. Then we sailed from thence 12 leagues North-west, and found many other Islands, and there came to an anker the 19 day, and named our pinnelle, and went on shoze to the Islands, and found people mowing and making of hay, which came to the shoze and welcomed vs. In which place were an innumerable sort of Islands, which were called the Isles of Ross, being vnder the dominion of the king of Denmarke: which place was in latitude 66 degrees, and 30 minurs. The winde being contrary, we remained there three dayes, and there was an innumerable sort of fowles of diuers kindes, of which we tooke very many.

In this land dwelt another, as it seemeth.

Ross Islands.

The 22 day the winde coming faire, we departed from Ross, sailing North-north-east, keeping the sea vntill the 27 day, and then we dyed nere vnto the land, which was still East of vs: then went sooth our pinnelle to seeke harbours, and found many good harbours, of the which we entered into one with our shippes, which was called Seansew, and the land being Islands, were called Lewfoot, or Lofoot, which were plentifully inhabited, and very gentle people, being all vnder the king of Denmarke: but we could not learne how farre it was from the maine land, and we remained there vntill the 30 day, being in latitude 68 degrees, & from the foresaid Ross about 30 leagues North-north-east.

Seansew Harbour.

August.

The 30 day of July about noone we wayed our anchors, and went into the Seas, and sailed along these Islands North-north-east, keeping the land still in sight vntill the second day of August: then haling in close aboord the land, to the intent to knowe what lande it was, there came a skiffe of the Island aboord of vs, of whom we asked many questions, who shewed vnto vs, that the Island was called Synnam, which is the latitude of 69 degree, and from Seansew in thirtie leagues, being also vnder the king of Denmarke, and that there was no merchandise there, but onely dyed fish, and traime oyle. Then we being purposed to goe vnto Finmarke, inquired of him, if we might haue a pilot to bring vs vnto Finmarke, & he said, that if we could beare in, we should haue a good harbour, and on the next day a pilot to bring vs to Finmarke, vnto the which

which is the strongest holde in Finmarke, and most resorted to by report. But when we would have entered into an harbour, the land being very high on every side, there came such floues of mist, and terrible whirlwindes, that we were not able to beare in, but by violence were constrained to take the sea againe, our pinnesse being vnsuited: we sailed North and by East, the winde increasing so fast that we were not able to beare any sail, butooke them in, and lay a while, to the end to let the flame ouer passe, And that night by violence of winde, and thickenesse of mist, we were not able to keepe together within sight, and then about midnight we lost our pinnesse, which was a vnsuited vnto vs. Althow as it was day, and the fogge ouerpast, we looked about, and at the last we descried one of our shippes to Leeward of vs: then we spied an hallocke of our fore sail, and bare roome with her, which was the Confidence, but the Edward we could not see. When the flau somewhat abating, we and the Confidence hoisted by our sailes the fourth day, sailing Northeast and by North, to the end to fall with the Wardhouse, as we did consulte to do before, in case we should part company. Thus running Northeast and by North, and Northeast fiftie leagues, then we founden, and had 160 fadoms, where by we thought to be farre from land, and perceived that the land lay not as the Globe made mention. Wherefore we changed our course the first day, and sailed South east and by South eight and forty leagues, thinking thereby to finde the Wardhouse.

Spa Hugh Willoughbie lost the sight of the Edward.

The eighth day much winde rising at the West Northwell, we not knowing how the coast lay, strooke our sailes, and lay adrift, where we founden, and found 160 fadoms as aforesaid.
 The ninth day, the winde bearing to the South Southeast, we sailed Northeast 25 leagues.
 The tenth day we founden, and could get no ground, neither yet could see any land, whereat we wondered: then the winde coming at the North east, we ranne Southeast about 48 leagues.
 The 11 day, the winde being at South, we founden, and found 40 fadoms, and faire land.
 The 12 day, the winde being at South and by East, we lay with our saile East, and East and by North 30 leagues.
 The 14 day early in the morning, we descried land, which land we bare with all, holding out our boat to discouer what land it might be: but the boat could not come to land the water was so shoale, where was very much ice also, but there was no similitude of habitation, and this land lyeth from Spennam East and by North 160 leagues, being in latitude 72 degrees. Then we plyed to the Northward the 15, 16 and 17 day.
 The 18 day, the winde coming at the North east, and the Confidence being troubled with high water, and Docked, we thought it good to seek a harbour for her remedie: then we bare toome the 18 day Southsoutheast, about 70 leagues.
 The 21 day we founden, and found 10 fadome, after that we founden againe, and found but 7 fadome, so shoale and shoalder water, and yet could see no land, where we marvelled greatly: to a man the danger, we bare roome into the sea all that night Northwell and by West.
 The next day we founden, and had 20 fadoms, then shaped our course, and ranne West Southwell until the 23 day: then we descried Lohse land, vnto which we bare as nigh as we could, and it appeared vnto vs inhabitable. Then we plyed Westward along by that land, which lyeth West Southwell, and East North east, and much winde blowing at the West, we hailed into the sea North and by East 30 leagues. Then the winde coming about at the North east, we sailed West North well: after that, the winde bearing to the Northwell, we lay with our sailes West Southwell, about 14 leagues, and then descried land, and bare in with it, being the 28 day, finding shoale water, and bare in till we came to 3 fadome, then perceiving it to be shoale water, and also seeing by the sands, we hailed out againe North east along that land but till we came to the point thereof. That land turning to the Westward, we ranne along 16 leagues Northwell: then coming into a fayre bay, we went on land with our boat, which place was uninhabited, but yet it appeared vnto vs that the people had bene there, by crosses, and other signes: from thence we went all along the coast Westward.

North to this land, in 72 degrees.

The fourth day of September we lost sight of land, by reason of contrary windes, and the eighth day we descried land againe. Within two dayes after we lost the sight of it: then turning West and by South about 30 leagues, we gat the sight of land againe, and bare in with it vntill night: then perceiving it to be a lee shoare, we gat vs into the sea, to the end to haue sea roome.
 The 12 of September we hailed to shoarward againe, hauing then in different winde and weather: then being neere vnto the shoare, and the tide almost spent, we ranne to an anchor in 30 fadoms water.
 The 13 day we came along the coast, which lay Northwell & by West, & Southeast & by East.
 The 14 day we came to an anchor within two leagues of the shoare, hauing 60 fadoms.

September.

There we went a Hoie with our boat, and found two or three good harbours, the land being rocky, and high, but as for people could we see none. The 15 day we came still along the coast till the 17 day: then the winde being contrary unto vs, we thought it best to returne vnto the bay which we had found before, and so we bare roamer with the same, howbeit we could not accomplish our desire that day. The next day being the 18 of September, we entered into the haven, and there came to an anker at 6 fadoms. This haven runneth into the maine, about two leagues, and is in breadth halfe a league, wherein were very many leale fishes, and other great fishes, and vpon the maine we saw beares, great deere, foxes, with diuers strange beasts, as guloines, and such other which were to vs vnkno'wne, and also wonderfull. Thus remaining in this haven the space of a weeke, seeing the yeere farre spent, and also very euill wether, as frost, snow, and haile, as though it had bene the berpe of winter. we thought best to winter there. Wherefore we sent out three men Southwardwest, to search if they could finde people, who went three dayes iourney, but could finde none: after that, we sent other three Westward foure dayes iourney, which also returned without finding any people. Then sent we three men Southward three dayes iourney, who in like sort returned without finding of people, or any similitude of habitation.

In this haven
they died.

Sebastian Cabota, who long before had this secret in his minde: I shall not need here to describe that voyage, soasmuch as the same is largely and fully written in the Latine tongue, by that learned young man Clement Adams, Schoolemaister to the Queenes bestshemen, as he receiued it at the mouth of the said Richard Chancellor.

tres naues mercantur, quarum maximam partem de integro ædificandam, ac reficiendam curant. Qua quidem in re, mercatorum cura, an fabricarum diligentia, maiori me afficiat ad-miracione, penitus est incertum. Illi enim assamenta firmissima pulchreque; siccata ad nauium fabricam comparant: hi in defesso labore, ac arte summa, eadem inter se committunt, rimis stupe obstructis, ac carinis picatis, vnus etiam imam partem inuento peracri, & ingenioso muniuerunt. Acceperant enim in quibusdam Oceani partibus teredines generari, quæ vel crassissi-ma etiamnum robora perforarent. Quo magis ab hoc periculo nauigantes forent securi, par-tem nauis vndis depressam, tenuibus plumbi laminis obducunt. Post fabricatas naues, ac armamentis instructas, cepit illos non minor viatici sollicitudo: quod pro temporis ratione, & na-uigationis longinquitate fuerat prospiciendum. Ad hæc, cum prospicerent Orientalem orbis plagam esse petendam, non minor periculum erat: octodecim mensium conuictu naucleri tenerent, vt an pateret aditus iam tum in incerto erat: octodecim mensium conuictu nauis instruant, quod quidem hoc consilio faciunt: cum nostris per illam immensam, & horrendam frigidam oram suerat trajiciendum, prudenter in rem consulentes, sex mensium cibaria præbent, quo illuc nauiggare, totidem mensium, quo ibi moram facere hiberno celo reditum negante: rursum tantum-dem quo remeare possunt, assignant. Post repositam (vt diximus) penam, post arma omnis gene-ris in naues congesta, Duces ac quasi antesignani tantæ rei deerant: cui esset multi sese offerrent viri rerum ancipitem ignari, tamen Hugo Willowbeius vir imprimis strenuus, ac non obscuro loco natus, hanc curam sibi delegari impensius postulat, cuius facile præ cæteris, cum ob corporis formam (erat enim proceræ staturæ) tum ob singularem in re bellica industriam a mercatorum collegio haberetur ratio. Constituitur ergo Nauarchus, assignaturque; illi nauis prætorica, sic vt in cæteris quoque; imperium haberet. Cum de reliquarum præfectis consularetur, ac huic muniti multi offerrentur, omnium consensu vicit Richardus Chancellor, vir ob multa ingenij documenta spectabilis, in quo vno summa conficiendi negotij spes erat. Hunc aluerat Henricus Sydenius, adolescens nobilis, Regique; Edouardo apprime charus, qui mercatorum

Vehementer pium institutum vestrum amplector (viri honestissimi) qui pro egregia vestra erga patriam pietate in rem, & Angliæ (vt spero) vtilem, ac patriæ honorificam, animo & co-gitatione incumbitis. Quem quidem conatum vestrum, nos quoque; pro viribus adiuuare paramur: nec quicquam nobis tam charum ducimus, quod non liberet: huius tam laudabilis propositi nomine expenderimus. Imprimisque mihi gratulor, me illud ingenium fouisse, quod vobis tam præclara molientibus, aliquo modo vsui esse possit. Nihilominus tamen, vos huius rei uelocios esse nolim: me Chancellorum eo animo a me dimittere, non quod fastidiam, vel quod mihi grauis alumnus esse videatur, sed vt promptam in adiuuando vestro consilio voluntatem meam pariter intelligeretis, atque; Cancelero meo commendatione mea a vobis debita tribueretur authoritas. Vos illum fama, ego illum experientia, vos verbis, ego rebus, vos sermone & congressu, ego quotidiano conuictu hominis ingenium penitus habeo per-spectum, & exploratum: Nec latere vos debet, (honestissimi patres) quanta discrimina, & vestro, & patriæ nomine, aditurus est. Cuius (si propicia numina proficiscen-tem seruent) nos non immemores esse decebit. Nos pecuniolam fortunæ alex credimus, ille dulcissimam vitam præuissimam nari, & incertis periculorum casibus exponet. Nos cum notis, amicis, ac cognatis suauem, ac placidam vitam transigemus, ille dum ignotos, & indomitos nautas in officio continere studebit, quantis laboribus frangetur? quot curis, vigilijsque; angetur? quas molestias deuorare cogetur? Nos patrias sedes tenebimus, ille extera & ignota regna petet: Ille Barbaris & feris gentibus salutem committet, ille etiam monstrificis ponti belluis caput obiciet. Quapropter pro periculorum magnitudine, pro officij sui dignitate, vestro fauo-re abeunte proficisci, & (si fors ferat) vt conspiciamus reducens, liberaliter quoque; munerari conueniet.

Postquam hæc, aut non longe alia, multo disertissime egregius adolescens perorasset, alius

De Moscouia, quæ &amp; Russia dicitur.

Moscouia quæ & Russia alba nominatur, terra est amplissima, hinc inde varijs generibus contermina, à meridie atque Oriente Tartaris cingitur: Septentrionale latus Oceanus Scythicus ambit. Ad Occidentem tenent Lapones, gens Iyluestris, nec vlli populo commercio linguæ nota: post hos Austrum versus incolunt Succi, dein Finlandia, ab hac Liouij, iuxta hos Lituani. Pluribus ac maximis fluminibus irrigua est, multisque locis palustris. Nobilissima fluminum Rha, quod illi materna idiomate Volgam, Tanais quem Don, Boristhenes quem hodie Neper nominant: horum Rha, atque Boristhenes, eodem lacu orti, immensa terræ spacia peragrunt. Rha amcenos amnes in se recipiens, ac ex ipso statim fonte Orientem petens, post varios flexus ac curfus ambages aduenas aquas, suasque in Caspiū mare pluribus ostijs exonerat.

Tanais fonte haud spectabili ab ipsa scatebra grandescens, tandē in amplum lacū se diffundit: post euagantes aquas in arcum cogens angustus labitur, ac post aliquot passuum millia, iterum in lacum diffusus (quem Iuan appellant) flexuoso metu vadit, donec in vicina Volge peruenit. Deinde quasi comitem auerſatus, transuerso cursu flexens in meridiem contendit, ac Mæoticam paludem petit.

Boristhenes quem ex eodem fonte cum Rha ortum diximus, cognatas aquas in austrum defert, subinde auxiliares amnes recipiens: hic maximas gentes præterluens, tandem in pontum Euxinum sese condit.

Haber & Moscouia lacus, & stagna: lacus etiam deciduo syderum semine, pisces generant: Inter hos principatum tenet Bellij ozera, vel ob hoc præcipuè memorabilis, quod arx munitissima in eo sit extructa, quo Moscouitarum princeps gazam suam confert, si quando bellorum terror premit.

Quod ad Rypheæ iuga spectat perpetuis niuib; candidia, vnde veteres Tanaim ortum habere somniarunt, reliquaque naturæ portenta, quæ Græcia olim finxit, nec nostri qui nuper redierunt, videre, nec Trimestri spatio illic versati, ac Moscouitarū alloquio vt cunq; imbuti, audiū cognouerunt. Terram esse planam, ac campestem illi, ac raro in montes assurgere: & qua vergit in Septentrionem latissimè saltus habere. Plurima ibi abies, vnde ad struendas ædes maritima. Hi saltus feras alunt, vros, vrsos, lupos nigros, aliāmq; feram nostro orbi non visam, quam illi Rossomakkam nominant: rarum feræ ingenium, & spectabile: satura enim & distenta, duorum stipitum angustias quærit, per quas se transmittens, ventris onus (quod alias non egerit) excolat: vros equites vt plurimum venantur, vros pedites lignijs furcis. Septentrionalis tractus tam horrenidi frigoris esse dicitur, vt ex humidis lignis in foco structis distillans liquor in siritiam concreſcat: tanta diuersitas tantillo spacio, vt hinc prunam, illinc glaciem in eadem face cemas. Postquam hyemare apud illos incipit, assidua gelu incrementa capit, nec se prius remittit, quàm solis radij nostrum orbem reuidentes canescentem terram fulgore exhilarat, tristeq; gelu tepore soluit. Nautæ certè nostri, qui in naue remanserant ex inferiori stego in foros scandentes, tam subita Lipothymia nonnunquam sunt correpti, vt intermortui subinde reuerent: tanta erat illic rigentis cœli inclementia: Australiora illius aliquantū mitiora sunt.

De Moscuæ Regia vrbe, &amp; de Moscouitarum Rege.

Reliquum est vt promissa opusculi pars à nobis dicatur, deq; Moscuæ regia vrbe, & de Moscouitarum principe latius paulò disseramus, cuius imperium amplissimum est, opesq; hoc tempore insignes: Et quoniā ipsa vrbs facillè inter cæteras principatum tenet, meritò sibi primum locum vendicet. Vrbs amplitudo, vt nostri affirmant, Londinum cum suburbio magnitudine æquat. Aedificia habet multa, sed cultu nequaquam nostris conferenda. Vici plures sunt, sed incompōsiti, vix lapide non sternuntur vt nostræ: ædium parietes lignij sunt, recta scandulis vt plurimum muniuntur: iūcta oppido arx est & elegans, & munita. Huic à Septentrione ante dicitur vrbs lateritio muro. Ipsiū etiam arcis mœnia, lateribus struuntur, quorum crassities pedes ostodecim colligit: ab altera parte sicca fossa munitur castellum, ab altera flumine Volgda alluitur, quod in Orientem tendens sociales aquas Occæ adiungit. Sunt in castro nouæ ædes sacræ non inuolutæ quas tenent cœnobitæ: habent etiam papam suum, ac quosdam alios præfules, qui omnes vt plurimum in arce degunt: Ipsiū certè Principis Regia minus culta, quadratæ formæ, & structuræ humilis, nostrorum palatiorum nitore longè superatur: fenestrarum angustiq; nunc vitrijs nunc specularibus lumen admittit. Attalica magnifica nostratū principum aulis ornamenta, illis decant. Vndiq; parietibus adherent scamne, necq; id solum in Imperatoris Regia, verum etiā vbicq; in priuatorum edibus. Exactis iam duodecim ab ingressu in vrbe diebus, adest nuntius ad Regiæ ædes nostros inuitans. Angli moram pertæsi cupidè paruere. tantæ maiestatis patrum, poterat tam augustus venerādorū patrum conspectus in suo mē-adornabat, tanta copia vt pondere etiam grauaret. Melior certè pars vasorum, ac potiorum omnium ex auro lectissimo fabricata. Quatuor ollæ magnitudine conspicuæ, reliquam aureoquinos propè pedes altitudine colligerent: fuerunt etiam argentea quædam Dolia, à nostris minoribus capacitate non longè differentia, quibus principis potum priuatim seruant. Quatu-ratio est, vt Moscouitæ referunt, tum vt familiam probe noscat, tum vt qui principis amicitia exciderunt hoc modo norēntur.

De re Militari Moscouitarum.

Quoties finitimorum iniurię principem in bellū euocant, haud vnq; tam infra trecenta vi-rorum millia in hostem armat. Ex quorum numero, centum circiter millia in aciem secū educens, reliqua in tutelam Imperij in præsidijs aptis in locis disponit. Colonus nullū, nullum Mercatorem in militiam legit, tanta enim est populi multitudo, vt his domi relictis, iuuentus bellis gerendis abundè suppeditetur. Quoscuq; in expeditionem ducit, proprio sumptu seipsos alunt: pedestrem pugnam non nouerunt, equites in aciem procedūt. Arua sunt his lorica, & galea, lorica foris auro regitur, vel holoserico etiam gregario militi. Impenitæ uauet opulenti-am ostentare. Arcu ac sagittis vtuntur more Turcarum. Lanceas etiam in aciem gerunt: stapeda adductiore equitant, idq; vt Turcæ: Genus est hominū, algoris vltra omnem fidem patiens, ac

ac victus parcissimum. Nam cum tellus alta niue candet, cum terra horrido gelu astricta riges, tamen hic Sarmata, sago stipitibus, vnde ventus ac niues scruunt, expasso, exiguum ignem sibi fruit, atq; uersus a vento iacet: sago illi pro tecto est: sago pro muro: in summa sago instar omnium est. Hic incola niuium aqua, è gelido amne petita, ac similagine auenz admixta, conuiuium suum instruit: ac his dapibus satius, ac lautè pascitur, ad ignem decumbit, lateraque huiusmodi lautitiarum crapula defessa, rigenti solo perunt. Huic rigens solum pro pluma, triculus seu cilex pro ceruicali. Si quis etiam non lautiori pabulo nutritus quam herus, hero est contubernalis. Quam merito hic ignobilis & obscurus Sarmata, effeminatâ ducibus nostris molliciem exprobrat, qui cœlo longè elementiore, pellitis ocreis reuonibusq; vtuntur. Hic est gregariorum militum apparatus. At qui illustriori dignitatis sunt loco, instructiores paulò in militiam proficiscuntur. Ipsius quidem Imperatoris apparatus vel tum maximè est insignis: Tentorii enim vela, vt plurimum aurea sunt, spectabili etiamnum plumariorum opere in margantibus ornata. Quoties cum hoste conferendum est, incompositi in hostile agmen procedunt: neque a ciem dirigunt (vt mos est nostris) sed in insidijs collocati aduersarios adoriuntur. Ipsorum equi bidui in ediam facillè ferunt. In bello vt plurimum arborum cortices, ac virgultorum mollia his sunt pro pabulo: bimestri spatio hanc tantam penuriam, etiam vegeti, ac fortes & equos & eques non rarò perferunt. Si cuius opera in bello strenua princeps vsus est, huc prædico aut humido aliquo donat, in alimentum sui suorūmq; qui tamè ad ipsum Imperatorè post eius mortem redit, si nulla proles virilis sexus ipsi contingat: nam si numerosam etiam sceminarum sobolem genuerit, tamen hunc hereditariū agrum vendicat princeps, nisi quod exiguam fortè partem ad dotandas puellas princeps concedat. Porro qui Imperatoris munificentiâ illo modo muneratur, graui pecunia astringitur tot milites in bello alere, cum necessitas postulat, quot illius fundi redditus Imperatoris censura abundè nutrire possit. Haud melioris sunt forte, quibus hereditario iure agri contingunt. Nam si moriuntur, nec sobolem masculam reliquerint, decedentis prædica fisco Imperatoris statim cedunt. Super hæc, si opimus aliquis, bello inutilis ab Aulicis principibus deferatur, quod rei militari in idoneus amplas facultates habeat, quibus multi clari sanguinis viri bello apti nutrantur, mox arcessitur infelix, opibusq; quas tantis cum sudoribus, quas tot laboribus per omnem vitam comparauit, tantillo temporis momento exiit, nisi quod particulam aliquam à principe recipit, ad se, cõiugem, liberos, ac domesticos alendos. Hæc autem à populo Imperatoris suo tam alacriter sunt, vt credas illos aliena restituisse, non sua alieno dedisse. His bonis pro meritis singulorum aulicos suos donat princeps. In Bellis etiam, quo quis sæpius in expeditione mittitur, eo propensior in se principis fauorem augurat, etiã cum suis impensis seipsum alar: sicuti antea à nobis dictū est: tantum est apud omnes ducis vi obsequiū.

Ingens Regum
obseruatiã.

De Legatis Ducis Moscouitarum.

Non minori magnificentia quam qua diximus, Legatos suos in obeundis negotijs ad ceteros reges mittit Moscouita: nam nostris Moscuæ agentibus, legatos duos ad Poloniam Regem iter suscipientes vel ingressos, quingenti Equites ornatissimi comitabantur, quorum melior pars veste aurea, ac serico induebatur, & qui inculcissimè cymatili, vt interim equorum strata, auro argentòq; inducta, & spectabili Phrygiõnum opere ornata silentio transam: habebant in super centum sonipedes albos pulcherrimosq; in quos (si alicuius tædiū ipsos in itinere cepisset) cum vellent transcenderent. Sed nunc tempus exigit vt ad quasdam alias Moscouitarum vrbes orationem conuertamus, & merces quibus abundant breuiter perstringamus.

Novogardia.

Sequitur Moscuam celeberrima vrbiū Novogardia, quæ vt illi dignitate est inferior, in magnitudine non parum superat. Emporium est totius Imperij longè nobilissimum: & licet regiam sedem sibi princeps Moscuæ constituit, suminis tamen opportunus interlapus, ac post in mare Sarmaticum exoneratus, facit Mercatorum conuentu, ipsa Regia vrbe celebratiorem. Huic vrbi ob summam optimi lini ac canabis abundantiam, inter reliquas regni vrbes facillè datur palma: vendit etiam coria, mel, & ceram. Instituerunt ibi Collegium mercatorum Flandri, qui pari perfidia vsi apud illos, qua nupsit apud nos, priuilegia amiserant, quæ sibi restitui, nostris ibi morantibus enixè à duce postularunt. Hi, audito nostrorum accessu, literas expediunt ad principem, nostros falsis criminibus onerant, & in suspicionem piraticæ vocant, itaq; hortantur vt detineat, ac in vincula conijciat: Hæc cum nostris nuntiata sunt, in summam desperationem adducuntur domum reditionis: Princeps tamen multè illustrissimus, regijs scriptis confirmatus, fidem nequaquam mendacibus literis adhibuit.

monomachiam ruunt: aut si alteruter vel uterque parum strenuus, aut pugna minus habilis sit, pugiles publicos substituunt: habent enim pugiles, quibus solo hoc quæstu victus constat. Hij armati in arenam descendunt: tela sunt vt plurimum claua bellica, & venabulum: fit pugna pedestris. Cuius igitur pugil in certamine superatur, is absque mora in vincula conijcitur, vbi miseris modis tractatur, donec cum aduersario certamen finiat. Præter hæc, si vterq; ortus sit claris parentibus, atque alter alterum priuatum hostem deposcit, annuit Iudex, nec tum vicarij pugillibus fas est vti. Porro qui splendidiori loco natus est, hostem obscuriori ortu familia, in certamine respuit. Si quis pauper ære alieno strictus, creditori soluendo non sit, abducit illum creditor, atque cotisq; opere faciundo exercet, vel alteri operam obærati elocat, donec operando debitum persoluit: sunt qui sponte, se, coniugem, ac liberos opulencioribus per omnem vitam emancipabunt, vt in initio exiguam pecuniolæ summam accipiant, ac post pro reliqua vita alimenta capiant: adeo illis vilescit libertas.

De furum supplicijs.

SI quis furto deprehensus sit, in carcerem conijciunt, ac flagris subinde cædunt, neque ob primam noxam suspendunt, vt nos, atque hæc, legem misericordiae appellat: qui secundò delinquit, illi nasum præcidunt, ac stigmatis frontem signant: Tertia noxa crucem meretur, Multi, & infiq;es sunt crumenisecæ: quod si principis seueritas ipsos non tolleret, non esset resistere illorum prouentui.

De Religione.

GRÆCÆ Ecclesiæ dogma amplectuntur: simulachra Diuorum in templis non admittunt: tabulas tamen diuorum, imaginibus pictas in sacris ædibus frequentes habent: has adorant, his dona offerunt, his cereos accendunt, has etiam sacro fonte aspergunt, alioqui illis nullus est honos. Simulachra nostra nullam diuinitatis vim habere asserunt, quòd in templis dicantur perinde vt à statuarijs emiuntur. Priuatis in ædibus statuas instar penatium colunt. Hæ in obscurissima parte donius vt plurimum statuunt. Si quis domum vicini intrat, priuina omnium penates salutat, etiam cum non videat: si scamnum aut sella stet in proximo, subinde frontem illidens in sellam, ac crebro capite & corpore nutans lærem adorat. Sacrorum ac prophanorum virorum in vestitu nulla diuersitas. Nulli nec sacro nec profano interdicitur matrimonium. Cæterum si Ecclesiastici vxor è vita decedat, secundas nuptias repetere non licet. Quocirca ex sacerdotibus (vt vocant) secularibus sunt plerumque Monachi, quibus perpetua imperatur castitas. Sacra officia in templis materno idiomate fiunt. Ex pane fermentato Eucharistiam consecrant, ac post consecrationem, lance in capite per templum circumferunt nec participare volentem prohibent. Nouum ac vetus testamentum in templis legunt lingua vernacula tam offensare, vt nec ipse qui legit intelligat. Dum illa leguntur, garrule, confabulari, ac obstrepere licet, in reliquo officio, summani modestiam ac sanctimoniam præ se ferunt. Orationem dominicam decimus quisque haud nouit. At Symbolum Apostolicum, aut Decalogum Moïsis nemo aut admodum pauci, aiunt enim rem tam arcanam ac sacram in vulgus temere enuntiarum non oportere. Decalogum etiam sanguine Christi antiquatum esse. Humaniores literas omnino respiciunt. Cognitionis Græcæ, Latinæ aut Hebraicæ lingue penitus sunt ignari: singulis annis quaterna celebrant ieiunia quæ ab ipsis diuorum festis dominant. Primum cum nostro quadragesimali ieiunio exordium habet. Secundum diui Petri ieiunium dicitur. Tertio, dat nomen Diua Maria. Quartum, à Philippo nomen capit. Ac sicuti nos quadragesimam nostram à die Mercurij auspicamur, ita illi à die solis: diebus Sabbati carne vescuntur, Hebdomadis has esuriales ferias præcedentibus lacticijs viuunt. Ac vulgo appellant butyri ieiunia. Hoc tempore mutuo sese inuisunt vicini, ac pacis oculis vicissim excipiunt, in signum mutui amoris ac concordie Christianæ. Nam sub illis ieiunandi temporibus frequentius quàm aliàs sacrosanctam cœnam aduunt. Post septem dies ab incepto ieiunio, crebro inuisunt templa, aut domi sese continent, ac orationi plurimum vacant. Nec illa septimana alio quàm oleribus vescuntur. Ex octo septimanæ huius ieiunio, pristinam bibendi intemperiam repetunt, sunt enim bibones insignes. Districtè seruant ieiunia sua, nec vilius rei esum nisi holerum ac salsamentorum tunc temporis sibi indulgent: die Mercurij ac Veneris quauis septimana ieiunare solent.

The newe Navigation and discouerie of the kingdome of Moscouia, by the Northeast, in the yeere 1553: Enterprised by Sir Hugh Willoughbie knight, and performed by Richard Chancellor, Pilot maior of the voyage. Translated out of the former Latine into English.

Upon what occasions, and by whom this voyage was set out, and of the discouerie
of Spilscouie
by the North.

What time our Marchants perceived the commodities and wares of England to be in small request with the Countreys and people about vs, and neede unto vs, and that those Marchandizes which strangers in the time and memorie of our auncestors did earnestly seeke and desire, were now neglected, and the price thereof abated, although by vs carried to their owne portes, and all forreine marchandises in great account, and their prices wonderfully raised: certaine graue citizens of London, and men of great wisdom, and carefull of the good of their Countrey, beganne to thinke with themselves, howe this mischiefe might be remedied: neither was a remedie (as it then appeared) wanting to their desire, for the auoyding of so great an inconuenience: for seeing that the wealth of the Spaniards and Portingals, by the discouerie and searche of newe trades and Countreys was marueilously increased, supposing the same to be a courtesie and meane for them also to obtaine the like, they thereupon resolved upon a newe and strange Navigation. And whereas at the same time our Sebastian Cabota, a man in those dayes very renowned, happened to be in London, they beganne first of all to deale and consulte diligently with him, and after much speache and conference together, it was at last concluded that thre shippes should be prepared and furnished out, for the search and discouerie of the Northerne part of the world, to open a way and passage to our men for traualle to newe and vnknown kingdomes.

3. Shippes furnished
discouerie.

And whereas many things seemed necellarie to be regarded in this so harde and difficult a matter, they first make choyce of certaine graue and wise persons in manner of a Senate or companie, which shoulde laye their heads together, and giue their iudgements, and prouide things requisite and profitable for all occasions: by this companie it was thought expedient, that a certaine summe of money shoulde publicly be collected to serue for the furnishing of so many shippes. And lest any private man shoulde be too much oppressed and charged, a course was taken, that every man willing to be of the societie, shoulde disburse the portion of twentie and six pounds a peece: so that in short time by this meane the summe of five thousand pounds being gathered, the thre shippes were bought, the most part wherof they prouided to be newly built and trimmed. But in this action, I wrote not whether I may more admire the care of the Marchants, or the diligence of the Shippwrightes: for the Marchants, they gette very strong and well seasoned planks for the building, the Shippwrightes, they with dayly practise, and their great skill, doe fitte them for the dispatche of the shippes: they calke them, pitche them, and among the rest, they make one most stanche and firme, by an excellent and ingenious inuention. For they had heard that in certaine partes of the Ocean, a kinde of worme is bredde, which many times yeareth and eateth through the strongest oake that is: and therefore that the Spaniards, and the rest to be employed in this voyage might be free and safe from this danger, they couer a peece of the keele of the shippe with thinne sheets of leade: and hauing thus built the shippes, and furnished them with armour and artillerie, then followed a second care no lesse troublesome and necellarie then the former, namely, the prouision of victuals, which was to be made according to the time and length of the voyage. And whereas they afore determined to haue the East part of the world sayled unto, and yet that the sea towards the same was not open, except they kept the Northerne tract, where as yet it was doubtfull whether there were any passage yea or no, they resolved to victual the shippes for eigheteene moneths, which they did for this reason. For our men being to passe that huge and colde part of the world, they wisely foreseeing it, allowe them five moneths victuall to saile to the place, so much more to remaine there if the extremitie of the winter hindered their returne, and so much more also for the time of their comming home.

Prouision of victuals for 18. moneths.

Choice of captaines and Pilots.

Sir Hugh Willoughbie.

Howe this prouision being made and carried aboarde, with armour and munition of all sorts, sufficient Capitaines and gouernours of so great an enterpryse were as yet wanting: to which office and place, although many men, (and some boyse of experience) offered themselves, yet one Sir Hugh Willoughbie a most valiant Gentleman, and well boyne, very earnestly requested to haue that care and charge committed vnto him: of whome before all others, both by reason of his goodly personage (for hee was of a tall stature) as also for his singular skill in the seruices although diuers men seemed willing, and made offers of themselves thereunto, yet by a com mon consent one Richard Chancellor, a man of great estimation for many good partes of witte in him, was brought by by one master Henrie Sidney, a noble young Gentleman and very much beloued of king Edward, who at this time comming to the place where the Parchants were ga thered together, beganne a very eloquent speache of Exhortation, and spake to them after this maner following.

Richard

Grand Captaine

now.

My very worshipfull friends, I cannot but greatly commende your present godly and be nious intention, in the serious enterprising (for the singular loue you beare to your Countrey, a matter, which (I hope) will prouee profitable for this nation, and honourable to this our land, which intention of yours (wee also of the Nobilitie) are ready to our power to helpe and fur ther: neither doe wee holde any thing so deare and precious vnto vs, which wee will not wil lingly forgoe, and lay out in so commendable a cause. But principally I reioyce in my selfe, that I haue nourished and maintained that witte, which is like by some meanes and in some measure, to professe and seeke you in this worthy action. But yet I would not haue you ignorant of this one thing, that I doe not see part with Chancellor, not because I make lixe reckoning of the man, or that his maintenance is burdalous and chargeable vnto mee, but that you might conceiue and vnderstande, my good will and promptitude for the furtherance of this busiuelles, and that the authoritie and estimation which hee deserueth may be giuen him. You know the man by report, I by experience, you by wordes; I by deedes, you by speache and companie, but I by the dayly triall of his life, haue a full and perfect knowledge of him. And you are also to remember, into howe many perils for your sakes, and his Countreys loue, hee is now to runne: whereof it is requisite that wee bee not vnumdefull, if it please God to sende him good successe. Wee come not a little money to the chaunce and hazard of fortune: Wee committs his life, (a thing to a man of all things most deare) to the raging Sea, and the vncertainties of many dangers. Wee shall here thus and rest at home quietly with our friends, and acquaintance: but hee in the meane time labouring to keepe the ignorant and unruly Parriners in good order and obedience, with howe many cares shall hee trouble and vexe himselfe, with howe many troubles shall hee beake himselfe, and howe many disquietings shall hee be forced to sustaine: Wee shall keepe our stone reades and Countrey, Wee shall seeke strange and unknowne kingdomes. Wee shall com mit his safetie to barbarous and cruell people, and shall hazarde his life amongst the monstrous and terrible beastes of the Sea. Wherefore in respect of the greatnesse of the dangers, and the ex cellencie of his charge, you are to fauour and loue the man thus departing from vs, and if it fall so happily out that hee returne againe, it is your part and vnicie also, liberally to rewarde him.

Henry Sidney his Orator.

After that this noble yong Gentleman had deliuered this or some such like speache, much more eloquently then I can possible report it, the companie then present beganne one to looke upon another, one to question and conferre with another: and some (to whom the vertue and sus tencie of the man was knowne) began secretly to reioyce with themselves, and to conceiue a speciall hope, that the man would prouee in time very rare and excellent, and that his vertues al ready appearing and shining to the world, would growe to the great honour and aduancement of this kingdome.

After all this, the companie growing to some silence, it seemed good to them that were of great estimation amongst them, to inquire, searche and seeke what might be learned and knowne, con cerning the Easterly part or tract of the world. For which cause 2. Tartarians, which were then of the Kings Seable, were sent for, & an interpreter was gotten to be present, by whom they were demanded touching their Countrey and the maners of their nation. But they were able to an swere nothing to the purpose: being in deede more acquainted (as one there merrily and openly saide) to talke portes, then to learne the states and dispositions of people. But after much adoe and many things passed about this matter, they grewe at last to this issue, to set vpon and appoint a time for the departure of the shippes: because diuers were of opinion, that a great part of the best time of the yeere was already spent, and if the delays grewe longer, the way would be longe and harde by the force of the Ice, and the colde climate: and therefore it was thought best by the opinion of them all, that by the twentieth day of May, the Captaines and Parriners should

shoulde take shipping, and depart from Raliffe vpon the ebbe, if it so pleased God. They being saluted their acquaintance, one his wife, another his chylozen, another his kindefolkes, and another his friendes deerer then his kindefolkes, were present and ready at the day appointed, and having wayed ancre, they departed with the turning of the water, and sayling easily came first to Grenewich. The greater Shippes were towed downe with boores, and oares, and the mariners being all apparelled in Walter of skie coloured clothe, rowed a maine, and way way with diligence. And being come neere to Grenewich (where the Court then laye) presently vpon the newes thereof the Courtiers came running out, and the common people flockt together, standing very thicke vpon the shoare: the priuie Councell, they lookt out at the windows of the Court, and the rest ranne vp to the toppes of the towres: the Shippes hereupon discharge their Ordnance, and shoote off their peeces after the maner of warre, and of the sea, in such sort that the tops of the hilles sounded therewith, the valleys, and the waters gaue an Echo, and the mariners they shouted in such sort, that the skie rang againe with the noyse thereof. One stood in the poope of the Shippe, and by his gesture biddes fare well to his friendes in the best maner he coulde. Another walkes vpon the battes, another climbes the showes, another standes vpon the maine parte, and another in the toppe of the Shippe. To see how, it was a very triumphe (as euer a foie) in all respects to the beholders. But (alas) the good King Edward (in respect of whome principally all this was prepared,) hee onely by reason of his sickenesse was absent from this shewe, and not long after the departure of these Shippes, the lamentable and most sorrowfull accident of his death followed.

But to proceede in the matter.

The Shippes going downe with the tyde, came at last to Woolwiche, where they stayed and cast ancre, with purpose to depart thence againe, as soone as the turning of the water, and a better winde shoulde vayne them to set saile. After this they departed and came to Harwiche, in which port they stayed long, not without great losse and consuming of time: yet at the last with a good winde they hoysed vp saile, and committed themselves to the sea, giuing their last adieu to their native Countrey, which they knewe not whether they shoulde euer returne to see againe or noe. Many of them looked oftentimes backe, and coulde not refrain from cares, considering into what hazards they were to fall, and what vncertainties of the sea they were to make triall of.

Amongst the rest Richard Chanceler, the Captaine of the Edwarde Bonauenture, was not a little grieued with the feare of wanting vituals, part whereof was founde to bee corrupt, and perished at Harwiche, and the hoggshheads of wine also leaked, and were not stanch: his naturall and fatherly affection also somewhat troubled him, for hee left behinde him his two little sonnes, which were in the case of Orphanes if hee shoulde not well: the estate also of his comely maner was in his care, being in the former respects after a sort vnhappie, and were to abide with himselfe euery good or badde accident: but in the meane time while his minde was thus toymed with the multiplicite of sorowes and cares, after many dayes sayling, they kenned lande apace off, wherunto the Pilots directed the Shippes: and being come to it they launde, and finde it to be Rose Island, where they stayed certaine dayes, and afterwards set saile againe, and proceeding towards the North, they espied certaine other Islands, which were called the Crosse of 3 Islands. From which places when they were a litle departed, master Willoughbie the Generall, a man of good iudgement and prouidence in all his actions, erected and set out his flagge, by which hee called together the chiefe men of the other Shippes, that by the helpe and assistance of their counsels, the order of the gouernement, and conduction of the Shippes in the whole voyage, might be the better: who being come together accordingly, they conclude and agree, that if any great tempest should arise at any time, and happen to disperie and scatter them, euery Shippe shoulde inuoye his selfe to goe to Wardhouse, a haven or castell of some name in the kingdome of Norway, and that they that arrived there first in safetie, shoulde staye and expect the coming of the rest.

The very same day in the afternoone, about foure of the clocke, so great a tempest suddenly arose, and the Seas were so outrageous, that the Shippes coulde not keepe their intended course, but some were perforce driven one way, and some another way, to their great perill and hazard. The generall with his lowdest voyce, cried out to Richard Chanceler, and earnestly requested him not to goe farre from him: but hee neither woulde nor coulde keepe companie with him, if hee coulde still so fall: for the Admirall was of better saile then his Shippe. But the saide Admirall (I knowe not by what meanes) bearing all his sailes, was carried away with so great force and swiftnesse, that not long after hee was quite out of sight, and the third Shippe also with the

to the thirde shippe also with the same danger and like rage, was dispersed and lost.

The shippe boate of the Admirall (striking against the shippe,) was overtaken in the light and wisde of the Sparriners of the Bonaventure: and as for them that are already retur ned and arrived, they knowe nothing of the rest of the shippes what was become of them.

They returne
the next morn not knowing what was be come of the other 2. shippes.

But if it be so, that any miserable misshapen have overtaken them, If the rage and furie of the Sea have deuoured those good men, or if as yet they liue, and wander by and dolene in strange Countreies, I must needs say they were men worthy of better fortune, and if they be liuing, let vs wish them safetie and a good returne, but if the crueltie of death hath taken holde of them, God sende them a Christian graue and Sepulchre.

come very pensie, heauie, and sorrowfull, by this dispersion of the flecte, hee (according to the order before taken,) shapeth his course for Wardhouse in Norway, there to expect and abide the arrival of the rest of the shippes. And being come thither, and hauing stayed there the space of 7. daies, and looked in vaine for their coming, he determined at length to proceede alone in the purposed voyage. And as hee was preparing himselfe to depart, it happened that hee fell in companie and speache with certaine Scottisshmen: who hauing vnderstanding of his inten tion, and wishing well to his actions, beganne earnestly to dissuade him from the further pro secution of the discouerie, by amplifying the dangers which hee was to fall into, and omitted no reason that might serue to that purpose. But hee holding nothing so ignominious and reproch full, as inconstancie and leuitie of minde, and perfwading himselfe that a man of valure coulde not commit a more dishonourable part then for feare of danger to auoyde and shunne great at tempes, was nothing at all changed or discouraged with the speeches and wordes of the Scots, remaining steadfast and immutable in his first resolution: determining either to bring that to pass which was intended, or els to die the death.

And as for them which were with master Chanceler in his shippe, although they had great cause of discomfort by the losse of their companie (whome the fore saide tempest had separated from them,) and were not a litle troubled with cogitations and perturbations of minde, in re spect of their doubtfull course: yet notwithstanding, they were of such consent and agreement of minde with master Chanceler, that they were resolute, and prepared vnder his direction and government, to make pproofe and triall of all adventures, without all feare or mistrust of future dangers. Which constancie of minde in all the companie did exceedingly increaseth their Cap taines carefulnesse: for hee being swallowed vp with like good will and loue towards them, feared least through any error of his, the safetie of the companie shoulde bee endangered. To conclude, when they sawe their desire and hope of the arrivall of the rest of the shippes to bee en erly day more and more frustrated, they provided to sea againe, and master Chanceler helde on his course towards that vnknown part of the world, and sailed so fast, that hee came at last to the place where hee founde no light at all, but a continuall light and brightnesse of the Sunne shi ning clearely vpon the huge and mightie Sea. And hauing the benefite of this per etuall lighte for certaine daies, at the length it pleased God to bring them into a certaine great Bay, which was of one hundred miles or thereabout ouer. Whereinto they entred, and somewhat farre within it cast ancre, and looking euery way about them, it happened that they espied a floure off a certaine silver boate, which master Chanceler, accompanied with a fewe of his men, went to uaues to common with the silfmermen that were in it, and to knowe of them what Countrey it was, and what people, and of what maner of liuing they were: but they being amazed with the strange greatnesse of his shippe, (for in these partes before that time they had neuer seene the like) beganne presently to auoyde and to flee: but hee still following them, at last outcrooke them, and being come to them, they (being in great feare, as men halfe dead) prostrated them selves before him, offering to kill his feete: but hee (according to his great and singular cour tesie,) looked pleasantly vpon them, comforting them by signes and gestures, retuling thair wretches and reuerences of theirs, and taking them by in all louing love from the ground. And it is strange to consider howe much fauour afterwards in that place, this humanitie of his did procure to himselfe. For they being dismissed, spread by and by a report abroade of the ar riual of a strange nation, of a singular gentlenesse and courtesie: whereupon the common peo ple came together offering to these newe come guests victuals freely, and not refusing to tradique with them, except they had bene bound by a certaine religious vse and custome, not to buy any for reine commodities, without the knowledge and consent of the king.

By this time our men had learned that this Countrey was called Ruffia, or Moscouie, and that Euan Vasiluich (which was at that time their Kings name) ruled and governed

The discouerie
of Ruffia.

farre and wide in those places. And the barbarous Russes asked likewise of our men wherunto they were, and what they came for: wherunto answer was made, that they were Englishmen sent into those coastes, from the most excellent King Edward the first, hauing from him in commendement certaine things to beaker to their King, and seeking nothing els, but his amitie and friendship, and traicque with his people, wherby they doubted not, but that great commodities and profitte would growe to the subjects of very kingdomes.

The barbarians heard these things very gladly, and promised their ayde and furtherance to acquaine their king out of hande with so honest and reasonable a request.

In the meane time master Chancelour increased victuals for his money of the gouernour of that place, who together with others came abooupe him, and required hostages of them likewise for the more assurance of safetie to himselfe, and his companie. To whome the Gouernours answered, that they knew not in that case the will of their king, but yet were willing in such things as they might lawfully doe, to pleasure him: which was as then to abooupe him the benches of victuals.

Nowe whiles these things were a doing, they secretly sent a messenger vnto the Emperour, to certifie him of the arrivall of a strange nation, and withall to knowe his pleasure concerning them. Which message was very welcome vnto him, inasmuch that voluntarily hee invited them to come to his Court. But if by reason of the tediousnesse of so long a iourney, they thought it not best so to doe, then hee graunted libertie to his subjects to bargain, and to traicque with them: and further promised, (that if it would please them to come to him,) hee himselfe would beare the whole charges of poste horses. In the meane time the gouernours of the place deferred the matter from day to day, pretending diuers excuses, and saying one while that the consent of all the gouernours, and another while, that the great and waig hie affaires of the kingdome compelled them to deferre their answer: and this they did of purpose, so long to protract the time, vntill the messenger (sent before to the king) did returne with relation of his will and pleasure.

But Master Chancelour, (seeing himselfe helde in this suspence with long and vaine expectation, and thinking that of intention to delude him,) they posted the matter off so often, was very instant with them to performe their promise: which if they would not doe, hee tolde them that hee would depart, and proceede in his voyage. So that the Moscouites (although as yet they knewe not the minde of their king) yet fearing the departure in deede of our men, who had such wares and commodities as they greatly desired, they at last resolved to furnish our people with all things necessarie, and to conduct them by lande to the presence of their king. And so Master Chancelour beganne his iourney, which was very long and most troublesome, whereto hee had the vse of certaine sleds, which in that Countrey are very common, for they are caried themselves vpon sleds, and all their carriages are in the same sort, the people almost not knowing any other manner of carriage, the cause wherof is the exceeding hardnes of the ground, congealed in the winter time by the force of the colde, which in those places is very extreme and horrible, wherof hereafter we will say something.

But nowe they hauing passed the greater part of their iourney, mette at last with the Sclendeman (of whom I spake before) sent to the king secretly from the Iustices of gouernours, who by some ill happe had lost his way, and had gone to the Sea side, which is neere to the Countrey of the Tartars, thinking there to haue founde our Shippe. But hauing long erred and wandered out of his way, at the last in his dreer returne hee mette (as hee was coming) our Capitaine on the way. To whome hee by and by deliuered the Emperours letters, which were written to him with all courtesie, and in the most louing manner that could be: whereto hee commended was given, that post horses should bee gotten for him and the rest of his companie without any money. Which thing was of all the Russes in the rest of their iourney so willingly done, that they beganne to quarell, sea, and to fight also, in straining and contending which of them should beare their post horses to the sledde: so that after much adoe, and great paines taken in this long and wearie iourney, (for they had trauielled very nere fiftene hundred miles) master Chancelour came at last to Mosco, the chiefe citie of the kingdome, and the seate of the king: of which citie and of the Emperour himselfe, and of the principall cities of Moscouie, we will speake immediately more at large in this discourse.

The Emperours courtiers letters to M. Chancelour.

Of Mos-

Of Moscouie, which is also called Russia.

Moscouie, which hath the name also of Russia the white, is a very large, and spacious Countrey, every way bounden with others nations. Towards the South and the East it is compassed with Tartaria: the Northern side of it stretcheth to the Scythian Ocean: upon the West part, border the Lappians, a rude, and savage nation, living in woods, whose language is not knowne to any other people: next unto these, more towards the South, is Sweedia, then Finlandia, then Livonia, and last of all Lithuania. This Countrey of Moscouie, hath also very many, and great rivers in it, and is marvellous ground in many places: and as for the rivers, the greatest, and most famous amongst all the rest, is that, which the Russes in their owne tongue call Volga, but others know it by the name of Rha. Next unto it in fame, is Tanais, which they call Don, and the other Borithenes, which at this day they call Neper. Two of these, to wit, Rha, and Borithenes, falling both out of one fountaine, runne very farre through the land: Rha receiuing many other pleasant rivers into it, and turning from the very head or spring of it towards the East, after many crooked turnings and windings, dischargeth it selfe, and all the other waters, and rivers, that fall into it, by diuers passages into the Caspian Sea. Tanais, springing from a fountaine of great name in those partes, and growing great neere to his head, spers it selfe at length very largely, and makes a great lake: and then growing narrow againe, both so runne for certaine miles, until it fall into another lake, which they call Iuan: and there hence, fetching a very crooked course, comes very neere to the river Volga: but obtaining as it were, the companie of any other river, doth there turne it selfe againe from Volga, and runnes toward the South, and falls at last into the Lake of Mceotis. Borithenes, which comes from the same head that Rha doth, (as we said before) carrieth both it selfe, and other waters that are neere unto it, towards the South, not retarding the mixture of other small rivers: and running by many great and large Countreies, falls at last into Pontus Euxinus. Besides these rivers, are also in Moscouie certaine lakes, and pooles, the lakes byeebe fitte by the celestiall influence: and amongst them all, the chiefest and most principall, is called Bellij Islera, which is very famous by reason of a very strong Towne built in it, wherein the Kings of Moscouie reserue and repose their treasure, in all time of warre, and danger.

The mightie lake of Bellij Islera.

Concerning the Riphean mountaines, whereupon the snow lieth continually, and where hence in times past it was thought that Tanais the river did spring, and that the rest of the wonders of nature, which the Grecians fained and invented of olde were there to be seene, our men which lately came from thence, neither sawe them, nor yet haue brought home any perfect relation of them, although they remained there for the space of three moneths, and had gotten in that time some intelligence of the language of Moscouie. The whole Countrey is plaine, and champion, and few hills in it: and towards the North it hath very large and spacious woods, wherein is great store of fere trees, a wood very necessarie, and fit for the building of houses: there are also wilde beastes bred in those woods, as Buffes, Beares, and blacke Mottes, and another kind of beast unknowne to vs, but called by them Rossomakka: and the nature of the same is very rare, and wonderfull: for when it is great with young, and ready to bring forth, it seeketh out some narrow place betweene two flakes, and so going through them, presseth it selfe, and by that means is eased of her burden, which other wise could not be done. They hunt their buffes for the most part a horsebacke, but their Beares afoote, with wooden speeres. The north partes of the Countrey, are reported to be so colde, that the very ice of water, which distilleth out of the most wood, whith they lay upon the fire, is presently congealed and frozen: the diuersitie growing suddnly to be so great, that in one and the selfe same firebrand, a man shall see both fire and ice. When the winter doth once beginne there, it doth still more and more increase, by a perpetuall of cold: neither doth that colde flake, until the force of the Summe beames both dissolve the colde, and make glad the earth returning to it againe. Our mariners which we sent in the ship in the meanest time to keepe it, in their going up onely from their cabbins to the battes, had their breath oftentimes so stifled, by taken a snuff, that they oftentimes fell downe, as men very neere dead, so great is the sharpness of that colde climate: but as for the South partes of the Countrey, they are somewhat more temperate.

The sharpness of the winter in Moscouie.

Of Mosco, the chiefe Citie of the kingdome, and of the Emperour thereof.

It remaineth that a larger discourse be made of Mosco, the principall Citie of that Countrey, and of the Prince also, as before we haue promised. The Emperour and government of the King is very large, and his wealth at this time exceeding great. And because the Citie of Mosco is the chiefeft of all the rest, it seemeth of it selfe to challenge the first place in this discourse. Our men say, that in bignesse it is as great as the Citie of London, with the Suburbes thereof. There are many and great buildings in it, but for beautie and fairness, nothing comparable to ours. There are many Townes, and Villages also, but built out of oyster, and with no hauntsomenesse: their streets and houses are not paved with stone, as ours are: the walles of their houses are of wood: the roofes for the most part, are covered with single booydes. There is hard by the Citie a very faire Castle, strong, and furnished with artillerie, wherunto the Citie is loyned directly towards the North, with a bricke wall: the walls also of the Castle are built with bricke, and are in breadth of thicknes eighteene foote. This Castle hath on the one side a byle ditch, on the other side, the riuer Volga, whereby it is made almost inespugnable. The same Volga extending towards the East doth admit into it the companie of the riuer Occa.

In the Castle aforesayde, there are in number nine Churches, or Chappels, not altogether vnpleasant, which are vsed and kept by certaine religious men, ouer whom there is after a sort, a Patriarke, or Gouernour, and with him other reuerent Fathers, all which for the greater part, dwell within the Castle. As for the Kings Court and Pallace, it is not of the neatest, onely in forme it is foure square, and of louise building, much surpassed and excelled by the beautie and elegance of the houses of the King of England. The windowes are very narrowly built, and some of them by glasse, some other by lattices admitteth the light: and whereas the Pallaces of our Princes are becket, and adorned with hangings of clothe of golde, there is none such there: they build and loyne to all their walls, benches, and that not onely in the Court of the Emperour, but in all private mens houses.

Nowe after that they had remained about twelue daies in the Citie, there was then a Messenger sent vnto them, to bring them to the Kings house: and they being after a sort wearied with their long stay, were very ready, and willing so to doe: and being entered within the gates of the Court, there saze a very honorable companie of Courtiers, to the number of one hundred, all apparelled in cloth of golde, downe to their ankles: and there hence being conducted into the chamber of presence, our men beganne to wonder at the State of the Emperour: his seate was a loft, in a very royall chaire, hauing on his head a Diademe, or Crowne of golde, apparelled with a robe all of Goldsmithes worke, and in his hand he helde a Scepter garnished, and beset with precious stones: and besides all other notes and appareance of honour, there was a State in his countenance, proportionable with the excellencie of his estate: on the one side of him stood his chiefe Secretarie, on the other side, the great Commander of Silence, both of them arrayed so in cloth of golde: and then there saze the Counsel of one hundred, and sitte in number, all in like sort arrayed, and of great state. This so honorable an assemblie, so great a State of the Emperour, and of the place, might very well haue amazed our men, and haue daffe them out of countenance: but not withstanding, Walter Chancellor being there with all nothing dismayed, sat downe, and did his dutie to the Emperour, after the manner of England, and withall, deliuered vnto him the letters of their King, Edward the sixt. The Emperour hauing taken, & read the letters, began a litle to question with them, and to aske them of the welfare of our King: wherunto our men answered him directly, & in fewe wordes: hereupon our men presented some thing to the Emperour, by the chiefe Secretarie, which at the deliuerie of it, put off his hat, being before all the time countenance: and so the Emperour hauing invited them to dinner, dismissed them from his presence: and going into the chamber of him that was Master of the Requests to the Emperour, & hauing staid there the space of two houres, at the last, the Messenger commeth, and calleth them to dinner: they goe, and being conducted into the golden Court, (for so they call it, although not very fair) they find the Emperour sitting vpon a high and stately seate, apparelled with a robe of siluer, and with an other Diademe on his heade: our men being placed ouer against him, sitte downe in the midde of the roome, stood a mightie Cupboorde vpon a square foote, wherupon stood also a round boorde, in manner of a Diamond, byade beneath, and towards the toppe narrow, and euery steppe rose vpp more narrowe then another. Vpon this Cupboorde was placed the Emperours place, which was so much, that the very Cupboorde it selfe was scarce able to sustayne the weight of it: the better part of all the vessels, and goblets, was made of very fine golde: and amongst the rest, there were foure pots of very large bignes, which did adorne the rest of the place, in great reputation: for they were so bigge, that they thought them at the least, five foote long. There were also vpon this Cupboorde, certaine bluer calkes, not much differing from the quantitie of our Pykins, wherein was reserved the Emperours drinke: on each side of the Hall, stood foure Tables, each of them ladde, and covered with were filled with the attendants present: the ghests were all apparell'd with linnen without, and with rich shirms within, and so did notably set out this royall feast. The Emperour, when he took any bread of knife into his hand, doth first of all crosse himselfe upon his forehead: they that are in speciall fauour with the Emperour, sate upon the same bench with him, but somewhat farre from him: and before the comming in of the meate, the Emperour himselfe, according to an ancient custome of the kings of Moscou, doth first bestow a peece of bread upon every one of his ghests, with a loud pronounciation of his title, and honour, in this manner: The great Duke of Moscou, and chiefe Emperour of Russia, John Basiluwich, (so then the officer nameth the ghest) doth giue thee bread. Whereupon all the ghests rise vp, and by and by sit downe againe. This done, the Gentleman Vsher of the Hall comes in, with a notable companie of seruants, carrying the di-shes, and hauing done his reuerence to the Emperour, puts a young Schawne in a golden platter upon the table, and immediately takes it thence againe, deliuering it to the Caruer, and leuer of his fellowes to be cut vp: which being performed, the meate is then distributed to the ghests, with the like pompe, and ceremonies. In the meane time, the Gentleman Vsher receiues his bread, and casteth to the Emperour, and after ward, hauing done his reuerence, he departs.

Carrying the rest of the dishes, because they were brought in out of order, our men can report certaintie: but this is true, that all the furniture of dishes, and drinkeing vessels, which were then for the vse of a hundred ghests, was all of pure golde, and the tables were so laden with vessels of golde, that there was no roome for some to stand vpon them.

We may not forget, that there were 140. seruicours in cloth of golde, that in the dinner time, changed thyle their habit and apparell, which seruicours are in like sort serued with bread from the Emperour, as the rest of the ghests. Last of all, dinner being ended, and candles brought in, (for by this time night was come) the Emperour calleth all his ghests and Noble men by their names, in such sorte, that it seemes miraculours, that a Prince, otherwise occupied in great matters of estate, should so wel remember so many and sundry particular names. The Russes told our men, that the reason thereof, as also of the bestowing of bread in that manner, was to the ende that the Emperour might keepe the knowledge of his owne household: and withall, that such as are vnder his displeasure, might by this meane be knowen.

Of the discipline of warre amongst the Russes.

Whensoever the iniuries of their neighbours doe call the King tooch to battell, he neuer armeth a lesse number against the enemye, then 300. thousand soldiers, 100. thousand horses, and the rest of his armye, he leaueth in garrison in some fit places, for the better safetie of his Empire. He selleth no husbandmen, nor Parbans: for the Countrey is so populous, that these being left at home, the youth of the Realme is sufficient for all his wars.
As many as goe out to warfare, doe youtie all things of their owne cost: they fight not on foote, but altogether on horsebacke: their armour is a coate of maille, & a helmet: the coate of maille about is gilded, or els adorned with silke, although it pertaine to a common souldier: they haue a great vse in shewing their wealth: they vse bowes, and arrowes, as the Turkes do: they carry lances also into the field. They ride with a short stirrop, after the manner of the Turkes: they are a kinde of people most sparing in diet, and most patient in extremities of cold, about all others. For when the ground is covered with snowe, and is growen terrible and hard with the frost, this Russe hangs vp his mane, or souldiers coate, against that part from whence the winde and snowe blowes, and so making a litte fire, lieth downe with his backe towards the weather: this mane of his serues him for his bed, wall, house and all: his drinke is the cold water of the riuer, mingled with oaremeale, and this is all his good cheere, and he thinketh himselfe well, and daintily feede therewith, and so lieth downe by his fire, and vpon the hard ground, rosted as it were his warre does thus daintily stuffed: the hard ground is his feather bed, and some blocke of stone his pillow: and so for his horse, he is as it were a chamberfellow with his spader, faring both alike, how liuely may this barbarous, and rude Russe, condemne the daintines and nicenes of our Captaines, who liuing in a soft and aise much more temperate, yet commonly vse furred boots, and clothes: But this much of the furniture of their common souldiers. But those that are of higher degrees, come into the field, a litte better prouided. As for the furniture of the Emperour himselfe, it is then above all other times, most notable. The coverings of his tence for the most part, are all of golde, adorned with stones of great price, and with the curious workmanship of plumbers: as often as they are to skirmish with the enemye, they goe forth without any order at all:

all: they make no towings, nor militarie diuisions of their men, as we doe, but lying by the most part, in ambush, doe suddenly set vpon the enemye. Their hostes can well obtaine two whole daies from any meate. They feede vpon the barkes of trees, and the most tender branches in all the time of warre. And this is ane and miserable manner of liuing, both the horse and his. Spawer can well endure, sometimes for the space of two moneths, iustie, and in good state of body. If any man behaue himselfe valiantly in the field, to the contentation of the Emperour, he bestoweth vpon him in recompense of his seruice, some farme, or so much ground as he and his may liue vpon, which notwithstanding after his deatch, returneth againe to the Emperour, if he die without a male issue. For although his daughters be neuer so many, yet no part of that inheritance cometh to them, except peraduenture the Emperour of his goodnes, giue some portion of the land amongst them, to bestowe them withall. As for the man, whoseuer he be, that is in this sorte rewarded by the Emperours liberalltie, he is bound in a great summe, to maintaine so many souldiers in the warre, when needs shall require, as that land, in the opinion of the Emperour, is able to maintaine. And all those, to whome any lands fall by inheritance, are in no better condition: for if they die without any male issue, all their lands fall into the hands of the Emperour: and moreover, if there be any riche man amongst them, who in his owne person is vsit for the warres, and yet hath such wealth, that thereby many noble men and warriors might be maintaineed, if any of the Courtiers present his name to the Emperour, the unhappy man is by and by sent for, and in that instant, deprived of all his riches, which with great paine, and trauel all his life time, he had gotten together: except perhaps some small portion thereof be left him, to maintaine his wife, children, and familie. But all this is done of all the people so willingly at the Emperours commaundement, that a man would thinke, they rather make restitution of other mens goods, then giue that which is their owne to other men. Nowe the Emperour hauing taken these goods into his hands, bestoweth them among his Courtiers, according to their desert: & the oftener that a man is sent to the warres, the more fauour he thinketh is boyne to him by the Emperour, although he goe vpon his owne charge, as I said before. So great is the obedience of all men generally in their Prince.

Of the Ambassadors of the Emperour of Moscouie.

The Moscouie, with no lesse pompe, and magnificence, then that which we haue spoken of, sends his Ambassadors to forren Princes, in the affaires of estate. For while our men were abiding in the Citie of Mosco, there were two Ambassadors sent to the King of Poland, accompanied with 500. notable horse, and the greater part of the men were arrayed in cloth of golde, and of silke, and the worst apparell was of garments of a blew colour, to speake nothing of the trappings of the horses, which were adorned with gold and siluer, and very curiously embrodered: they had also with them one hundred white and faire spare horses, to vse them at such times, as any wearines came vpon them. But nowe the time requireth me to speake briefly of other Cities of the Moscouites, and of the wares and commodities that the Countrey yeeldeth.

Nouogorode.

Next vnto Mosco, the Citie of Nouogorode is reputed the chiefe of Russia: for although it be in Hauesie inferior to it, yet in greatnes it goeth beyond it. It is the chiefe and greatest Harre Towne of all Moscouie: and albeit the Emperours seat is not there, but at Mosco, yet the commodiousnes of the riuer, falling into that gulf, which is called Sinus Finnicus, wher by it is well frequented by Harrhans, makes it more famous, then Mosco it selfe. This towne excels all the rest in the commodities of flaxe, and hempe: it yeeldes also hides, bone, and waxe. The Flemmings there, sometimes had a house of merchandise, but by reason that they were like all dealing there, which they did with vs; they lost their priuiledges, a restitution wherof, they earnestly sued for, at the time that our men were there. But those Flemmings hearing of the arrivall of our men in those partes, wrote their letters to the Emperour against them, accusing them for pirates and rouers, wishing him to detain, and imprison them. Which things when they were known of our men, they conceaued feare, that they should neuer haue returned home. But the Emperour beleuing rather the Kings letters, which our men brought, then the lying and false suggestions of the Flemmings, used no ill intreatie towards them.

Yeraslaue.

Yeraslaue.

Yeraslaue also is a Towne of some good fame, for the commodities of hives, tallo we, and come, which it yeeldes in great abundance. Cakes of waxe are there also to be solde, although other places have greater store: this Yeraslaue is distant from Mosco, about two hundred miles: and betwixt them are many populous villages. Their fieldes yeelde such store of come, that in con-sparing it towardes Mosco, sometimes in a forenoone, a man shall see seven hundred or eight hundred sleds, going and coming, laden with come and salt fishe: the people come a thousand miles to Mosco, to buy that come, and then carry it away upon sleds: and these are those people that dwell in the North parts, where the cold is so terrible, that no come doth grow there, or if it spring up, it never comes to ripeness. The commodities that they bring with them, are salt fishe, skins, and hives.

Vologda.

Vologda being from Mosco, 550. miles, yeeldes the commodities of hempe, and flaxe also: although the greatest store of flaxe is solde at Nouogrode.

Plesco.

The Towne of Plesco, is frequented of Merchants for the good store of honie, and waxe, that it yeeldeth.

Colmagro.

The North parts of Russia yeelde very rare and precious skins: and amongst the rest, those principally, which we call Sables, woone about the neckes of our Noble women, and Ladies: it hath also Martys skins, white, blacke, and red. Foxe skins, skins of Beares, and Coytes, and others, which they call and terme barbarously, as Beuers, Mures, and Minuers.
The sea adjoyning, hives a certaine beast, which they call the Mors, which seeketh his foode upon the rocks, climbing by the helpe of his teeth. The Russes use to take them, for the great value that is in their teeth, whereof they make as great accompt, as we doe of the Elephants tooth. These commodities they carry upon Deeres backs to the towne of Lampas: and from thence to Colmagro, and there in the winter time, are kept great Faires for the sale of them. This City of Colmagro, serues all the Countrey about it with salt, and salt fishe. The Russes also of the North parts, send thither stle, which they call traine, which they make in a riuer called Vna, although it be also made else where: and here they use to boile the water of the sea, whereof they make very great store of salt.

Of controuersies in Lawe, and how they are ended.

Having hitherto spoken so much of the chiefest Cities of Russia, as the matter required: it remaineth that wee speake some what of the lawes, that the Moscouits doe use, as farre forth as the same are come to our knowledge. If any controuersie arise among them, they first make the Lord and Lords Judges in the matter, and if they can not end it, then they preferre it to the Pagistrate. The plaintif craueth of the said Pagistrate, that he may haue leaue to enter lawe against his aduersarie: and hauing obtained it, the officer fetcheth the defendant, and beateth him on the higges, till he bring forth a suretie for him: but if he be not of such credite, as to procure a suretie, then we his hands by an officer tied to his necke, and he is beaten all the way, till he come before the Judge. The Judge then asketh him (as for example in the matter of debt) whether he oweth any thing to the plaintif. If he denie it, then saith the Judge, how canst thou deny it: the defendant answereth, by an othe: thereupon the officer is commaunded to cease from beating of him, till the matter be further tried. They haue no Lawyers, but every man is his owne Advocate, and both the complaint of the accuser, and the answer of the defendant, are in manner of petition delivered to the Emperour, intrusting iustice at his hands. The Emperour himselfe heareth euery great controuersie, and upon the hearing of it, giueth iudgement, and that with great equitie, which I take to be a thing worthy of speciall commendation, in the Paletie of a Prince. But although he do this with a good purpose of mind, yet the corrupt Pagistrates be: wonderfully per-uert

uert the same: but if the Emperour take them in any fault, he doth punish them most severely. Now at the last, when eche partie hath defended his cause with his best reasons, the Judge demandeth of the accuser, whether he hath any moze to say for himselfe: he answereth, that he will trie the matter in fight by his Champion, or else intreateth that in fight betwixt the mistues, the matter may be ended: which being granted, they both fight it out: or if both of them, or either of them, seeme unfit for that kind of triall, then they haue publike Champions to be hired, which liue by ending of quarrels. These Champions are armed with yron axes, and speares, and fight on horse, and he whose Champion is overcome, is by and by taken, and imprisoned, and terribly handled, vntill he agree with his aduersarie. But if either of them be of any good calling, and degree, and doe challenge one another to fight, the Judge granteth it: in which case they may not vse publike Champions. And he that is of any good birth, doth contemne the other, if he be basely borne, and will not fight with him. If a poore man happen to growe in debt, his Creditor takes him, and maketh him pay the debt, in working either to himselfe, or to some other man, whose wages he taketh by. And there are some among them, that vse willingly to make themselves, their wiues, and children, bondslaves vnto rich men, to haue a little money at the first into their haubds, and so to fight after contents themselves with meate and drinke: so little accompt doe they make of libertie.

Of punishments vpon theeues.

If any man be taken vpon committing of theft, he is imprisoned, and often beaten, but not hanged for the first offence, as the manner is with vs: and this they call the lawe of merrie. If that offender be the second time, hath his nose cut off, and is burnt in the forehead with a hot yron. The third time, he is hanged. There are many cutpurfes among them, and if the rigour of the Prince did not cut them off, they could not be auoided.

Of their religion.

They maintaine the opinions of the Greeke Church: they suffer no grauen images of saints in their Churches, but their pictures painted in tables they haue in great abundance, which they do adore, and offer vnto, and burne waxe candles before them, and cast holy water vpon them, without other honour. They say that our images, which are set vp in Churches, and carued, haue no diuinitie in them. In their private houses, they haue images for their household saints, and in the most part, they are put in the darke place of the house: he that comes into his neighbours house, doth first salute his saints, although he see them not. If any foote, or stoele stand in his way, he oftentimes beatech his hote vpon the same, and often ducking downe with his head, and bopye, worshippeth the chiefe Image. The habite, and attire of the Priestes, and of the Laymen, doeth nothing at all differ: as for marriage, it is forbidden to no man: onely this is reuewed, and he lye amongst them for a rule, and custome, that if a Priestes wife doe die, he may not marry againe, nor take a second wife: and therefore they of secular Priestes, as they call them, are made Spoukes, to whom then chastitie for euer is commanded. Their deuine seruice is al done, and said in their owne language, that euery man may vnderstand it: they receaue the Lodes Supper with leauened bread, and of the consecration, they carry it about the Church in a labere, and prohibite no man from receauing and taking of it, that is willing so to doe. They vse both the Olde, and the Newe Testament, and read both in their owne language, but so confusedly, that they themselves that doe read, vnderstand not what themselves doe say: and while any part of either Testament is read, there is libertie giuen by custome to prattle, talke, and make a noise: but in the time of the rest of the seruice, they vse very great silence, and reuerence, and behaue themselves very modestly, and in good sort. As touching the Lodes prayer, the ten commandments, they knowe it not: and for the articles of our faith, and the ten commandments, no man at the least, very fewe of them doe either knowe them, or can say them: their opinion is, that such secrete and holy things as they are, should not rashly and imprudently be communicated with the common people. They holde for a Spairime amongst them, that the olde Lawe, and the commandments also are all abolished by the death and blood of Christ: all studies and letters of humanitie, they utterly refuse: concerning the Latine, Greeke, and Hebrue tongues, they are altogether ignorant in them.

Every yeere they celebrate foure severall fastes, which they call according to the names of the Saints: the first beginnes with them, at the time that our L. cutt begimmes. The second is called amongst them, the fast of S. Peter. The third is taken from the day of the Virgin Marie. And the fourth fourth, and last, begimnes vpon S. Philips day. But as we begin our Lent vpon Wednesday, so they begin theirs vpon the Sunday. Upon the Saturday they eate flesh: whensoever any of those fasting fasters doe vnto weere, looke what weeke doth immediatly goe before them; the same weeke they liue altogether vpon white meates, and in their common language, they call those weeks, the fast of butter.

In the time of their fasts, the neighbours euery where goe from one to another, and visite one another, and kisse one another with kisses of peace, in token of their mutuall loue, and Christian concord: and then also, they doe more often then at any other time, goe to the holie Communion. When seuen daies are past, from the beginning of the fast, then they often doe either goe to their Churches, or keepe themselves at home, and vse often prater: and for that seuen nightes, they eate nothing but hearbes: but after that seuen night fast is once past, then they returne to their old intemperance of drinking, for they are notable fastpots. As for the keeping of their fasting daies, they doe it very streightly, neither doe they eate any thing besides hearbes, and salt fish, as long as those fasting daies do endure: but vpon euery Wednesday and Friday, in euery weeke through out the yeere, they fast.

There are very many Monasteries, of the order of S. Benedict, amongst them, to which many great liuings, for their maintenance doe belong: for the Friars and the Monkes, doe at the least possesse the third part of the liuings, throughout the whole Moscouite Empire: to those Monkes that are of this order, there is amongst them a perpetuall prohibition, that they may eate no flesh: and therefore their meate is onely salt fish, milke, and butter: neither is it permitted them by the lawes, and customes of their religion, to eate any fresh fish at all: and at those foure fasting times, whereof we spake before, they eate no fish at all: onely they liue with hearbes, and cucumbers, which they doe continually for that purpose cause, and take order to grow and spring, for their vse and diet.

As for their drinke, it is very weake, and small: for the discharge of their office, they doe euery day say seruice, and that earely in the mornings before day: and they doe in such sort, and with such obseruation begin their seruice, that they will be sure to make an ende of it, before day: and about nine of the clocke in the morning, they celebrate the Communion. When they haue so done, they goe to dinner, and after dinner, they go againe to seruice, and the like also after supper: and in the meane time, while they are at dinner, there is some exposition, or interpretation of the Gospel vfed. Whensoever any Abbot of any monasterie dieth, the Emperour taketh all his household stuffe, hearbes, storcks of theeye, golde, siluer, and all that he hath: or els hee that is to succeed him in his place and dignitie, doth redeeme all those things, and bineth them of the Emperour in money.

Their churches are built of timber, and the towers of their churches for the most part are covered with spingle boordes. At the doores of their churches, they usually build some entrance or porch as we doe, and in their churchyardes they erect a certain house of wood, wherein they set by their bells, wherein sometimes they haue but one, in some two, and in some also three.

There is one vse and custome amongst them, which is strange and rare, but yet it is very ridiculous, and that is this: when any man dieth amongst them, they take the dead body and put it in a coffine of chest, and in the hand of the corpes they put a little scroll, and in the same there are these wordes writen, that the same man died a Russe of Russes, hauing receiued the faith, and died in the same. This writing or letter they say they send to S. Peter, who receiuing it (as they affirme) reades it, and by and by admitts him into heauen, and that his glory and place is higher and greater then the glory of the Christians of the Latin church, reputing themselves to bee followers of a more sincere faith and religion then they: they hold opinion that wee are but halfe christians, and themselves onely to bee the true and perfect church: these are the foolish and childish dotages of such ignorant Barbarians.

Of the Moscouites that are Idolaters, dwelling neere to Tartaria.

There is a certaine part of Moscouie, bordering vpon the countries of the Tartars, where in those Moscouites dwell, are very great idolaters: they haue one famous idol amongst them, which they call the Golden old wife, and they haue a custome that whensoever any plague or any calamitie doeth afflict the countrey, as hunger, warre, or such like, then they goe by and by to consult with their idoll, which they doe after this manner: they fall downe prostrate before the idoll, and praye vnto it, and put in the presence of the same, C e. 1. a cymball:

Act.

Aurea vetula, or Zelotibaba.

a cymball, and about the same certaine persons stand, which are chosen amongst them by lot: up on their cymball they place a silver cove, and sound the cymball, and to whomsoever of those lotted persons that cove goeth, he is taken, and by and by slaine: and immediately, I know not by what illusions of the deuil, or idoll, he is againe restored to life, and then doth reucale and deliuer the causes of the present calamitie. And by this meanes knowing how to pacifie the idoll, they are deliuered from the imminent danger.

Of the forme of their priuate houfes, and of the apparell of the people.

The common houfes of the countrey are euery where built of beames of fere tree: the lower beames do so receiue the round holownesse of the uppermost, that by the meanes of the building thereupon, they resist, and expell all windes that blowe, and where the timber is ioined together, there they stop the chinks with moss. The forme and fashion of their houles in all places is foure square, with straight and narrow windowes, where by with a transparent casement made of couered with skinn like to parchment, they receiue the light. The roofes of their houles are made of booydes covered without with the bark of trees: within their houles they haue benches or griezes hard by their wals, which commonly they sleepe vpon, for the common people know not the vse of beds: they haue floozes wherein in the morning they make a fire, and the same fire doth either moderately warme, or make very hot the whole house.

The apparell of the people for the most part is made of wooll, their caps are picked like vnto a rike or diamond, broad beneath, and sharpe vptward. In the maner of making whereof, there is a signe and representation of nobilitie: for the loftier or higher their caps are, the greater is their birth supposed to be, and the greater reuerence is giuen them by the common people.

The Conclusion to Queene Mary.

These are the things most excellent Queene, which your Subiects newly returned from Russia haue brought home concerning the state of that countrey: wherefore if your maiestie shall be fauourable, and graunt a continuance of the trauell, there is no doubt but that the honour and renowne of your name will be syled amongst those nations, wherunto three onely noble personages from the very creation haue had access, to whom no man hath bene comparable.

commaunded to be vnder sealed. Written in our dominion, in our towne and our palace in the ca mpe of Mosco, in the yeere seven thousand and sixtie, the second moneth of February.

This letter was written in the Polcouian tongue, in letters much like to the Greeke letters, ve ry faire written in paper, with a broad seale hanging at the same, sealed in paper upon waxe. This seale was much like the broad seale of England, hauing on the one side the image of a mā an horse backe in complete harnesse fighting with a dragon. Under this letter was another paper written in the Dutch tongue, which was the interpretation of the other written in the Polcouian letters.
These letters were sent the next yeere after the date of king Edwards letters, 1554.

The coines, waights and measures vsed in Ruffia, written by Iohn Hassé, in the yeere, 1554.

As much as it is most necessary for all merchants which seeke to haue traffique in any strange regions, first to acquaint themselves with the coines of those landes with which they doe intend to ioine in traffique, and how they are called from the valuation of the highest piece to the lowest, and in what sort they make their pai ments, as also what their common waights and measures be, For these causes I haue thought good to write some thing thereof according to mine owne know ledge and experience, so the end that the merchants of that new Adventure, may the better vnder stand how the wealth of that new frequented trade will arise.

First, it is to be noted that the Emperour of Ruffia hath no other coines then silver in all his land, which goeth for payment amongst merchants, yet notwithstanding there is a coine of copper, which serueth for the reliefe of the poore in Mosco, and no where els, and that is but onely for quars, water and fruite, as nuts, apples, and such other like. The name of which money is called Hole or Holes, of which Holes there goe to the least of the silver coines, 18. But I will not stand vpon this, because it is no current money among merchants.

No coines of gold in Ruffia,
but all of sil
uer.

Of silver coines there be these sortes of pieces: the least is a Poledenga, the second a Denga, the third, Nowgrote, which is as much to say in English as halfe penie, penie, and two penie, and by other valued money then this, there is none: there are oftentimes there coines of gold, but they come out of foreyn countreies, whereof there is no ordinarie valuation, but they passe according to the agreement of merchants.

Their order in summing of money is this: as we say in England, halfe penie, penie, shilling and pound, so say they, Poledenga, Denga, Altine and Rubble: There goeth two Poledengas to a Denga, six Dengaes to an Altine, and 23. Altines, and two Dengaes to a Rubble.

Concerning the waights of Ruffia they are these. There are two sortes of pounds in vse amongst them, the one great, the other small: the great pound is iust two small pounds: they call the great waight by the name of Beafemar, and the small they call the Skalla waight: with this small waight they weigh their silver coines, of the which the Emperour hath commaunded to put to euery small pound three Rubbles of silver, and with the same waight they weigh all Grocerie wares, and al most all other wares which come into the land, except those which they weigh by the Pode, as hops salt, iron, lead, tinne and barric with diuers others: notwithstanding they vse to weigh barric moye often by the small waight then by the great.

The waights in Ruffia.

Whensoever you find the prices of your wares rated by the Pode, consider that to be the great waight, and the pound to be the small. Also they deuide the small pound into 48. parts, and they cal the eight and fortieth part a Slotnike, by the which Slotnike the retailers sell their wares out of their shoppes, as Goldsmiths, Grocers, Silke sellers and such other like as we doe vse to retails by the ounce: and as for their great waight which they call the Beasmar, they sell by pood, or ship pond. The pood doth containe of the great waight, 40. pounds, and of the small 80. there goe 10. poods to a Shippond.

Yet you must consider that their great waight is not full with ours: for I take not their great pound to be full 13. ounces, but about 12. I thinke it be. But for your iust prooffe, waigh 6. rubbles of Russia money with our pound waight, and then shall you see what it lacketh: for 6. rubbles of Russia is by the Emperours Standard, the great pound: so that I thinke it the next way to know the iust waight, as well of the great pound as of the small.

The waight of Wardhouse.

There is another waight needfull to be knowne, which is the waight of Wardhouse, for so much as they weigh all their dyffise by waight, which waight is the Basemare, as they of Russia doe use, notwithstanding there is another sort in it: the names of those waights are these: the marke pound, the great pound, the weie, and the shippond. The marke pound is to be understood as our pound, and their great pound is 24. of their marke pound: the weie is 3. great pound, and 8. weie is a shippond.

The Russia
measures.

Nowe concerning their measures. As they haue two sortes of waights, so they haue also two sortes of measures: wherewith they measure cloth both linnen and woollen: they call the one an Arshine, and the other a Locut: the Arshine I take to bee as much as the Flaunders ell, and their Locut halfe an English yard: with their Arshine they may mete all such sortes of clothes as cometh into the land, and with the Locut all such cloth both linnen and woollen, as they make themselves. And whereas wee use to giue yard and inch, or yard and handfull, they doe giue no thing but bare measure.

The measure of Wardhouse in cloth, is the measure of Danke.

They haue also a measure wherewith they doe mete their coine, which they call a Setfooth, and the halfe of that an Dsimine: this Setfooth I take to be three bushels of London measure. And as for their binke measure, they call it a Spanne, which is much like a bucket, and of that I neuer sawe any true rate, but that some was greater then other some. And as for the measures of Wardhouse wherewith they mete their cloth, there is no difference between that & the measure of Danske, which is halfe an English ell.

The Turkes and Armenians pay cus-tome.

Concerning the tolles and customes of Russia, it was reported to mee in Moscovia, that the Turkes and Armenians pay the tenth penie custome of all the Wares they bring into the Emperours land, and about that they pay for all such goods as they waigh at the Emperours beame, two pence of the Rubble, which the buyer or seller must make report of to the Master of the beame: they also pay a certayne Hoyle toll, which is in diuers places of his Realme foure pence of a hoyle.

The Dutch nation lost their priuileges, and res-
newed them with a great summe.

The Dutch nation are free of this: notwithstanding for certaine offences, they had lost their priuileges which they haue recouered this Sommer to their great charge. It was reported to mee by a Justice of that countrey, that they paid for it thirtie thousand Rubbles, and also that Rye, Dorpte and Reuell haue peeled themselves vnder the gouernement of the Emperour of Russia: whether this was a bragge of the Russes or not, I know not, but thus he sayd, and in deed whiles wee were there, there came a great Ambassadors out of Liffeland, for the assurance of their priuileges.

The commodities of Russa.

To speake somewhat of the commodities of this countrey, it is to bee understood, that there is a certaine place foure scoye miles from the Sea called Colmogro: to which place there resort all the sortes of Wares that are in the North partes, as Oiles, Salt, Stockfish, Salmon, Fethers and Fures: their Salt they make of salt water by the Sea side: their Oiles they make of Seales, whereof they haue great store which is brought out of the Bay where our shippes came in: they make it in the Spring of the yeere, and bring it to Colmogro to sell, and the merchants there carie it to Nouogrode, and so sell it to the Dutch nation. Their Stockfish and Salmon cometh from a place called Mallums, not farre from Wardhouse: their Salmon and their Salt they carie to Mosco, and their dyffise they carry to Nouogrode, and sell it there to the Leeflanders.

The Fures and Fethers which come to Colmogro, as Sables, Beavers, Spinkes, Armin, Lettis, Graies, Wooluerings, and white Fozes, with Deere Skimmes, they are brought thither, by the men of Penninge, Lampne, and Powltezer, which fetch them from the Samoydes that are counted sauage people: and the merchants that bring these Fures, doe use to trucke with the merchants of Colmogro for Cloth, Tinne, Barrie, and such other like, and the merchants of Colmogro carie them to Nouogrode, Vologda, or Mosco, and sell them there. The Fethers which come from Penning they doe little esteeme.

Four merchants doe desire to know the next place of Russia for their standing house, in mine opinion askmar, they sell by pood, or they and of the small 80. there goe 10.

ours: for I take not their great for your iust pood, weigh 6. rub re what it lacketh: for 6. rubbles I thinke it the next way to know the waight of Wardhouse, for so is the Watermark, as they of Rus of those waights are these: the marke pound is to be understood the wrie is 3. great pound, and 8.

waights, so they haue also two woollen: they call the one an much as the Flaunders ell, and p mete all such sortes of clothes linen and woollens, as they make and handfull, they doe giue wo and sell them there. The Fe for ther standing house, in mine opinion

opinion I take it to be Vologda, which is a great towne standing in the heart of Russia, with many great and good townes about it. There is great plenty of corne, victuals, and of all such wares as are raised in Russia, but specially, flaxe, hempe, tallow and bacon: there is also great store of waxe, but it cometh from the Mosko.

The towne of Vologda is meetest for our merchants, because, it lieth amongst all the best townes of Russia, and there is no towne in Russia but trades with it: also the water is a great commodity to it. If they please themselves in Mosco or Nouogrode, their charge will be great and wonderfull, but not so in Vologda: for all things will there be had better cheape by the one half. And for their vent, I know no place so meetest is likely that some will thinke the Mosko to be the meetest by the reason of the court, but by that reason I take it to be worse: for the charge there would be so great by crauers and expences, that the moitie of the profit would be wholly consumed, which in the other place will be saved. And yet notwithstanding our merchants may be there in the Winter to serue the Emperour and his court. The Emperour is a great merchant himselfe of ware and fables, which with good foresight may be procured to their hands: as for other commodities there are little or none in Moscouia, besides those aboue rehearsed: if there be other, it is brought thither by the Turkes, who will be daintie to buy our clothes considering the charges of carriage ouer land.

Our merchants may doe well to thouide for the Russes such wares as the Dutch nation doeth serue them of, as Flaunders and Holland clothes, which I beleue, they shall serue better and with less charge then they of Rye or Dorpr, or Reuel: for it is no small aduenture to bring their clothes out of Flaunders to either of these places, and their charge not little to carry them ouer land to Nouogrode, which is from Rye nine hundred Russia miles.

This Nouogrode is a place well furnished with Flaxe, Ware, Hides, tallow and many other things: the best flaxe in Russia is brought thither and there sold by the hundred bundels, which is done also at Vologda, and they that bring the flaxe to Nouogrode, dwell as nere Vologda, as Nouogrode, and when they heare of the vterance which they may haue with our nation, they will as willingly come to them as goe to the other.

They haue in Russia two sortes of flaxe, the one is called great flaxe, and the other small: that which they call great flaxe is better by foure rubbles in 100. bundles then the small: It is much longer then the other, and cleaner without wood: and whereas of the small flaxe there goe 27. or 28. bundles to a Hoppon, there goeth not of the greater sort about 22. or 24. at the most. There are many other trifles in Russia, as sope, mase, &c. but I thinke there will be no great account made of them.

Vologda and the state there

The emperour of Moscouia is a merchant himselfe.

Two sortes of flaxe.

6 Item, if any person of the sayde ministers shall bee of such pride or obstinacie, that after one or two honest admonitions, hee will not bee reformed nor reconciled from his faultes, then the sayde Agents to displace every such person from the place or vocation to him here committed, and some other discrete person to occupie the same, as to the sayde Agents by their discretions shall seeme meet.

Realmes with profit, giuing a perfect aduise of all such things requisite.

14 Item, if the Empeour will enter into bargen with you for the whole masse of your stocke, and will haue the trade of it to beeter to his owne subiectes, then debating the matter prudently a mong your selues, set such high prices of your commodities, as you may assure your selues to be gainers in your owne wares, and yet to buy theirs at such base prices, as you may beere also make a commodity and gaine at home, hauing in your mindes the notable charges that the companie haue withered in aduancing this voyage; and the great charges that they sustaine daily in wages, <sup>now.</sup> briualles and other things: all which must be required by the wise handling of this voyage, which being the first yeildens shalbe a perpetuall yeildens for euer: and therefore all circumspection is to be vted, and to perseuere in this first enterpryse, which God blest and prosper vnder you, to his glo ry, and the publike wealth of this Realme, whereof the Queenes Maiceste, and the Lords of the counsell haue conceiued great hope, whose expectations are not to be frustrated.

15 Item, it is to be had in minde, that you vse all waies and meanes possible to learne how men may passe from Russia, either by land or by sea to Cathaia, and what may be heard of our other shippes, and to what knowledge you may come, by conferring with the learned or well tra uelled persons, either naturall or forren, such as haue trauelled from the North to the South.

16 Item, it is committed to the said Agents, that if they shall be certified credibly, that any them, to learne their estate and condition, to visit, refresh, relieue, and furnish them with all neces saries and requisites, at the common charges of the companie, and to imbarce, accept, and intreat them as our deare and welbeloued brethren of this our societie, to their reioycing and comfort, ad uertising wh:ough Walloughbith and others of our carefulnesse of them and their long absence, with our desire to heare of them, with all other things done in their absence for their commodity, no less then if they had beene present.

17 Item, it is decreed, that when the shippes shall arrive at this going forth at the Wardhouse, that their Agents, with Whaiter Chancelier grand pilot, John Brooke merchant, deputed for the Wardhouse, with John Duckland master of the Edward, John Howler master, and John Rob bins pilot of the Phillip and Gary shall conferre and consult together, what is most profitable to be done therefore for the benefit of the companie, and to consider whether they may bargen with the captaine of the caille, and the inhabitants in that place, or alongt the coast for a large quantitie of fish, hie or wet, killed by the naturals, or to be taken by our men at a price reasonable for trucke of cloth, meale, salt or beere, and what trainecople, or other commodities is to be had there at this time, or any other season of the yeere, and whether there will be had or found sufficient lading for both the said shippes, to be bought there, and how they may conferre with the naturals for a conti nuance in hauing the place, if profit will so arise to the companie, and to consider whether the Ed ward in her returne may receiue at the Wardhouse any kinde of lading home ward, and what it may amount vnto, and whether it shall be expedient for the Phillip to abide at Wardhouse the re turne of the Edward out of Russia, or getting with the Phillip, to returne with the first good minde to England, without abiding for the Edward, and so to conclude and accord certaine lies among them shew vpon their arrival, that the certaintie may (vpon good deliberation) be so ordered and deter mined betwene both shippes, that the one may be assured of the other, and these determinations to be put in writing duplicate to remaine with each ship, according to such order as shall be taken be

The Phillip

18 Item, that John Brooke our merchant for the Wardhouse take good aduise of the rest of our Agents, how to vse himselfe in all affaires, while the shippe shall be at the Wardhouse, he to see and diversities of foyes in fishes be, and whether it will keepe better in bulke piled, or in caske. <sup>now.</sup>

19 Item, he to haue a diligent eye and circumspection to the beere, salt, and other liquid wares,
and

and not to suffer any waite to be made by the company, and he in all contracts to require advise, counsell, and consent of the maister and pilot, the merchant to be our housewife, as our speciall trust is in him, he to tender that no lawes nor customes of the countrey be broken by any of the company, and to tender to the peace, and other officers, all that which to them doth appertaine, the company to be quiet, void of all quarrelling, fighting, or brawling, absteine from all exercise of drinking, as much as may be, and in all to vse and behaue themselves as to quiet merchants doth, and ought to appertaine.

20 Item, it is decreed by the company, that the Edward shall returne home this yeere with as much wares as may be convenient, and profitably provided, bought, and laden in Russia, and the rest to be taken in at the Warehouse, as by the Agents shall be appointed. But by all meanes it is to be foretold and noted, that the Edward returne home, and not to winter in any foreign place, but to come home, and bring with her all the whole adventures of the merchantes, with such further advise for the next yeeres provision, as they shall give.

21 Item, it is further decreed and ordeined, inviolable to be observed, that when the good shippes, or either of them (by Gods grace) shall returne home to the coastes of Englande, that neither of them shall staye or touche in any Haven or Port of Englande, otherwise then winde and weather shall serve, but shall directly saile and come to the Port of the cite of London, the place of their right discharge, and that no bulke be hoked, hatched opened, chaf, fardell, crulle, barrill, sacke, or whatsoeuer thing it shall be, be brought out of the shippe, until the company shall give order for the same, and appoint such persons of the company as shall be thought meete for that purpose, to take view, and consider the shippe and her lading, and shall give order for the breaking up of the said bulke, or give licence by discretion, for thinges to be brought to land. And that every officer shall helpe the ende of his charge to him first committed, and to examine the waistes and losses, and to deliuer the remainder to the vse and benefite of the company, according to such order as shall be appointed in that behalf.

22 Item, the company chooseth, willet, and requirerth, not onely all the said Agents, pilots, maisters, merchantes, clerkes, boatewaines, stewards, skafemaisters, and all other officers and ministers of this present voyage, being put in charge and trust dayly to perseue, reade, and obey such instructions as be made, given, and deliuered to them for perfect knowledge of the people of Russia, Spotskita, Warehouse, and other places, their dispositions, lawes, maners, customes, vses, tolles, carriages, coines, weights, numbers, measures, wares, merchandizes, commodities, and in commodities, the one to be accepted and embraced, the other to be rejected and utterly abandoned, to the intent that every man taking charge, may be so well taught, perfect, and readily instructed in all the premises, that, by ignorance, no losse or prejudice may grow or chance to the company, assuring themselves, that forasmuch as the company hath travailed and laboured so in their their instructions to them given, that every man may be perfect, and fully learned to eschew all losses, hurts and damages that may insue by prejudice or colour of none knowledge, the company entendeth not to allowe, or accept ignorance for any lawfull or iust cause of excuse, in that which shall be misorderd by negligence, the burden whereof shall light upon the negligent offending person, especially upon such as of their owne heads, or temeritie, will take upon him or them to do or attempt any thing, whereby prejudice may arise, without the commission of the Agents as above is mentioned, whereunto relation be had.

23 Forasmuch as it is not possible to write and indite such prescribed orders, rules and commissions to you the Agents and factours, but that occasion, time and place, and the pleasures of the princes, together with the operation of successe of fortune shall change or shift the same, although not in the whole, yet in part, therefore the said company doe commit to you their deare and much beloved Agents and factours, to doe in this behalfe for the commodities and wealth of this company, as by your discretions, upon good advised deliberations shall be thought good and beneficiall. The letter of M. George Killingworth, the companies first Agent in Moscoue, touching their interteinement in their second voyage. Anno 1555 the 27 of Nouember in Mosco.

Ight worshipfull, my duetic considered, &c. It may please your worship to vnderstand, that at the making heereof we all be in good health, thanks be to God, saue onely William our cooke as we came from Colmagro fell into the riuer out of the boat, and was drowned: and the 11 day of September we came to Uologda, and there we layed all our wares vp, and solde very little: but one merchant would haue giuen vs 12 robes for a yoad cloth, and he said he would haue had them all, and 4 altines for a pound of sugar, but we did refuse it because he was the first, and the merchants were not come thither, nor would not come before winter, trusting to haue moze: but I feare it will not be much better. Yet notwithstanding we did for the best. And the house that our wares lie in, cost from that day vntill Easter ten robes. And the 28 day of September we did determine with our selues that it was good for M. Gray, Arthur Edwardes, Thomas Parson, Christopher Hudson, John Segewicke, Richard Johnson, and Richard Good, to tarie at Uologda, and M. Chanceler, Henry Lane, Edward White, Robert Best and I should go to Mosco. And we did lade the Emperours sugar, with part of all sortes of wares to haue had to the Hofco with vs, and the way was so deepe, that we were faine to turne backe, and leaue it still at Uologda till the frost. And we went forth with post horse, & the charge of every horse being still ten in number, comes to 10 s. 7 d. halfe pene, besides the guides, and we came to the Hofco the fourth day of October, and were lodged that night in a simple house: but the next day we were sent for to the Emperour his secretarie, and he had vs welcome with a cheerefull countenance and cheerefull wordes, and he shewed him that we had a letter from our Quenes grace to the Emperour his grace, and then he desired to see them all, and that they might remaine with him, to haue them perfect, that the true meaning might be declared to the Emperour, and so we did: and then we were appointed to a better house: and the seuench day the secretarie sent for vs againe, and then he shewed vs that we should haue a better house, for it was the Emperour his will, that we should haue all things that we did lacke, and did send vs meade of two sorts, and two hens, our house free, and currey two dayes to receiue eight hens, seuen alines, and two pence in money, and meadow a certaine, and a prooze fellow to make cleane our house, and to do that wherunto we would set him: and we had giuen many rewards before, which you shall perceiue by ocher, and so we gaue the messengers grew a reward with thanks: and the ninth day we were sent to make us ready to speake with the Emperour on the morrow. And the letters were sent us, that we might deliuer them our selves, and we came before him the tenth day: and before we came to his presence we went thowto a great chamber, where stood many small runnes, pailles, bowles and pots of silver. I meane, like walking bowles, all parfell gill: and within that another chamber, wherein sate (I thinke) were a hundred in cloth of golde, and then into the chamber where his grace sat, and there I thinke were more then in the other chamber also in cloth of golde, and we did our duety, and there we did his grace our queenes graces letters, with a note of your present which was left in Uologda: and then his grace did aske how our Quenes grace did, calling her cousin, saying that he was glad that we were come in health into his Realme, and we went one by one vnto him, andooke him by the hand, and then his grace did bid vs go in health, and come to dinner againe, and we dined in his presence, and were set with our faces to wards his grace, and none in the chamber sate with their backs to wards him, being, I thinke, were a hundred at dinner then, and all serued with golde, as platters, chargers, pottes, cuppes, and all not slender, but very massy, and yet a great number of platters of golde, standing still on the cupboord, not moued: and diuers times in the dinner time his grace sent us meat and drinke from his owne table, and when we had dined we went by to his grace, and receiued a cuppe with drinke at his owne hand, and the same night his grace sent certaine gentlemen to vs with diuers sortes of wine and mead, to whome we gaue a reward. And after ward we were by diuers Italians counsell'd to take heed whom we did trust to make the copie of the priuileges that we would desire to haue, for feare it should not be writen in the Russe tongue, as we did meane. So first a Russian did write for vs a heuillate to the Emperour, the tenour wherof was, that we did desire a stronger priuillage: & when the Secretary saw it, he did deliuer it to his grace, and when we came againe, his grace willed vs to write our mindes, and he would see it, and so we did. And his grace is so troubled with preparations to warres, that as yet we haue no answer: but we haue bene requir'd of his Secretary, and of the vnder Chancelour, to know what wares we had brought into the Realme, and what wares we doe intend to haue, that are, or may be had in this Realme: and we shew'd them, and they shew'd the Emperour therof. And then they said his graces pleasure was, that his best merchants of the Mosco should be spoken to, to meet and talke with vs. And so a day was appointed, and we mette in the Secretary his office, and there was the vnder Chancelour, who was not past two yerres since the Emperours merchant, and not his Chancelour: and then the conclusion of our talke was, that the Chancelour willed vs to bethinke vs, where we would desire to haue a house or houses, that we might come to them as to our owne house, and for merchandize to be made preparation for vs, and they would know our prices of our wares and frite: and we answered, that for our prices they must see the wares before we could make any price thereof, for the like in goodnesse had not bene brought into the Realme, and we did looke for an example of all sortes of our wares to come from Uologda, with the first shew, and then they should see them, and then we would shew them the prices of them: and like wise we could not tell them what we would giue them iustly, till we did know as well their iust weight as their measures (for in all places where we did come, all weightes and measures did vary) then the Secretary (who had made promise vnto vs before) said, that we should haue all the iust measures vnder seale, & he that was found faulty in the contrary, to buy or sell with any other measure then that, the law was, that he should be punished: he said moreover, that if it so happen that any of our merchants do promise by couenant at any time to deliuer you any certaine sum of wares in such a place, and of such like goodnesse, at such a day, for such a certaine price, that then because of wantance, we should cause it to be writen, according as the bargen is, before a iustice or the next ruler to the place: if he did not keepe couenant and promise in all points, according to his couenant, that then looke what losse or hinderance we could iustly proue that we haue thereby, he should make it good, if he be worth so much: and in like case we must doe to them, and to that we did agree, saue onely if it were to come ouer the sea, then if any such fortune should be (as God forbid) that the shippe should mischance or be robbed, & the poofe to be made that such kinde of wares were laden, the English merchants to beare no losse to the other merchant. When the Chancelour said, me thinks you shall be best to haue your house at Colmogro, which is but 100 miles from the right discharge of the ships, and yet I trust the ships shall come neerer hereafter, because the ships may not carry long for their lading, which is 1000 miles from Uologda by water, and all our merchants shall bring all our merchandize to Colmogro to you, and so shall our merchants, neither go empty nor come empty: for if that they lacke lading homeward, there is sale, which is good ware here, that they may come laden againe: so we were very glad to heare that, and did agree to his saying: for we shall neuer the less, if we will, haue a house at Uologda, & at the Mosco, yea, & at Mouogrode, or where we will in

 was glad that we were come in rich golde, as platters, chargers, the dinner time his grace sent vs he did deliuer it to his grace, and and he would see it, and so we did. as per we haue no illuere: but our, to know what wares we had that are, or may be had in this his office, and there was the mathey would know our prices of our know as well their iust weight we should haue all the iust mea-er, that if it so happen that any of any certaine sum of wares in such price, that then because of bond-before a iustice or the next ruler to copying to his covenant, that then there by, he should make it good, if that we did agree, saue onely if it

Rutland. But the three and twentieth of this present we were with the secretery, and then among other talks, we moued, that if we should tary at Colmogro with our wares, and should not come to Cologoda, or further to seeke our market, but tary still at Colmogro, and then the merchants of the Spoto and others should not come and bring their wares, and so the shippes should come, and not haue their lading ready, that then it were a great losse and hinderance for vs: then sayd he againe to vs, that the merchants had bene againe together with him, and had put the like doubt, that if they should come and bring their wares to Colmogro, and that they should not finde wares there sufficient to serue them, that then they should be at great losse and hinderance, they leauing their other trades to fall to that: and to that we did answer, that after the time that we doe appoint with them to bring their wares to Colmogro, God willing, they should neuer come thither, but at the beginning of the yeere, they should finde that our merchants would haue at the least for a thousand rubles, although the shippes were not come: so that he said, that then we must talke further with the merchants: so that as yet I know not, but that we shall haue need of one house at Colmogro, and another at Cologoda, and if that they bring not their wares to Colmogro, then we shall be sure to buy some at Cologoda, and to be out of bondage.

Cologoda.

And thus may we continue three or foure yeeres, and in this space we shall know the countrey and the merchants, and which way to saue our selues best, and where to plant our houses, and where to seeke for wares: for the Spoto is not best for any kinde of wares for vs to buy, saue onely woyle, which we can not haue vnder seven pence the Russe pound, and it lacks two ounces of our pound, neither will it be much better cheape, for I haue bidden sixe pence for a pound. And I haue bought more, five hundred weight of yarne, which standes me in eight pence for a bushing the Russe pound one with another. And if we had receiued any stoze of money, and were dispatched here of that we tary for, as I doubt not but we shall be shortly (you know what I meane) then as soone as we haue made sale, I do intend to goe to Mouogrode, and to Jolitto, whence all the great number of the best tow stoze cometh, and such wares as are there I trust to buy part. And feare you not, we will do that may be done, if God send vs health, desiring you to prepare fully for one shipp to be ready in the beginning of Apyll to depart off the coast of England.

Mouogrode.

Concerning all those things which we haue done in the wares, you shall receiue a perfect note by the next bearer (God willing) for he that carrieth these from vs is a merchant of Turtwell, and he was caused to tary these by the commandement of the Emperour his secretery, whose name is Euan Mecallawiche wekawate, whom we take to be our very friend. And if it please you to send any letters to Dantiske, to Robert Elton, or to William Matsons seruant Dunstan Matson to be conueyed to vs, it may please you to inclose ours in a letter sent from you to him, written in Polish, Dutch, Latine, or Italian: so inclosed, comming to the Spoto to his handes, he will conuey our letters to vs wheresouer we be. And I haue written to Dantiske already to them for the conuenance of letters from thence.

The Russian secretery Dunstan Matson.

And to certifie you of the weather here, men say, that these hundred yeeres was neuer so warme weather in this countrey at this time of the yeere. But as yester night we receiued a letter from Christopher Hudson from a citie called Pereslaue, who is comming hither with certaine of our wares, but the winter did decreue him, so that he was faine to tary by the way: and he wrote that the Emperours present was deliuered to a gentleman at Cologoda, and the sledde did ouertrow, and the butte of Pollocke was lost, which made vs all very sorry.

I pray you be not offended with these my rude letters, for lacke of time: but as soone as sale is made, I will finde the meanes to conuey you a letter with speed: for the way is made so doubtfull, that the right messenger is so much in doubt, that he would not haue any letters of any effect sent by any man if he might, for he knowes not of these: and to say the truth, the way is not for him to reauell in. But I will make another shift beside, which I trust shall serue the turne till he come, if sales be made before he be ready, which is and shall be as pleaseth God: who euer preferre your worship, and send vs good sales. Written in haste.

By yours to command

A copie of the first Priuileges granted by the Emperour of Russia to the English Merchantes, in

Hyn Casilivich, by the grace of God, Emperour of Russia, great Duke of Uogrode, Polsouia, &c. To all people that shall see, reade, heare, or vnderstand these presents, greeting. Forasmuch as God hath planted all Realmes and Dominions in the whole world with sundry commodities, so as the one hath need of the amity and commodities of the other, and by meanes thereof, traffike vsed from one to another, and amity thereby increased, and for that as amongst men nothing is more to be desired then amity, without the which no creature being of a naturall good disposition can liue in quietnesse, so that it is as trouble some to be utterly wanting, as it is perceived to be grieuous to the body to lacke ayre, fire, or any ocher necessities most requisite for the conseruation and maintenance thereof in health, considering also how needfull merchandise is, which furnisheth men of all that which is conuenient for theyr liuing, and nouriture, for their clothing, trimming, the satisfiing of their deligthes, and all ocher thinges conuenient and profitabie for them, and that merchandise bringeth the same commodities from diuers quarters, in so great abundance, as by meanes thereof nothing is lacking in any part, and that all thinges be in euery place (where euery course of merchandise is receiued and embraced) generally in such sort, as amity thereby is entered into, and planted to continue, and the iniopers thereof be as men liuing in a golden world. Upon these respects, and ocher weighty and good considerations, vs heereunto mouing, and chiefly vpon the contemplation of the gracious letters, directed from the right high, right excellent, and right mighty Queene Mary, by the grace of God, Queene of England, France, &c. in the fauour of her subiects, merchantes, the gouernour, consuls, assistants, and comminallty of merchantes aduocaters, for viscouery of lands, &c.

Consuls: Sir John Shelham, &c. Assistants, and to the comminallty of the aforesaid fellow shippe, and to theyr successours for euer, and to the successours of euery of them, these articles, grans, immunities, franchises, liberties and priuileges, and euery of them heereafter following, expressed and declared, videlicet:

1 First, we for vs, our heyyes and successours, do by these presents giue and grant free licence, faculty, authoriy and power vnto the said Gouernour, Consuls, Assistants, and comminallty of the said fellow shippe, and to their successours for euer, that all and singular the merchantes of the same company, their Agents, factours, doers of their businesse, attornies, seruants, and ministres, and euery of them may at all times heereafter for euer more surely, freely, and safely with theyr shippes, merchandizes, goods, and thinges whatsoeuer, saile, come, and enter into all and singular our lands, countreyes, dominions, cities, townes, villages, castles, ports, iurisdictiones and detraicts by sea, land, or fresh waters, and there tary, abide, and sojourne, and buy, sell, barter and change all kinde of merchandizes with all maner of merchantes and people, of whatsoeuer nation, right condition, state or degrees they bee, and with the same or other shippes, wares, merchandizes, goods, and thinges, whatsoeuer they be, vnto other Emppres, Kingdomes, Dukeodomes, parts, and to any other place or places at theyr pleasure and liberty, by sea, land or fresh waters may depart, and exercise all kinde of merchandizes in our Emppre and dominions, and euery part thereof, freely and quietly, without any restraint, impeachment, pnye, exaction, yess, straight custome, toll, imposition, or subbidie to be demanded, taxed, or payed, or at any time heereafter to be demanded, taxed, set, leuied, or inferred vpon them or any of them, or vpon their goods, shippes, wares, merchandizes and thinges, of, for, or vpon any part or partell thereof, or vpon the goods, shippes, wares, merchandizes, and thinges of any of them, so that they shall not need any other safe conduct or licence generall, ne speciall, of vs, our heyyes or successours, neither shall be bound to aske any safe conduct or licence in any of the aforesaid places subiect vnto vs.

2 Item, we giue and grant to the sayd merchantes, this power and libertie, that they, ne any of them, ne theyr goods, wares, merchandizes or thinges, ne any part thereof, shall be by any meanes, within our dominions, landes, countreyes, castles, townes, villages, or other place or places of our iurisdiction, at any time heereafter attached, stayed, arrested, ne disturbed for any Anno 1555.

Apud Westmonasterium, 6. die Feb. Annis regnorum nostrorum, primo & secundo.

Certaine instructions deliuered in the third voyage, Anno 1556. for Russia, to every Purser, and the rest of the seruants, taken for the voyage, which may serue, as good and necessary directions, to all other like aduenturers.

First you shall before the Shippe doth begin to lade, goe aboard, and that there take, and write one inventory, by the aduise of the Master, or of some other principall officer there aboard, of all the tackle, apparel, cables, anchors, ordnance, chambers, shot, powder, artillery, and of all other necessaries whatsoever doth belong to the said ship; and the same listy taken, you shall write in a booke, making the said Master, or such officer priuite of that which you have so written, so that the same may not be denied, when they shall call accompt thereof: that done, you shall write a copie of the same, with your owne hand, which you shall deliuer before the shippe shall depart, for the voyage to the companies hooker keeper here to be kept to their behalfe, so the tyme that they may be listy answered the same, when time shall require: and this order to be keene and kept every voyage orderly, by the pursers of the companies owne shippe, in any tyme.

2. Also when the Shippe becometh to lade, you shall be ready a boord with your booke, to enter such goods as shall be brought a boord, to be laden for the companie, packed, or unpacked, taking the markes and numbers of every packe, fardell, trulle, or packer, croun, pa, chest, fatte, butt, pipe, pyncheon, whole barrell, halfe barrell, fykin, or other cask, maunde, or basker, or any other thing, which may, or shall be packed by any other manner of waies, or deuise. And first, all such packes, or trulles, &c. as shall be brought aboard to be laden, not marked by the companie's marke, you shall doe the best to let that the same be not laden, and to inquire diligently to knowe the owners thereof, if you can, and what commoditye the same is, that is so brought aboard to be laden: if you can not knowe the owners of such goods, learne what you can thereof, as well making a note in your booke, as also to send or bring word thereof to the Agent, and to some one of the four Partners with him aduoynd, so speedily as you can, if it be here laden, or to be laden in this riuier, being not marked with the companie's marke, as is aforesaid: and when the said shippe hath re- ceaued ceived in all that the companies Agent will have laden, you shall make a iust copie of that which is laden, writing the parcels, the markes and numbers of every thing plainly, which you shall likewise deliver to the sayd booke keeper to the use aforesaid.

3 Also when the ship is ready to depart, you shall come for your cockets and letters to the Agent, and shall shew him all such letters as you have received of any person or persons privately or openly, to be delivered to any person or persons in Russia or elsewhere, and also to declare if you know to any other that shall passe in the ship either master or mariner that hath received any letters to be privately delivered to any there, directed from any person or persons, other then from the Agent here to the Agent there: which letters so by you received, you shall not carry with you, without you be licensed so to doe by the Agent here, and some of the foure merchants, as is aforesaid; and such others as doe passe, having received any private letters to be delivered, you shall all that in you lieth, let the deliverie of them at your arriving in Russia: and also if you have or doe receive, or shall know any other that doth or hath received any goods or ready money to be imploied in Russia, or to be delivered there to any person or persons from any person or persons, other then such as be the companies goods, and that under their marke, you shall before the shipp doth depart, declare the same truly to the said Agent, and to some of the other merchants to him adioyned, as it is before declared.

4 Also when the ship is ready to depart, and hath the master and the whole company aboard, you shall diligently foresee and take heed, that there passe not any private person or persons, other then such as be authorized to passe in the said ship, without the licence or warrant of one of the Courtiers and of the assistants, for the same his passage, to be first shewed. And if there bee any such person or persons that is to passe and will passe without shewing the same warrant, you shall let the passage of any such to the uttermost of your power: And for that there may no such private person passe under the cloke and colour of some mariner, you shall upon the waiving of your shippes anchor, call the master and the mariners within boord by their names and that by your booke, to the ende that you may see that you have neither more nor lesse, but iust the number for the voyage.

5 Also you must have in remembrance, that if it shall chauce the ship to bee put into any harbour in this coast by contrary winde or otherwise in making the voyage, to send word thence from time to time as the case shall require, by your letters in this manner. To master I. B. Agent for the company of the Nedro trades in S. in London: If you doe here any to bring your letters, write that which he must have for the voyage. And for your better knowledge and learning, you shall do very well to keepe a daily note of the voyage both outwards and homewards.

6 And principally see that you forget not daily in all the voyage both morning and evening, to call the company within boord to prayer, in which doing you shall please God, and the voyage will have the better successe thereby, and the company prosper the better.

7 Also in calme weather and at other times when you shall fortune to come to anchor in the seas during the voyage, you shall for the companies profit, and for good husbanding of the biscuits aboard, call upon the Boateswaine and other of the company to use such hooke and other engines as they have aboard to take fish with, that such fish so taken may bee eaten for the use aforesaid: and if there bee no such engines aboard, then to provide some before you goe thence.

8 And when God shall send you in safetie into the Baie of St. Nicholas at an anchor, you shall goe a shoope with the first boate that shall depart from the ship, taking with you such letters as you have to deliver to the Agent there: and if he bee not there at your coming a land, then send the companies letters to Colmogro to him by some sure mariner or otherwise, as the master and you shall thinke best: but goe not your selfe at any hand, nor yet from aboard the ship, unless it bee a shoope to treat with the Agent for the lading of the ship that you be appointed in, which you shall apply diligently to have done so speedily as may bee. And for the discharging of the goods there in the Baie, to bee carried from thence, see that you doe looke well to the unloading thereof, that there bee none other goods sent a shoope then the companies, and according to the notes entered in your booke as aforesaid: if there bee, enquire diligently for whom they bee, and what goods they be, noting who is the receiver of the sayd goods, in such sort that the company may have the true knowledge thereof at your coming home.

make a iust copie of that which is plainly, which you shall likewise cocks and letters to the person of persons primarily of here, and also to declare if you that hath received any letters from, other then from the Agent doe carry with you, without your consent, as is aforesaid: and such you shall all that in you lieth, have of doe receive, or that know bee imploied in Russia, or to be, other then such as be the companye doeth depart, declare to him adioyned, as it is before and the whole company aboard, private person or persons, officer of warrant of one of the Court. And if there be any such the same warrant, you shall be that there may no such thing be in the waying of your ships and that by your bookes, to the iust the number for the day the ship to be put into any the voyage, to send word to the same. To master I. B. Agent any to bring your letters, knowledge and learning, you and homeward.

9. Also there a shoare, and likewise aboard, you shall spye, and search as secretly as you may, to learne and knowe what bargaining, buying, and selling there is, with the Master, and the mariners of the shippe, and the Rulles, or with the companies servants there: and that which you shall perceive and learne, you shall keepe a note thereof in your booke, secretly to your selfe, which you shall open, and disclose at your coming home, to the Governours, and the Assistants, in such sort, as the truth of their secret trades, and occupings may be revealed, and known. You shall neede alwaies to haue Argosies, or to spye their secret packing and comaine, as well on land, as aboard the shippe, of and for such furre, and other commodities, as secretly they doe use to buy, packe, and conuey hit her. If you will be vigilant, and secrete in this article, you can not misse to spye their private packing one with another, either on shoare, or aboard the shippe: woike herein wisely, and you shall deserue great thanks of the whole companie.

10. Also at the lading againe of the shippe, you shall continue and abide a boord, to the ende that you may note and write in your booke, all such goods and marchandise, as shall be brought and laden, which you shall orderly note in all sortes as heretofore, as in the second article partly it is toucht: and in any wise, put the Master and the companie in remembrance, to looke and see the substantiallly, to the roomaging of the shippe, by faire meanes or theaues, as you shall see and thinke will serue for the best.

11. Thus when the shippe is fully laden againe, and all things aboard in good order, and that you doe fortune to goe a shoare to the Agent for your letters, and dispatch a way: you shall demand whether all the goods be laden that were brought thither, and to knowe the truth thereof, you shall repaire to the companys storehouse there, at S. Nicholas, to see if there be any goods left, in the said storehouse: if there be, you shall demand why they be not laden, and to note what kind of goods they be, that be so left: and seeing any of the shippes there, not fully laden, you shall put the Agent in remembrance to lade those goods so left, if any such be to be laden, as is aforesaid. And thus you sending you a faire wind, to make speede and way.

12. Finally, when God shall sende you to arrive againe vpon this coast in safetie, either at Harwich, or els where, goe not you a land, if you may possible, to the ende, that when you be gone a shoare, there may no goods be sent privately ashoate to be sold, or els to be sold aboard the shippe, in your absence, but keepe you still aboard, if you can by any means, for the causes aforesaid, and write the companie a letter from the shippe of your good arrivall, which you may conuey to them by land, by some boy or marriner of the shippe, or otherwile as you shall thinke best: and likewise when God shall send you and the shippe, into the river here, doe not in any wise depart out of the shippe that you be in, untill the companie doe send some other aboard the shippe, in your steede and place, to keepe the said shippe in your absence.

The Nauigation and discouerie toward the Riuer of Ob, made by Master Stephen Burrowe, Master of the Pinnesse called the Serchechrist, with diuers things worth the noting, passed in the yeere, 1556.

Departed from Ratliffe to Blackewall, the 23. of April, Saturday being S. Mattheus Markes day, we departed from Blackewall to Grays.

The 27. being Sunday, the right worshipfull Sebastian Cabota, came aboard our Pinnesse at Grauesende, accompanied with diuers Gentlemen, and Gentlewomen, who after that they had viewed our Pinnesse, and tasted of such cheere as we could make them aboard, they went on shoare, giving to our Patrons right liberall rewarde: and the good olde Gentleman, Master Cabota, gave to the poore most liberall almes, wishing them to may for the good fortune, and prosperous success of the Serchechrist, our Pinnesse. And then at the signe of the Christopher, he and his friends banquetted, and made me, and them that were in my companie, great cheere: and for very top that he had to see the towarnes of our intended discouerie, he entred into the haire himselfe, amongst the rest of the young and lustie companie: which being ended, he, and his friends departed most gently, commending vs to the gouernance of Almighty God.

Tuesday we rode still at Grauesende, making prouision for such things as we wanted.

Wednesday in the morning, we departed from Grauesende, the wind being at South-west, and that night we came to an anker thwart of our Ladie of Hollands.

Thursday at thre of the clocke in the morning, we waited, and by right of the clocke, we were at an anker in Orwell wannes, and then incontinent I went aboard the Edward Bonauenture, where where the Worshipfull companie of Marchantes appointed me to be, untill the said good shipp arrived at Warhouse. Then I returned againe into the pinnell.

Note.

Maye.

1 Friday being the first day of May, at 4. of the clocke in the morning, the wind being at South east, and by East, we waied, and went into Orwell haven.

2 Saturday at five of the clocke in the morning, the winde being at South, and by West, we went into the Wlands, but at two of the clocke at afternoone, the wind shifted, and came by at East and by North, and began to blow a good gale: and at foure of the clocke, we waied, and went againe into Harewich.

4 Sunday at three a clocke in the morning, we came againe out of Harewich, the wind being at West Northwest, and by eight of the clocke, we were thwart of Wyfodnesse, and then the winde shifted, and came at South southeast: and at two of the clocke, we were thwart of Sotwale, and there weooke in our sailes, and staid for the pinnell untill foure of the clocke, which pinnell we sent thither the thir day, to fetch certayne men, and necessaries for the Philip and Marie, and then we set off North east, untill five of the clocke: at the same time Yarmouth Steeple was off by West Northwest, eight leagues, and then we set our course North.

5 From that untill Tuesday five a clocke in the morning, North 18. leagues. From that untill a South sunne North, and by West, the latitude being 54. degrees and a halfe, the wind being at this present at South west, and by West.

The variation of the compass.

6 From that untill Wednesday five of the clocke in the morning, North, and by West: and at this present five a clocke the wind shifted, and came at West northwest: we had the latitude this day, in 55. degrees, 14. minutes: the variation of the compass, from North to East almost 13. degrees. From that unto a west sunne, five leagues northeast: and at this present the wind shifted to the northeast.

From that untill Thursday five a clocke in the morning, 5. leagues north west, and by north. From that untill a south sunne, three leagues northwest: we sounded at this present, and had 45. fadome, and small mingled white and blacke sand, and some mathes like Hering bones. We had the latitude this day at noone, in 55. degrees, 23. minutes.

From that untill a west sunne, north, five leagues.

8 From that untill Friday, a southeast sunne, East ten leagues, the wind at north a stiffe gale.

9 From that untill Saturday, a northeast sunne, five leagues south west, and then we call about to the Northward, the wind being at West, and by north.

From that untill a south west sunne, north east, and by north, eight leagues, and then the winde shifted to the northwards.

10 From that untill a west sunne, two leagues East, and by north.

11 From that untill Sunday three of the clocke in the morning, five leagues East, and by north, the wind at north west.

From that untill a west sunne, southeast, and by South, 13. leagues and a halfe.

From that unto a south south west sunne, three leagues south south west, and then the winde shifted, and came at west, and by north.

From that untill a west sunne, north northwest.

12 From that untill Tuesday in the morning, three of the clocke, north northwest, 25. leagues, and then north and by west.

From that unto a south sunne north, and by west, 14. leagues, and then it waied thicke, and the wind came at the north west, and by west.

From that untill a north west sunne, East northeast, and halfe a point to the Northward, four leagues scane.

13 From that untill Wednesday, a south sunne north east, and by East, and then we were in 57. degrees, 57. minutes.

From that unto a North west sunne, East northeast, four leagues.

14 From that untill the 14. day, a south sunne, three leagues and a halfe, East northeast, and then we call about, the wind being at northeast.

15 This Friday we were within 7. leagues of the shoare, on the coast of Norway: the latitude at a south sunne, 58. degrees and a halfe, where we saw three sailes, beside our owne companie: and thus we followed the shoare of land, which lieth north northwest, north, and by west, and by north, and by north, as it doth appeare by the plat.

Monday at an East sunne, we came to S. Dunstons Island, which I named. It was of the East, two leagues and a halfe, the wind being at Southeast: the latitude this day at a South sunne, 59. degrees, 42. minutes. Also the high round mountaine bare East of vs, at a South sunne: and when this hill is East of you, and being bound to the Northward, the land lieth North, and halfe a point Westward, from this said South sunne, unto a North sunne twentie leagues Northward west along the shoare.

Upon Sunday at sixe of the clocke in the morning, the farthest land that we could see that lay Northward west, was East of vs thye leagues, and then it tended to the Northwards, and to the Eastwards of the North, which head land I iudge to be Scowenelle. At seven of the clocke, we changed our course, and went North, the winde being at Southsoutheast, and it waxed very thicke and mistie, and when it cleared, we went Northnortheast. At a South sunne we lost sight of the Serchechrist, because of the miste, making our way North. And when we lost sight of the shoare, and pinnelle, we were within two leagues and a halfe of the shoare: the last land that we sawe, when this miste came upon vs, which is to the Northwards of Scowenelle, lay Northnortheast, and Southsouthwest, and we made our way North, untill a West sunne sixe leagues.

From that untill Monday thye a clocke in the morning, ten leagues, Northnortheast: and then we went North, and by East, because the winde came at the West South west with thicke myste: the latitude this day, at a South sunne thirtie thye degrees and a halfe truely degrees: at this season we had sight of our Pinnelle againe.

From that untill Tuesday a South sunne North northeast, fourtie four leagues, and then North east, from a South sunne untill eight of the clocke, fiftene leagues Northeast.

From that untill Wednesday, a South sunne North northeast, except the first watch North east: then had we the latitude in thirtie seven degrees, thirtie nine minutes. From that unto a North west sunne, eightene leagues Northeast, and then we were within two leagues of the shoare, and saw the high land to the Southwardes of Lowfoote breake out through the miste, and then we went North and by East.

From the sayd North west sunne untill foure of the clocke in the morning, North, and by East, ten leagues and a halfe: and then North northeast untill a South sunne, the latitude being sixe nine degrees, and a halfe. From that untill halfe an houre past seven of the clocke, North northeast, eleven leagues and a halfe, and then we went Northeast, ten leagues. From that, thye leagues and a halfe, East Northeast, and then we sawe the lande through the cloudes and haze thwarte on the boarde side of vs, the winde being then at the South south west.

From that untill Saturday, at eight of the clocke in the morning, East Northeast, and to the Northwardes fourtie eight leagues, and then the winde came up at North, we being abovee the shoare, and thwart of the Chappel, which I suppose is called Kedilwike: then we cast the shippe head to the Sea wardes, because the winde was very scant: and then I caused the Pinnelle to beare in with the shoare, to see whether she might finde an harborough for the ships or not, and that she found and sawe two roaders rive in the sounde: and also she sawe houses. But notwithstanding, God be praised, the winde enlarged upon vs, that we had not occasion to goe into the harborough: and then the Pinnelle bare her Hyslen mast over boorde with flagge and all, and lost the flagge: with the mast there fell two men over boorde, but God be praised, they were saved: the flagge was a token, whereby we might understand whether there were a good harbour there or not.

At a North sunne the North cape (which I so named the first voyage) was thwart of vs, which is nine leagues to the Eastwardes of the foresayd Chappel from the Eastermost point of it.

June.

The Sunday we weyed in Coppus Christi Bay, at a Northeast and by East sunne: the Bay is almost halfe a league deepe: the head lande which is Coppus Christi point, lyeth South east, and by East, one league from the head of the Baye, where we had a great tyde, like a race over the flood: the Bay is at the least two leagues ouer: so doe I imagine from the faire soyle and to Coppus Christi point tenne leagues Southeast, and by East: It floweth in this Baye, at a South and by West moone full sea. From that we weyed untill seven a clocke at afternoone twentie leagues Southeast, and by South: and then we took in all our sayles, because it was then verie myste, and also we met with much yce, that came out of the Baye, and then we went South Southeast with our foresayle: at eight of the clocke, we heard a piece of ordnance, which was out of the Edward, which bade vs farewell, and then we shot off another piece, and bade her farewell.

farewell: we could not see the other, because of the thicke mist: at a North-west sunne, it began somewhat to cleere, and then we sawe a head land, and the shoare trenched to the South-west ward, which I judged to be about Crose Island: it was of vs at a north north-west sunne, west south-west.

8 From this north north-west sunne, untill Sunday, we went South-east, and this morning we came at anker among the shoales that lie off, of point Looke out, & north-east, and by East sunne, the wind being at East south-east. At this point Looke out, a south Spooone maketh a full sea. Cape good fortune lieth from the Isle of Crose south-east, and betwene them is tenne leagues: point Looke out, lieth from Cape Good fortune, East south-east, and betwene them are six leagues: S. Edmonds point lieth from point Looke out East south-east, and halfe a point to the southwards, and betwene them are six leagues. There is betwene these two points, a Baye that is halfe a league deepe, and is full of shoales, and dangers. At a south-east sunne we wated, and turned to the westwards, the winde being at East south-east: and at a south-east sunne, we came to an anker, being then a full sea, in five fadoms and a halfe water. It lieth at this place where we roade, and also at point Looke out, foure fadome water. At a West north-west sunne we wated, and dyued to the westwards, untill Tuesday, a north north-east sunne, and then being a high water, we came to an anker open of the river Colape, in eight fadome water. Cape S. Bernarde lieth from S. Edmonds point, south-east, and by south, and betwixt them are six leagues, and also betwixt them is the River Colape, into which River we went this evening.

A Ruffe boe die.

Tuesday we roade still in the said River, the winde being at north: we sent our skiffe a lande to be dyelled: the latitude of the mouth of the River Cola, is sixtie five degrees, fortye and eight minutes.

Thursday at 6. of the clocke in the morning, there came aboard of vs one of the Ruffe Lobias, rowing with twentie oares, and there were foure and twentic men in her. The Spatter of the boate presented me with a great loafe of bread, and sixe ringes of bread, which they call Colaches, and foure dyed pikses, and a pecke of fine oatermeale, and I gave unto the Spatter of the boate, a combe, and a small glasse: and he declared unto me, that he was bound to Pechora, and after that, I made them to drinke, the tide being somewhat broken, they genely departed. The Spatters name was Pheother.

Whereas the tenth day, I sent our pinnelle on shoare to be mended, because she was leake, and weake, with the Carpenter, and three men more to helpe him, the weather chanced so, that it was Sunday, before they could get aboard our shippe. All that time they were without provision of victuals, but onely a litle bread, which they spent by Thursday at night, thinking to have come aboard when they had liked, but wind and weather denied them: in somuch that they were faine to eate grasse, and such weedes, as they could finde then aboute grounde, but fresh water they had plentie, but the meate with some of them could scant stame by reason of their queasie stomackes.

From Thursday at afternoone, untill Sunday in the morning, our barke did ride such a roade sted, that it was to be marvelled, without the helpe of God, howe she was able to abide it.

In the bight of the southeast shoare of the river Cola, there is a good roade in five fadoms, or foure fadome and a halfe, at a lowe water: but you shall haue no lande north North-east of you then. I proued with our pinnelle, that the depth goeth on the southeast shoare.

Thursday we wated our ankers in the River Cola, and went into the Sea seven or eight leagues, where we mette with the winde farre northerly, that of force it constrained vs to goe & gaine backe into the saide River, where came aboard of vs sundry of their boates, which declared unto me that they were also bound to the northwards, a fishing for Hoyle, and Salmon, and gave me liberally of their white and wheaten bread.

From Colape to Pechora is

As we roade in this river, we sawe daily comming downe the river many of their Lobias, and they that had least, had foure and twentic men in them, and at the last they grew to thirtie saile of them: and amongst the rest, there was one of them whose name was Gabriel, who shewed me very much friendship, and he declared unto me, that all they were bound to Pechora, a fishing for Salmon, and Hoyle: in somuch that he shewed mee by demonstrations, that with a faire winde we had seven or eight daies sailing to the River Pechora, so that I was glad of their companie. This Gabriel promised to giue mee warning of shoales, as hee did in deede.

Speciall friends gaue me a barrell of beere, which was carped vpon mens backs, at least two miles.
Sunday we departed from the riuer Cola, with all the rest of the said Lodias, but sailing before the winde, they were all too good for vs: but according to promise, this Gabriel and his friend did often strike their sailes, and carped for vs forsaking their owne company.

22
The curellie
of one Gabriel.

Tuesday at an Eastnortheast sunne we were thwart of Cape S. John. It is to be vnderstood, that from the Cape S. John vnto the riuer of bay that goeth to Pezen, it is all sinke land, and full of shoales and dangers, you shall haue scant two fathom water, and see no land. And this ye-sday we came to an anker thwart off a crosse, which is 4 or 5 leagues to the Northwards of the said Cape, into which creeke Gabriel and his fellow rowed, but we could not get in: and before night there were about 20 saile that went into the said creeke, the winde being at the Northwest. We had indifferent good layd bang.

23
of good a nee cellary note.

This afternoone Gabriel came aboard with big skiffe, and then I rewarded him for the good company that he kept with vs ouer the shoales with two small puoy combs, and a Steele glaife, with two of thre crisses more, for which he was not vgratefull. But notwithstanding, his first company had gotten further to the Northwards.

Wednesday being Midsummer day, we sent our skiffe a land to sound the creeke, where they found it almost drye at a low water. And all the Lodias within were on ground.

Although the harborough were euill, yet the stormy similitude of Northerly windes tempted vs to set our sailes, and we let slip a cable and an anker, and bare twixt the harborough, for it was then nere a high water: and as of wayes in such iournes, barteries do chance, when we came vpon the bette in the entrance of the creeke, the winde did thinke so suddenly vpon vs, that we were not able to lead it in, and before we could haue flatted the shippe before the winde, we should haue bene on ground on the lee shoze, so that we were constrained to let fall an anker vnder our sailes, and rode in a very brach, thinking to haue warpe in. Gabriel came out with his skiffe, and so did sundry others also, shewing their good will to helpe vs, but all to no purpose, for they were likely to haue bene byrned for their labor, in so much that I desired Gabriel to lend me his anker, because our owne ankers were too bigge for our skiffe to lay out, who sent me his owne, and boyrowed another also and sent it vs. Then we layd out one of those ankers, with a hawser which he had of 140 fathom long, thinking to haue warpe in, but it would not be: for as we hoped vpon the said warpe the anker came home, so that we were faine to beare the end of the warpe, that we rushed in vpon the other small anker that Gabriel sent aboard, and layd that anker to seawards: and then betwene these two ankers we trauesed the shippes head to seawards, and set our foreside and maine saile, and when the barke had way, we cut the hawser, and so gat the sea to our friend, and crept out all that day with our maine coyse.

The Thursday we went roome with Cape S. John, where we found indifferent good rode for a Northnortheast wind, and for a nee, for a North and by West winde.

Friday at afternoone we weped, and departed from thence, the weather being meetly faire, & the winde at Eastsoutheast, and plyed for the place where we left our cable and anker, and our hawser:
as soone as we were at an anker, the foreside Gabriel came aboard of vs, with thre or foure more of their small boates, and brought with them of their Aquauit: and meade, professing vnto me very much friendship, and reioyced to see vs againe, declaring that they earnestly thought that we had bene lost. This Gabriel declared vnto me, that they had saued both the ankers and our hawser, and after we had thus commended, I caused 4 or 5 of them to goe into my cabbin, where I gaue them figg and made them such cheere as I could. While I was thus banking of them, there came another of their skiffes aboard, with one who was a Kerill, whose name afterwards I learned, & that he dwelt in Colmogro, and Gabriel dwelled in the towne of Colay, which is not far from the riuers mouth. This foreside Kerill said vnto me that one of the ankers which I boyrowed was his, I gaue him thanks for the lone of it, thinking it had bene sufficient. And as I continued in our accustomed manner, that if the present which they brought were worthy intertainment, they had it accordingly, he brought nothing with him, & therefore I regarded him but little. And thus we ended, and they tooke their leaue and went a shoze. At their comming a shoze, Gabriel and Kerill were at vnicouenient wayes, and by the eares, as I vnderstand: the cause was because the one had better intertainment then the other: but you shall vnderstand that Gabriel was not able to make his party good, because there were 17 lodias of Kerills company who tooke his part, and but 2 of Gabriels company.

The next high water Gabriel and his company departed from thence, and rowed to their former company and neighbors, which were in number 28 of them at the least, and all of them belonging to the riuer Colay.

Twenty eight lodias belonging to Cola.

And as I vnderstood Kerill made reckoning that his hawser which was fast in his anker should haue

haue beene his owne, and at first would not deliuer it to our boat, insomuch that I sent him word that I would complaine vpon him, whereupon he deliuered the halfe to my company.

The next day being Saturday, I sent our boat on shore to fetch fresh water and wood, and at their comming on shore this Kerill welcomed our men most gently, and also banketed them: and in the meane time caused some of his men to fill our baricoes with water, and to helpe our men to beare wood into their boat: and then he put on his best like coate, and his collar of pearles, and came aboard againe, and brought his present with him: and thus hauing more respect vnto his present then to his person, because I perceiued him to be valnegious, I hadde him welcome, and gaue him a dish of figges: and then he declared vnto me that his father was a gentleman, and that he was able to shew me pleasure, and not Gabriel, who was but a priests sonne.

After their departure from vs, we weped, and plyed all the ebbe to the winde ward, the winde being Northely, & towards night it waied vnto Noym, so that of force we were constrained to go vnto Cape S. John againe, in which Noyme we lost our skiffe at our sterne, that we bought at Wardhouse, and there we rode vntill the fourth of July. The latitude of Cape S. John is 66 degrees 50 minurs. And it is to be noted, that the land of Cape S. John is of height from the full sea marke, as I iudge 10 fathoms, being cleane without any trees growiug, & also without stones or rocks, and consists onely of blacke earth, which is so rotten, that if any of it fall into the sea, it will swimme as though it were a piere of wood. In which place, about thre leagues from the shore you shall not haue about 9 fadom water, and clay ground.

The latitude of Cape S. John 66 degrees 50 minurs.

Iulie.

Saturday at a Northnorthwest sunne, the winde came at Eastnortheast, & then we weped and plyed to the Northwards, and as we were two leagues short past the Cape, we saw a house standing in a valley, which is doubtly to be seene in those parts, and by and by I saw thre men on the top of the hill. Then I iudged them, as it afterwards prooued, that they were men which came from some other place to set traps to take vermin for their furrer, which trappes we did perceiue very thicke alongst the shore as we went.

Sunday at an East sunne we were thwart off the creeke where the Russes lay, and there came to an anker, and perceiuing the most part of the L. odias to be gone, we thought it not good to tye any longer there, but weped, and spent all the ebbe, plying to the windewards.

6

Sunday at a South sunne it was high water. All alongst the coast it floweth little, onely a South moone makes a full sea: and as we were a weying we espied the Russe L. odias, which we first lost. They came out of a creeke amongst the sandy hilles, which hilles begonne 1 1/2 leagues Northnortheast from Cape S. John.

Plying this ebbe to an end, we came to an anker 6 leagues Northnortheast from the place where we saw the Russes come out: and there the Russes harboured themselves within a fooneke bank, but there was not water enough for vs.

At a North sunne we weped, and plyed to the Northwards, the land lying Northnortheast, and Southsouthwest, vntill a South sunne, and then we were in the latitude of 68 degrees & a halfe: and in this latitude ende those sandy hilles, and the land beginneth to lie North and by West, South and by East, and Northnorthwest, and to the Westwards, and there the water becometh to wate deepe.

The latitude 68 degrees and a halfe.

At a Northwest sunne, we came to an anker within halfe a league of the shore, where we had good plenty of fish, both haddocks and cobs, riding in 10 fathom water.

8

Tuesday we weped, and plyed nether the head land, which is called Caninoz, the winde being at East and by North.

9

Thursday the winde being skant we turned to windewards the ebbe, to get about Caninoz: the latitude this day at noone was 68 degrees 40 minurs.

10

Friday we turned to the windeward of the ebbe, but to no purpose: and as we rode at an anker, we saw the similitude of a Noyme rising at Northnorthwest, and could not tell where to get rode nee succoy for that winde, and harborough we knew none: and that land which we rode vnder with the winde was a lee shore. And as I was mulling what was best to be done, I saw a saile come out of a creeke vnder the the foresaid Caninoz, which was my friend Gabriel, who forsooke his harborough and company, and came as nere vs as he might, and pointed vs to the Eastwards, and then we weped, and followed him, and went East and by South, the winde being at Westnorthwest, and very misty.

Saturday we went Eastsoutheast & followed Gabriel, and he brought vs into an harborough called in, inasmuch that I sent him to my company, with fresh water and wood, and also banked them: and to help our men to eat, and his collar of pearls, and a hauberk more respect unto his parents, I badde him welcome, and his father was a gentleman, and had a pyriels forme.

to the winde wards, the winde of force we were constrained to goe little at our sterne, that we being in latitude of Cape S. John is 66 S. John is of height from the hills groweing, & also without stones, but if any of it fall into the sea, it is about thre leagues from the Northeast, & then we weped, and the Cape, we saw a house standing by I saw thre men on the top of were men which came from some place we did perceiue very thicke hrought vs into an harbor called called Porogioners, which is 30 leagues from Caninos, and we had upon the barre going in two favours and a fourth part: and after we were past in over the barre, it was yet deeper, for we had 5 fathoms, 4 and a halfe, and 3 fathom, &c. our barke being moored, I sent some of our men to shoare to yong wood, where they had plenty of yiste wood, but none growing: and in this place we found plenty of yong fowle, as gullies, sea-pies, and others, whereof the Russes would eat none, where we were nothing sorry, for there came the more to our part.

Monday our men cut wood on shoare, and brought it aboard, and we ballasted our shippe with stones.

This morning Gabriel saw a smoke on the way who rowed into it with his skiff, which smoke was two leagues from the place where we rood: and at a Northwest sunne he came aboard againe, and brought with him a Samoyd, which was but a yong man: his apparell was then strange into vs, and he presented me with thre yong wilde geese, and one yong barnacle.

Monday I sent a man to the maine in Gabriels boat, and he brought vs a boord eight barricoes of fresh water: the latitude of the said Porogioners is thre eight degrees and a tierce. It floweth there at a Southsouthwest moone full sea, and byeth two fadome and a halfe water.

At a Westnorthwest sunne we departed from this place, and went East 25 leagues, and then saw an Island North and by West of vs eight leagues, which Island is called Volgoiue: and from the Eastermost part of this Island, there lyeth a sand East and by South seven leagues long.

Wednesday at a North and by East sunne, Sweetmoze was South of vs 5 leagues, This day at afternoone we went in over the dangerous barre of Pechora, and had upon the barre but one fathom water.

Thursday we rood still.

Friday I went on shoare, and obserued the variation of the compasse, which was thre degrees and a halfe from the North to the West: the latitude this day was thre nine degrees thre minutes.

From two or thre leagues to the Eastward of Smerinos, vntill the entering of the river Pechora, it is all sandy hills, and towards Pechora the sandy hills are very low.

It is higher on the barre of Pechora foure foot water, and it floweth there at a Southwest moone a full sea.

Sunday at a North and by East sunne, we weped, and came out over the sayd dangerous barre, where we had but sixe foot water: inasmuch that we found a foot talle water continuing ouer then we did going in. I thinke the reason was, because when we went in, the winde was off the sea, which caused the sandes to heape on either side of vs, and we kept in the smooth st betweene the heaches, which we durst not haue done, except we had seene the Russes to haue gone in before vs: and at our comming out the winde was off the shoare, and saye water, and then the sandes did not appeare with heaches as at our going in: we thanke God, that our shippe did ryde so litle water.

When we were a scaboard the barre, the winde scanted vpon vs, and was at Eastnorthwest, inasmuch that we stopped the ebbes, and plyed all the flouds to the windewards, and made our way Eastnorthwest.

Thursday at a Northwest sunne we thought that we had seene land at East, or East & by North of vs: which afterwarde prooued to be a monstrous heape of yce.

Within a little more then halfe an houre after we first saw this yce, we were inclosed within it before we were aware of it, which was a fearefull sight to see: for, for the space of the houres, it was as much as we could do to keepe our shippe aloofe from one heape of yce, and beare roomer from another, with as much winde as we might beare a coast. And when we had past from the dangere of this yce, we lay to the Eastward close by the winde.

The next day we were againe troubled with the yce.

Thursday being calme, we plyed to the windwards, the winde being Northethly. We had the latitude this day at noone in 70 degrees 11 minutes.

We had not come past two houres Northwest, the winde being at Northnorthwest and Northeast and by North a good gale, but we met againe with another heape of yce: we breathered the head of it, and lay a time to the leeward, and made way West 6 leagues.

Friday at a Southeast sunne, we cast about to the Eastward, the winde being at Northnorth-west: the latitude this day at noone was 70 degrees 15 minutes.

On S. James his day bolting to the windwards, we had the latitude at noone in thre degrees thre minutes. The same day at a Southwest sunne, there was a monstrous Whale

And a little after we spied certaine Islands, with which we bare, and found good harbor in 15 or 18 fathom, and blacke oze: we came to an anker at a Nozthead sunne, & named the Island *S. *The relation

The way to the river of Obbe.
It mighte kill in Noua Zembla.*

Tuesday we plyed to the Westwards alongst the shoare, the winde being at Northwest, and as I was about to come to anker, we saw a saile coming about the point, whereunder we thought to haue ankered. Then I sent a skiffe aboard of him, and at their coming aboard, they took acquaintance of them, and the chiefe man said he had bene in our company in the river Colay, and also declared vnto them, that we were past the way which should bring vs to the Ob. This man, said he, is called Noua Zembla, that is to say, the New land: and then he came aboard him self with his skiffe, and at his coming aboard he tolde me the like, and said further, that in this Noua Zembla is the highest mountaine in the world, as he thought, and that Canien Bolshay, which is on the maine of Pechora, is not to be compared to this mountaine, but I saw it not: he made me also certaine demonstrations of the way to the Ob, and seemed to make haste on his owne way, being very lothe to tary, because the yeere was farre past, and his neighbour had set Pechora, and not he: so I gaue him a steele glass, two pewter spoones, and a paire of beluer shepeth knives: and then he seemed somewhat the more willing to tary, and shewed me as much as he knewe of our purpose: he also gaue me 17 white geese, and shewed me that foure of their lodias were taken vpon perforce from Caninox to this Noua Zembla. This mans name was Ioshake.

Wednesday, as we plyed to the Eastwards, we espied another saile, which was one of the Ioshaks company, and we bare roome, and spake with him, who in like sort tolde vs of the Ob, as the other had done.

The Islands of Aigats.

Thursday, we plyed to the Eastwards, the winde being at Eastnortheast.

Friday, the gale of winde began to increase, and came Westlerly withall, so that by a North west sunne we were at an anker among the Islands of Aigats, where we saw two small boats, the one of them came aboard of vs, and presented me with a great loafe of beead: and they tolde me that they were all of Colmagro, except one man that dwelt at Pechora, who seemed to be the chiefest among them in killing of the moose.

There were some of their company on shoare, which did chase a white beare ouer the high dills into the water, which beare, the lodia that was aboard of vs, killed in our sight.

This day there was a great gale of winde at North, and we saw so much yce flying a sea aboard, that it was then no going to sea.

August.

Saturday I went a shoare, and there I saw three moyses, that they had killed: they held one each of a moyse, which was not great, at a roble, and one white beare skinn at three robes, and two robes: they further tolde me, that there were people called Samoyds on the great Island, and that they would not abide them nor vs, who haue no houses, but only coverings made of beere skimes, set ouer them with stakes: they are men expert in shooting, and haue great plenty of beere.

This night there fell a cruell storme, the winde being at West.

Sunday we had very much winde, with plenty of snow, and we rode with two ankers a head.

3

of the Samoyds.*

Sunday we weped and went roome with another Island, which was due leagues Eastnortheast from vs: and there I met againe with Ioshake, and went on shoare with him, and he brought me to a heape of the Samoyds Idols, which were in number about 300, the worst, and the most ridiculous worke that euer I saw: the eyes and mouthes of sundry of them were blouty, they had the shape of men, women, and children, very grossly wrought, & that which they had made in other parts, was also sprinkled with blood. Some of their Idols were an olde sticke with two or three notches, made with a knife, in it. I saw much of the footing of the said Samoyds, and of the sleds that they ride in. There was one of their sleds broken, and lay by the heape of Idols, and there I saw a beere skinn which the fowles had spoiled: and before certaine of their Idols blocks were made as high as their mouths, being all bloudy, I thought that to be the table wher on they offered their sacrifice: I saw also the instruments, wherupon they had roasted flesh, and as farre as I could perceive they make their fire directly vnder the spit.

as high as their mouths, being all bloudy, I thought that to be the table wher on they offered their sacrifice: I saw also the instruments, wherupon they had roasted flesh, and as farre as I could perceive they make their fire directly vnder the spit.

Lozhake being there present, tolde me that these Samoyds were not so hurtfull as they of Ob are, and that they haue no houses, as in deed I saw none, but onely tents made of deere skimes, which they vnderpoype with stakes and poles: they boats are made of deere skimes, and when they come on shoare they carry their boates with them vpon their backs: for theye carriages they haue no other beastes to serue them, but deere onely. As for bread and come they haue none, excepte the Russes bring it to them: their knowledge is very base, for they know no letter.

The Samoyds of the Ob, very hurtfull and shrewd people.

as 70 degrees 42 minutes: the bath to the West.

Tuesday we turned for the harborough where Lozhaks barke lay, wheretas before we rood vnder an Island. And there he came aboard of vs, and said vnto me: if God send winde and weather to send, I will goe to the Ob with you, because the moyses were skant at these Islands of Vaigats: but if he could not get to the river of Ob, then he said he would goe to the river of Pamezap, where the people were not altogether so sauage as the Samoyds of the Ob are: he desired me that they will shooe at all men to the vttermost of their power, that can not speake theye speech.

winde being at Northwest, and as the point, wheremunder we thought their comming aboard, they tooke to company in the riuer Colay, and bying vs to the Ob. Wednesday we saw a terrible heape of yee appoach neere vnto vs, and therefore we thought good with all speed possible to depart from thence, and so I returned to the Westwards againe, to the Island where we were the 31 of July.

Thursday I went a shoare, and tooke the latitude, which was 70 degrees 35 minutes: and the variation of the compasse was 8 degrees from the North to the West.

Lozhake and the two small Lodias of Pechora departed from this Island, while I was on shoare taking the latitude, and went to the Southwards: I marvelled why he departed so suddenly, and went over the shoales amongst the Islands where it was impossible for vs to follow them. But after I perceiued them to be weather wise.

Friday we rood still, the winde being at Northwesterly, with a cruell storme. The yee came in so abundantly about vs at both ends of the Island that we rood vnder, that it was a fearefull sight to beholde: the storme continued with snow, raine, and haile plenty.

Saturday we rood still also, the storme being somewhat abated, but it was altogether misty, that we were not able to see a cables length about vs, the winde being at North-east and by East.

Sunday at foure of the clocke in the morning we departed from this Island, the winde being at South-east and as we were cleere a sea boord the small Islands and shoales, it came so thicke with mistes, that we could not see a base shotte from vs. Then we tooke in all our sailes to make little way.

At a South-east sunne it wared cleere, and then we set our sayles, and lay close by the winde to the Southwards alongst the Islands of Vaigats. At a West sunne we tooke in our sayle againe because of the great mist and raine. We sounded at this place, and had fise and twenty fathoms water, and soft blacke oze, being thre leagues from the shoare, the winde being at South and by East, but still misty.

Wednesday at thre of the clocke in the morning the mist brake vp, the winde being at North-east by East, and then we saw part of the Islands of Vaigats, which we bare withall, and went Calmoth-east close by the winde: at a West sunne we were at an anker vnder the South-west part of the said Vaigats, and then I sent our skiffe to shoare with thre men in her, to see if they might speake with any of the Samoyds, but could not: all that day was raine, but noe windie.

Thursday the winde came Westerly, so that we were faine to seeke vs another place to ride in, because the winde came a leaboard land, and although it were misty, yet we followed the shoare by our lead: and as we brought land in the winde of vs, we let fall our anker. At a West sunne the mist brake vp, so that we might see about vs, and then we might perceiue that we were entred into a sound.

This afternoone weooke in two or thre skiffes lading of stones to ballast our skiffe withall. It bred here foure foot water, and floweth by fits, vncertaine to be iudged.

The vncertaine of ebbing & flowing.

Friday we rood still in the sound, the winde at South-west, with very much raine, and at the end of the raine it wared againe misty.

- 15 Saturday there was much winde at West, and much raine, and then againe mist.
- 16 Sunday was very misty, and much winde.
- 17 Monday very misty, the winde at Westnorthwest.
- 18 Tuesday was also misty, except at noone: then the sunne brake out through the mist, so that we had the latitude in 70 degrees 10 minutes: the afternoone was misty againe, the winde being at Westnorthwest.
- 19 Wednesday at three of the clocke afternoone the mist brake up, and the winde came at Eastnorth east, and then we weped, and went South & by East, untill seven of the clocke, eight leagues, thinking to haue had sight of the sandy hills that are to the Eastwardes of the river Berchoja. At a Northwest sonne we tooke in our maine saile, because the winde increased, and went with fore saile Westnorthwest, the winde being at Eastnorth east: at night there grew so terrible a storme, that we sa to noc the like, although we had inured many stormes since we came out of England. It was wonderfull that our barke was able to brooke such monstrous and terrible seas, without the great helpe of God, who neuer faileth them at need, that put their trust in him.
- 20 Thursday at a Southsouthwest sunne, thanks be to God, the storme was at the highest, & then the winde began to slake, and came Northerly withall, and then I reckoned the Westermost point of the river Berchoja to be South of vs 15 leagues. At a Westsouthwest sunne we set our maine saile, and lay close by the winde, the winde being at Northwest and by North, making but little way, because the billow went so high: at midnichte we cast about, and the shippe caped North northeast, making little way.
- 21 Friday at noone we had the latitude in 70 degrees 8 minutes, and we sounded, and had 29 fathoms sand, and in maner streiny ground. At a West sunne we cast about to the Westwardes, and a little after the winde came by at West.
- 23 Saturday was calme: the latitude this day at noone was 70 degrees and a tierce, we sounded here, and had nine and forty fathoms and oze, which oze signified that we were to wards Noua Zembla.
- They were within 15 leagues of Berchoja.
- They returned the 22 of August.
- And thus we being out of all hope to discover any more to the Easterward this yere, we thought it best to returne, and that for three causes.
- The first, the continuall North east and Northerly windes, which haue more power after a man is past to the Eastwardes of Caninoz, then in any place that I doe know in these Northerly regions.
- Second, because of the great & terrible abundance of yce, which we saw to with our eyes, and we doubt greater store abideth in those parts: I aduentured already somewhat too farre in it, but I thanke God for my safe deliuerance from it.
- Third, because the nightes waxed darke, and the winter began to draw on with his stormes: and therefore I resolved to take the first best winde that God should send, & plie to wards the bay of St. Nicholas, and to see if we might do any good there, if God would permit it.
- This present Saturday we saw very much yce, and were within two or three leagues of it: it lay vnder vs as though it had borne a firme land as farre as we might see from Northwest of vs to the Eastwardes: and this afternoone the Lord sent vs a little gale of winde at South, so that we bare cleere off the Westermost part of it, thanks be to God. And then againe at night it waxed calme againe, and the winde was at Southwest: we made our way untill Sunday noone North west and by West, and then we had the latitude in 70 degrees and a halfe, the winde at South west: there was a billow, so that we could not discern to take the latitude exactly, but by a reasonable guess.
- 24 Sunday there was a prety gale of winde at South, so that we went West and by South, the latitude this day at noone was 70 degrees 10 minutes: we had little winde all day: at a Westnorthwest sunne we sounded, and had 29 fathoms, blacke sandy oze, & then we were North east 5 leagues from the North east part of the Island Colgoiue.
- 25 Tuesday, the winde all Westerly, we plied to the winde wards.
- 26 Wednesday, the winde was also Westerly, and calme: we had the latitude this day in 70 degrees 10 minutes, we being within 3 leagues of the North part of the Island Colgoiue.
- 27 Thursday, we went roome about the Westermost part of the Island, seeking where we might finde a place to ride in for a North west winde, but could finde none, and then we cast about againe to the seawards, and the winde came at Westsouth west, and this morning we had plenty of snow.
- 28 Friday, the winde being at South west and by West, we plied to the winde wards.
- 29 Saturday, the winde being at South, we plied to the Westwardes, and at afternoone the mist brake up, and then we might see the land seven or eight leagues to the Eastwardes of Caninoz:

the Eastwards of Caninoz;

we founde a little before and had 35. fadomes and 072. And a while after we founde againe, and had 19. fadome and sand: then wee were within 3. leagues and a halfe of the shoze, and towards night there came downe so much wind, that we were faine to bring our ship a trie, and laid her head to the Westwards.

Sunday, the winde became moze calme, and then it wazed very mistie: At noone wee call about to the Eastwards, the wind being at South, and ranne eight howers on that boord, and then we call about and caped West south west: we founde and had 32. fathom.s, and tought oaze like clay.

Sunday we doubled about Caninoz, and came at an anker there, to the intent that wee might kill some fish if God would permit it, and there we gate a great Masse, which Masses were there so plenty, that they would scarce ly suffer any ocher fish to come neere the hookes: the said Masses cari- on a way sundry of our hookes and leads.

A little after at a West Sunne, the winde began to blow stormie at West south west, so that we were faine to trie and forsake our fishing ground, and went close by the wind South west and South west and by West, making our way South south west,

September.

Tuesday at a West Sunne, we founde and had 20. fathoms, and broken Wilkethels: A re- coned Caninoze to be 24. leagues North north east from vs.

The eleuenth day we arrived at Colnogro, and there wee wintered, expecting the approach of the next Summer to proceed farther in our intended Discouerie for the Ob: which (by reason of our imployments to Warhouse the next Spring for the search of some English ships) was not accordingly performed.

the same in their journey towards the coast of England, were by contrary windes and extreme tempests of weather severed the one from the other, that is to say, the said Bona Speranza with two other English ships also appertaining to the said company, the one surnamed the Philip and Mary, the other the Confidentia, were driven on the coast of Norway into Dnenton waer, where the sayd Confidentia was seene to perish on a Roche, and the other, videlicet, the Bona Speranza, with her whole company, being to the number of foure and twentie persons seemes to winter there, whereof no certaintie at this present day is knowne. The third, videlicet, the Philip and Mary, arrived in the Thames nigh London the eighteenth day of April, in the yeere of our Lord one thousand five hundred fiftie and seuen. The Edward Bonauenture traucting the Seas foure moneths, finally the tenth day of November of the aforesayd yeere of our Lorde, one thousand five hundred fiftie and sixe, arrived within the Scottish coast in a Baie named Perislego, where by outrageous tempests and extreme bozmes, the sayd ship being beaten from her ground tackle, was driven vpon the Rocks on Hoze, where the make and split in pieces, in such sort, as the grand Pilot vntill all carefullnesse for the safetie of the bodie of the sayde Ambassadour and his trayne, taking the boate of the sayd ship, trussing to attaine the Hoze, and so to saue and preserue the bodie, and seuen of the companie or attendaunts of the sayde Ambassadour, the same boate by rigorous waues of the Seas, was by darke night ouerwhelmed and drowned, wherein perished not onely the bodie of the said grand Pilot, with seuen Russies, but also diuers of the Partners of the sayd ship: the noble personage of the sayde Ambassadour with a few others (by Gods preservation and speciall fauour) onely with much difficultie saued. In which Shipwreake not onely the sayde ship was broken, but also the whole masse and bodie of the goods laden in her, was by the rude and rauensous people of the countrey therewith aduoyning, rifled, spoyled, and caried away, to the manifest losse and bitter destruction of all the lading of the sayd ship, and together with the ship, apparell, ordinaunce and furniture belonging to the company, in value of one thousand pounds, of all which was not restoyed towards the costes and charges to the summe of 500.li. sterling.

The Edward Bonauenture arrived in Scotland, in the Baie of Perislego, November 7. 1556.

Kich. Chancers letter diuocion.

As soone as by letters adressed to the sayd companie, and in London deliuered the six of December last past, it was to them certainly knowen of the losse of their Pilot, men, goods and ship, the same merchants with all celeritie and expedition, obtained not onely the Queenes most gracious and favourable letters to the Ladie Dowager, and lordes of the counsell of Scotland for the gentle comfortment and entertainment of the sayde Ambassadour, his traine and companie, with preservation and restitution of his goods, as in such miserable cases, to Christian pittie, princely honour and merre Justice appertaineth, but also adressed two Gentlemen of good learning, grauitie, and estimation, videlicet, Maister Lawrence Hulle doctor of the Ciuile lawe, and George Gilpin with money, and other requisites into the Realme of Scotland, to comforte, ayde, assist, and relieue him and his there, and also to conduct the Ambassadour into England, sending with them by poste a Calmach or Speechman for the better furniture of the seruice of the sayde Ambassadour, trusting thereby to haue the moze ample and speedie redresse of restitution: which personages vsing diligence, arrived at Edenborough (where the Queenes court was) the three and twentieth day of the sayde moneth of December, who first visiting the sayd Ambassadour, declaring the causes of their comming and Commission, shewing the letters adressed in his fauour, the order giuen them for his solace and furniture of all such things as hee would haue, together with their daily and readie seruice to attend vpon his person and affaires, repaired consequently vnto the Dowager Queene, deliuering the letters.

Wherupon, they receiued gentle answers, with hope and comfort of speedie restitution of the goods, apparell, iewels and letters: for the moze apparance whereof, the Queene sent first certaine Commissioners with a Parole of Armes to Perislego, the place of the Shipwreake, commanding by Proclamation and other Edictes, all such persons (no degree excepted) as had any part of such goods as were spoyled and taken out of from the Ship, to bring them in, and to redresse the same with such further order as her grace by aduise of her counsell thought expedient: by reason whereof, not without great laboures, paynes and charges (after long time) diuers small parcels of Cloath, and other small trifling things of no value, were by the poorer sort of the Scottes brought to the Commissioners, but the Jewels, rich apparell, presents, gold, silver, costly furrer, and such like, were conueied away, concealed and verily embeylled. Wherupon, the Queene at the request of the sayd Ambassadour, caused diuers persons to the number of 180. or moe, to be called personally before her princely presence, to answer to the said spoile, & really to exhibite and bring in all such things as were spoiled and violently taken, & caried out of the same, in the hands of the Scottish subjects, who by subtilty and craftie dealings, by conniuece of the commissioners, so used (or rather abused) themselves towards the same Doctor and his attendants, that no effectual restitution was made: but he fatigated with daily attendaunce and charges, the 14. day of February next ensuing, distrusting any real and effectual remedy of the sayd goods and merchandises and other the premises, upon leaue obtained of the sayd Queene, departed towards England, having attending upon him the said two English gentlemen and others (leaving nevertheless in Scotland thre Englishmen to pursue the deliuerie of such things as were collected to haue bene sent by ship to him into England: which being in Appill next, and not before imbarked for London, was not at this present day here arrived) came the 18. day of February to Bartrike, within the domination and Realme of England, where he was by the Queenes maistries letters and commaundement, honourably receiued, used and entertained by the right honourable lord Wharren, lord Marden of the East marches, with goodly conducting from place to place, as the daily iourneys done ordinarily did lie, in such order, maner and forme, as to a person of such estate appertained: he prosecuting his voiage until the 27. of February, approached the cite of London with thirtie twelve English miles, where hee was receiued with fourescore merchant with chains of gold and goodly apparell, as well in order of men seruants in one uniforme haire, as also in, and upon good horses and geldings, who conducted him to a merchants house four miles from London, receiued there a quantite of golde, velvet and silke, with all furniture thereto requisite, wherewith he made him a riding garment, repoling himselfe that night. The next day being Saturday and the last day of February, he was by the merchants aduenturing for Russia, to the number of one hundred and thirtie persons, and so many of more seruants in one linec as aboute said, conducted towards the Cite of London, where by the way hee had not onely the hunting of the Foxe and such like sports shewed him, but also by the Queenes maistries commaundement was receiued and embraced by the right honourable Viscount Montague, sent by her grace for his entertainment: hee being accompanied with diuers lustie knights, squiers, gentlemen and yeomen to the number of thre hundred horses, led him to the North partes of the Ci-tie of London, where by foure notable merchants richly apparellled, was presented to him a right fair and large gelding richly trapp'd together with a footstool of Dyent crimosin velvet, embroidred with gold laces, all furnished in most glorious fashion, of the present, and gift of the sayde merchants: wherupon, the Ambassadors at instant desire, mounted, riding on the way towards Smithfield barres, the first Wardens of the liberties of the Cite of London. The lord Montague accompanied with all the Aldermen in their scarlet did receive him; and so riding through the Cite of London in the middle betwene the sayd lord Mayor and Viscount Montague, a great number of merchants and notable personages riding before, and a large troupe of seruants and appoynted following, was conducted through the Cite of London (with great admiration and plaudible of the people running plentifully on all sides, and replenishing all streets in such sort as no man without difficultie might passe) into his lodging situate in S. and church streets, where was provided for him two chambers richly hang'd and decked, ouer and aboue the gallant furniture of the whole house, together with an ample and rich ruyboord of plate of all sortes, to furnish and serue him at all meales, and other seruices during his abode in London, which was, as is interpreted, until the thirde day of May: during which time, daily, diuers Aldermen and the greatest personages of the sayd company, did visite him, providing all kind of victuals for his table and his seruants, with all forces of Officers to attend upon him in good sort and condition, as to such an Ambassadors of honour doth, and ought to appertaine.

It is also to be remembered that at his first entrance into his chamber, there was presented unto him on the Queenes maistries behalfe, for a gift and present, and his better furniture in apparell, one rich piece of cloath of silke, a piece of cloath of golde, another piece of cloath of gold rassist with crimosin velvet, a piece of crimosin velvet in g. sine, a piece of purple velvet, a piece of Damaske velvet, a piece of crimosin damaske, which he most thankfully accepted. In this beautifull sogling refreshing and preparing himselfe and his traine with things requisite, hee abode expecting the king's messengers repaire out of Flaunders into England, whose highness attending the one and twenty of March, the same Ambassadors the six and twentieth of March, being the Annunciation our Ladye (the day thirtie moneth hee took his leaue from the Emperour his master) was most honourably brought to the King and Queenes maistries court at Westminster, where accompanied first with the sayd Viscount and other notable personages, and the merchants, hee according to Westminster byodge, was there receiued with five lordes, conducted into a stately chamber, where by the lordes, Chancellour, Treasurer, Physicke seale, Admirall, bishop of Cle and other counsellors, hee was kissed and saluted: and consequently was brought vnto the Kings and Quenes maiesties presence, sitting vnder a stately cloth of honour, the chamber most richly decked and furnished, and most honourably presented. Where, after that hee had deliuered his letters, made his Oration, given two timber of Sables, and the report of the same made both in English and Spanish, in most louing manner embraced, was with much honour and high contentment, in sight of a great confluence of people, lordes and ladies est soones remitted by order to his former lodging, to the which, within two dayes after by assignement of the Kings and Quenes maiesties, repaired, and conferred with him secretly two graine counsellors, that is the lord bishop of Ely, and Sir William Peter Knight, chiefe Secretarie to their highness, who after diuers secret talks and conference, reported to their highness their proceedings, the prouidence, wisdom, and stately behauiour of the sayd Ambassadour, in such sort as was much to their maiesties contentations.

In les que and Articles of a rmitie concluded and confirmed vnder the great seale of England.

Finally, concluding vpon such treaties and articles of amitie, as the letters of the Kings and Quenes maiesties most graciously vnder the great seale of England, to him by the said counsellors deliuered, doth appeare.

The foure and twentieth of Aprill, being the feast of S. George, wherein was celebrated the solemnitie of the Noble order of the Garter at Westminster, the same lord Ambassadour was thither required to haue audience: and therefore conducted from the sayd lodging to the court by the right noble the lordes Talbot and Lumley to their maiesties presence (where after his Oration made, and thanks both giuen and receiued) hee most honourably tooke his leaue with commendations to the Emperour. Which being done, hee was with speciall honour ledde into the Chappell, where before the Kings and Quenes maiesties, in sight of the whole Order of the Garter, was prepared for him a stately seate, wherein, hee accompanied with the Duke of York, the lordes last aboue mentioned, and many other honourable personages, was present at the whole service, in ceremonies which were to him most acceptable: the diuine service ended, he est soones was remitted and reduced to his barge, and so repaired to his lodging, in like order and gratulation of the people vniuersally, as before.

Foure goodly ships of the merchants provided for Russia, 1557.

The time of the yeere halting the profection and departure of the Ambassadour, the merchants having prepared foure goodly and well furnished shippes laden with all kindes of merchandises apte for Russia, the same Ambassadour making provision for such things as him pleased, the same shippes in good order valed doونه the Riuer of Thames, from London to Gravesend, where the same Ambassadour with his trayne and furniture, was imbarcked towards his voyage homeward, which God prosper in all felicitie.

It is also to be remembered, that during the whole abode of the sayde Ambassadour in England, the Agences of the sayde merchants did not onely prosecute and pursue the matter of restitution in Scotland, and caused such things to be laden in an English shippe hired purposely to convey the Ambassadours goods to London, there to be deliuered to him, but also during his abode in London, did both inuite him to the Palace, and diuers worshipfull mens houses, for dining and banquetting him right friendly, shewing vnto him the most notable and commendable sightes of London, as the kings palace and house, the Churches of Westminster and Pauls, the Tower and Guild hall of London, and such like memorabile spectacles. And also the last six and twentie day of Aprill, the sayd merchants assembling themselves together in the house of the Dapers hall of London, exhibited, and gaue vnto the sayde Ambassadour, a notable supper garnished with Musike, Enterludes and bankets: in the which a cup of Wine being drunk to him in the name and lieto of the whole companie, it was signified to him that the whole companie with most liberall and friendly hearts, did franklie giue to him and his, all manner of costs and charges in victuals riding from Scotland to London, during his abode there, and well seeing of safe aboard the ship, requesting him to accept the same in good part, as a testimonie and token of their good hearts, zeale and tendernesse towards him and his countrey.

It is to be considered that of the Bona Speranza, no word nor knowledge was had at this present day, nor yet of the arrivall of the ships or goods from Scotland.

The third of May the Ambassadour departed from London to Grauesend, accompanied with diuers Aldermen and merchants, who in good gard set him aboard the noble ship, the Prima bound to the Fleet, where leaue was taken on both sides and partes after many embraces and diuers farewells not without expelling of teares.

Memorandum, that the first day of May the counsellors, videlicet, the bishop of Ely, and Sir William Peter on the behalfe of the Kings and Quenes maiesties repaying to the lord Ambassadour, ambassadour, did not of great seale of England, in the Kings and Quenes maiesties behalfe, graue also giues to the lordes and ladies est soones remitted by order to his former lodging, to the which, within two dayes after by assignement of the Kings and Quenes maiesties, repaired, and conferred with him secretly two graine counsellors, that is the lord bishop of Ely, and Sir William Peter Knight, chiefe Secretarie to their highness, who after diuers secret talks and conference, reported to their highness their proceedings, the prouidence, wisdom, and stately behauiour of the sayd Ambassadour, in such sort as was much to their maiesties contentations.

Confidentia, & the Philip & Mary, which were not heard of the yeere before.

May.

- 23 Don Sunday the 23. of May, I departed with the Searchlight from Colmogro, the latitude whereof is 64. degrees, 25. minutes, and the variation of the 26 compasse, 5. degrees, 10. minutes from the North to the East.
26 Wednesday we came to the Island called Pozanka, which Island is within four leagues of the barre Berozoua, that sheweth here at an East and by South spoon full fra.
29 Saturday in the morning wee departed from Pozanka, and plied to the barre of Berzoua Gooba, whereupon wee came to an anker at a low water, and sounded the sayd Barre with our two departure, ouer and a first arriuall.

two shelles, and founde in the best vpon the shoalest of the barre, 13. foote water by the rule. It layeth vpon this barre, in spring streames 3. foote water: and an East moone maketh a full sea vpon this barre.

Monday in the morning wee departed from the barre of Berozoua, and plyed along by the shoale in five fadome, untill I had sight of S. Nicholas roade, and then wee cast about to the Northward, and went with a hommoche, which is halfe a mile to the Eastward of Coia Recca, which hommoche and S. Nicholas abbey lye Southsouthwest, and Northnorthwest, and betwene them are 11. leagues. Coia Recca is halfe a mile to the Eastward of Colcaynos. Colcaynos and the middes of the Island called Mondeustoua ostroue, which is thwart of the barre of Berozoua lieth South, and by East, North and by West, and betwene them are 4. leagues, or as you may say from the Shoale part of the barre to Colcaynos, are 3. leagues and a halfe.

Monday at a Northeast and by East sunne, we were thwart of Colcaynos, Dogs nose lieth from Colcaynos Northnorthwest, and betwene them are 8. leagues: and Dogs nose lieth like a Turners head, if you be thwartly on both sides of it: on the low point of Dogs nose there standeth a crosse alone.

June.

From Dogs nose to fore nose, are 3. leagues, North and by West. The 2. day of June I went on shoare 2. miles to the Northward of Dogs nose, and had the latitude of that place in 65. degrees, 47. minutes. It floweth a shoare at this place, at an East moone full sea, and the shippe lay thwart to wende a flood, in the off, at a Southsouthwest moone, so that it is to be vnderstood, that when it is a full sea on the shoare, it is two points to ebbe, be- fore it be a lowe water in the off. The variation of the Compasse at this place is 4. degrees from the North to the East.

This day the Northnorthwest winde put vs backe againe with Dogs nose, where a ship may be thwart of a Shale house in 4. fadome, or 4. fadome and a halfe of water, and haue Landlange by a North and by West winde: which Shale house is halfe a mile to the Southwardes of Dogs nose.

Friday at a Southsouthwest sunne, we departed from this Shale house. It is to be noted that foure miles to the Northwardes of Dogs nose, there growe no trees on the banke by the water side: and the bankes consist of fullers earth.ouer the cliffes there growe some trees: so that Dogs nose is the better to be knowne because it is fullers earth, and the like I haue not seene in all that Country.

A head of Fore nose a league from the shoare, there are 15. fadome betwixt Fore nose and Zolacia, there are 6. leagues, I meane the Southerly part of Fore nose.

Monday I founde the barre of Zolacia, which the Russes tolde me was a good harbor, but in the best of it I found but 4. foote water.

Monday, I had the latitude in 66. degrees, and then was point Pentecost five leagues South of it.

Tuesday I went on lande at Crosse Island, and tooke the latitude, which was 66. degrees 24. minutes.

We being one league Northeast of Crosse Island, I sawe the lande on the Eastside, which I thought to be Cape good fortune, and it was then East Southeast of vs 9. leagues.

Cape grace is 7. leagues and a halfe Northeast from Crosse Island.

There are 2. Islands 5. leagues Northnorthwest from Cape grace, the Southermost of them is a litle long Island almost a mile long, and the Northmost a litle round Island, and they are both hard aboord the shoare.

Cape Race is from the Southermost Island North and by West, and betwene them are two leagues, and from these 9. halfe a league Northnorthwest, there is another point. Betwene which point and Cape Race, the Russes haue a Stanauish or harbor for their Lodges: and to the Westward of the said point, there is a shoale bay.

Three leagues and a halfe to Northwardes of Cape Race, we had the latitude on the 10. day of this month in 67. degrees 10. minutes. Riding within halfe a league of the shoare in this latitude I founde it to be a full sea at a North and by East moone. I had to here the roade, two and thwente fadome, and the tallow which is taken by is full of great blacke shels, and some stones which like two small land conioled together.

From a South sunne that we voyed, the winde being at North and by East, we went to the endant vpon the Am-England.

to the windwards halfe the ebbe, with the shippes head to the Eastwards. And then when we had her head to the Westwards, we founde, and had 22. fadome broken shels, and gray sand; this was sent day was very milke, with frost on the shovows as the milke fell.

11.

Friday in the morning at an East sunne, the milke brake by a litle, the winde being at North and by West a stiff gale, our shovows and ropes our head being covered with frost, and likely to be a Noyme: I thought it good to seeke an harborow, and so plied roome with the Islands which are two leagues to the Southwards of Cape Race, and within these Islands (thanks bee to God) we found harborow for vs. It lieth at these Islands two fadome water: it floweth in the harborow at this place at a Southfourthead moone full sea: and a sea boord it floweth at a South south west moone a full sea. The Russes call this Island, Tri Ostroue.

You may come in betweene the little Island and the great Island, and keepe you in the maine of the Sounde, and if you bozrowe on any side, let it bee on the greater Island, and you shall haue at a lowe water, foure fadome, and thye fadome and a halfe, and thye fadome, until the you be shot so farre in as the narrowest, which is betweene the Nozhermost point of the great Island, and the Southerne point of the maine which is right against it, and then hale to the Northwards with the crosse which standeth in the maine, and you shall haue at a lowe water 10. foute water, and faire sande. And if you be disposed to goe through the Sounde to the Southwards, keepe the Nozthwest shoare abooyde, for on the Island side after you be shotte so farre in as the crosse, it is a shoale of rockes halfe the sound ouer: which rockes doe fall vnto the Southerly part of the great Island, and rather to the Southwards. And if you be constrained to seeke a harborow for Noztherly windes, when you come out of the sea hale in with the Southerly part of the great Island, giuing the Island a faire birch, and as you shoote towarde the maine, you shall finde roome for all Noztherly windes, in foure fadome, five, sixe and seuen fadome, at a lowe water.

Also within this great Island, (if neede bee) you may haue a good place to ground a Shippe in: the great Island is almost a mile long and a quarter of a mile ouer.

17.

This Noyme of Noztherly winde lasted until the 16. of this moneth, and then the winde came Southerly, but we could not get out for Ice. I went on shoare at the crosse, and tooke the latitude, which is 66. degrees, 58. minutes, 30. seconds: the variation of the Compasse 3. degrees and a halfe from the Nozth to the East.

18.

Thursday being faire weather, and the winde at Nozth, wee plied to the winde-wards with sailes and oares: wee Ropped the hood this day thye leagues to the Nozthwards of Cape Race, two miles from the shoare, and had twentie fadome water, faire gray and blacke sande, and broken shels. And when the stake came wee wayed and made abooyde to the shoare-wards, and had within two cables length of the shoare, eigheteen fadomes faire gray and blacke sande: a man may finde roade there for a Nozthwinde, and so to the Westwards.

Two leagues to the Southward of Corpus Christi point, you may haue Land and fange for a Nozth and by Eastwinde, and from that to the Westwardes in 3. fadome almost a mile from shoare, and faire sande, and amongst the sande litle pong small limpers, of such like as growe by on musles: and within two cables length and less of the shoare, are eigheteen fadomes, and the sounding aforesaid, but the pong limpers moze plentifull. It was a full sea where we roade, almost a mile from shoare, at a South and by West moone: two leagues to the Southward of Corpus Christi point is the uttermost lande, which lande and Cape Race lyeth South and half a point to the Westwards, and Nozth and halfe a point to the Eastwards, and betweene them are sixe leagues. Riding this day sixe leagues to the Nozthwards of Cape Race, the winde at Nozth north west, with milke and frost, at noone the sunne appeared through the miste, so that I had the latitude in 67. degrees, 29. minutes.

Sunday we were thwart of Corpus Christi point, two leagues and a halfe from shoare, at noon, where we founde, and had 36. fadoms, and broken cockle shels, with byamite sande, but the broken shels very litte.

22.

Tuesday in the morning wee were shotte a head of Cape gallant, which the Russes call Soanoze. And as we were shotte almost halfe a league betwixt it, and Cape comfort, the winde came up at the Nozthwest, and after to the Nozthwards, so that wee were faine to heare roome to seek a harbour, where we founde good harbour for all windes, and the least 7. fadome water betwixt S. Johns Islands, and the maine.

After that we came to an ancre, wee tooke the latitude, which was 68. degrees 1. minute, after noone, the winde at Nozth with plenty of snowe.

At a West sunne there came abooyde by certayne Lappians in a boate, to the number of thre or foure persons, and amongst them there were two women, and some of the men could speake the wards. And then when we cast our shels, and gray sand; this proved ill.

A little, the winde being at North and covered with frost, and thereby made room for the Islands which these Islands (thanks be to God) is savome water: it floweth in the sea boord it floweth at a South-and, and keepe you in the maine of the greatest Island, and you shall see, and there savome, until the northermost point of the greatest Island, and then hale to the South-leagues to the Southward, where you be shotte so farre in as the sea fall vnto the Southerly part you be constrained to seeke a harbor in the Southerly part of the great Island, you shall finde water sea is full where we roade, al-

Cape Race is South and half

Cape Race, the winde at North in a boate, to the number of fowre of the men could speake the pany of beards of them, to the number of 100. men, besides women and children, but a little from us in the river Iekonga.

They tolde me that they had bene to seeke meate among the rocks, saying, If wee gette no meate, wee eat none. I sawe them eat rocks weebes as hungerly, as a catte doeth grasse when she is hungrie. I sawe them also eat foules egges rawe, and the pong birds also that were in the egges.

I obserued certaine wordes of their language, which I thought good to set downe for their use, that here-

25 Friday in the morning we departed from S. Johns Island to the Westwards thereof a mile from the shoare, we founde, and had 36 fadoms, and oazle sand.

Iuana Creos. Iuana Creos, is from Cape gallant Westnorthwest, and halfe a point to the Northwards, and betweene them is 7 leagues. The point of the Island, which is Cape comfort, lyeth from Iuana Creos, Northwest and by North, and almost the 3. part of a point to the Westwards, and betweene them are 3 leagues.

S. Georges Island. The Eastermost of S. Georges Islands, of 7 Islands, lyeth from Iuana Creos Northwest, and halfe a point to the Northwards, and betweene them are 14 leagues and a halfe. The Westmost of the 7 Islands, is Cape comfort lyeth Northwest, and by North, Southeast, and by South.

Cape Comfort. Under the Southermost Island you shall finde good roade for all Northely winds from the Northwest to the Northeast. From the Southeast part of the 7 Islands, unto the Northwest part of them, are 3 leagues and a halfe.

S. Peters Islands. From the Northwest part of the Islands aforesaide, unto S. Peters Islands, are 11 leagues Northwest.

26 S. Peters Islands rise an indifferent low point, not seeming to be an Island, and as if it had a caille vpon it.

S. Pauls Island. S. Pauls Islands lye from S. Peters Islands Northwest, and to the Westwards, and betweene them are 6 leagues. Within these Islands there is a faire sandie bay, and there may be founde a good roade for Northely winds.

Cape Sower beere. Cape Sower beere lyeth from S. Pauls Islands Northwest, and by West, and betweene them are 5 leagues.

Ridina. Cape comfort, which is the Island of Kildina, lyeth from Cape Sower beere, 6 leagues West Northwest, and it is altogether a bay betweene them seeming many Islands in it.

Cape Bonauenture. From Cape Bonauenture, to Chebe Nauolocke are 10 leagues Northwest, and a litle to the Westwards. Chebe Nauolocke is a faire point, wheron standeth a certaine blacke, like an emperie butt standing a head.

Kegor. From Chebe Nauolocke to Kegor, is 9 leagues and a halfe Northwest, and halfe a point to the Westwards. Kegor riseth as you come from the Eastwards like 2. round homers standing together, and a faire saddle betweene them.

27 It sheweth where we roade this Sunday to the Eastwards of Kegor, at a Southeast and by East moone, a full sea: we roade in 15 fadome water within halfe a mile of the shoare: at a North west Sunne the miste came downe so thicke, that we were faine to come to an ancre within less then a mile of the point that turneth to Doms haff, where wee had 33 fadome, and the sounding like to the ~~stroke~~ of a shales head.

Wardhouse. 28 Sunday at afternoone, we came into the Sound of Wardhouse, although it were very wille. Then I sent a man a shoare to know some newes, and to see whether they could heare any thing of our Shippes.

Which were the World Espranza, the Bona confidencia and the Phillip and spare. Where of the two first were lost. 29 Tuesday I went on shoare, and dined with the Captaines deputie, who made mee great cheere: the Captaine himselfe was not as yet come fro Bergen; they looked for him every hour, and they said that he would bring newes with him.

At a Northwest, and by North sunne, we departed from Wardhouse, toward Colmogro.

30 Wednesday we came to Kegor, where we met with the wind at East Southeast, so that we were faine to goe in to a bay to the Westwards of the point Kegor, where a man may moue in 3. small shippes, that shall not drawe past 11. or 12. foote water, for all times, an East North west winde is the worst. It is a ledge of rocks, that defendeth the Northely winds fro the place where they moare. When we came into the bay we saw there a barke which was of Dronton, and there of foure Norway peaghes, belonging to Northbarn: so when I came a shoare, I met with the Dutchmen, amongst whom was the Boytrab-masters sonne of Dronton, who tolde me that the Phillip and Mary wintered at Dronton, and departed from thence for England in March: and withall he shewed me that the Confidence was lost, and that hee had bought her sailen for his shippe. When the Dutch-men carried mee to their Boorte, and made mee good cheere, where I to the Westwards thereof a mile like 2. round homets standing to of Keger, at a South-east and by like a mile of the Shore: at a North-line to come to an anere which had had 33. fadomes, and the sounding

 Keger, where a man may moue 20 for all winds, an East North-east North-east winds for the place where which was of Dronon, and the when I came a Shore. I met still with one of Dronon, who tolde me that in thence for England in thre at hee had bought her sailes for and made mee good cheere, when I like

like the Lappians chepen of the saide Dutchmen, both silver platters and dishes, spoones, gilt rings, ornaments for girdles of silver and gilt, and certaine things made to hang about the necke, with silver chaines belonging to them.

The Dutchmen bringe hither mightie strong beere, I am certaine that our English double beere would not be liked of the Kerils and Lappians, as long as that would last.

Here I saw the Dutchmen also haue rascie cloch, both blew, red, and saffron, and (as they say) horse colour. And hither they bringe also Deers cases and foxe, both blacke and redde: our English foxe cases are but counterfats vnto them.

They would not let me understand any of their prices, but as I ocherwise understood, they barter 2. load of silver for 100. of stockfish, and 2. loades is a dollet. And the Dutch men told me, that they had made a notable good yeere this present yeere 1557. They tolde mee that they should be faine to goe to Wardhouse with one loading, and lay it on land there, and so come againe and fetch another. The Boyrtowmasters sonne told me, that he would goe to Amsterdam with his loading of stockfish, who gaue me a barrel of strong beere, and brought in aboarde our shippe himselfe.

After this I went among the Russies and Kerils, who offered me fish to sell, and likewise the Lappians desired me to looke vpon their fish. I made them answere, that I had now no wares nor money to barter with them, and said that I came onely to see if I might meete with our English shippes. Then they desired me that I would come thither the next yeere: I said vnto them, if I should come the next yeere, I thinke here would not be fish ynough to serue the Dutchmen and vs also. They answered me, that if more shippes did resort thither, there would more people labour to kill and make fish: and further they said, that some of them came thither a fishing 8. weekes iourney with Deere, which Deere will trauaile more speedily then hoxes will.

As I was thus in talke with the Kerils & Lappians, the Emperour of Russia his deputie (who was there together the tribute of the Lappians) sent for me to come to his tent, who after familiar salutations made me good cheere. He demaunded of me, why none of our shippes came thither. I answered him, because we knew not the place before now, neither yet heard of any faire that was kept there. Then said he, if you will come thither, here would more people resort to kill fish, I thinke it good (said he) that you make a beginning. I tolde him, that by the grace of God the next yeere, our English shippe should come thither.

Because I saw the seruants of the king of Denmarke there also gathering the tribute, I asked Vasilie pheochrouiche the Russic deputie, whether the Denmarks would not be a let to vs, if we should come to this Keger. And he saide, no, they should not: for this lande is my kings, and therefore hee be holde to come hither.

The Kerils and the Lappians solde no fish, until the said deputie had looked vpon it, and had given them leave to sell. I asked him what wares were best for vs to bring thither, and he saide, silver, pearls, cloch, blew, red and greene, Deale, strong beere, wine, pewter, foxe cases, and golde.

The Lappians pay tribute to the Emperour of Russia, to the king of Denmarke, and to the king of Sweden. He tolde me that the Riuer Cola is little more then 20. leagues to the Southward of Keger, where we should haue great plenty of salmon, if come were any thing cheape in Russia: for then yoope men would resort thither to kill salmon.

The Dutchmen tolde me that they had made a good yeere of this, but the Kerils complained of it, because they could not sell all their fish, and that they solde, was as please the Dutchmen, and at their owne price. I asked the Kerils at what price they sold their fish to the Russies, and they said good cheape: we sell 24. silbes for 4. alaines, I thinke they solde little about 20. pence, the 25. silbes this yeere.

The Dutchmen tolde me that the best stockfish is made at Keger. I sawe at Vasilies tent 7. or 8. iavelins, and halfe a dozen of bowes bent, with their budgets of arrowes, and likewise swordes with ocher weapons: Ocherwise I sawe no weapons there.

I was also conueyed to their lodgings, which gathered tribute for the king of Denmarke, where I sawe a paire of bilowes: and I asked whether they were for the Lappians (if neede were), and they said no, but onely for their owne companie if they should chaunce to be vntuly.

The Kerils and the Lappians are not to be trusted, for they will steale as well as the Russies, if they may conveniently come by any thing.

Concerning my voyage, because the winde was scant to goe backe againe to Colmogro, I came to the Eastwards of the point Keger, and sent to land, and baked two batches of bread, in the ovens that the Kerils haue for their owne provision.

Instructions giuen to the Masters and Mariners to be obserued in and about this Fleete, passing this yeere 1557. toward the Bay

10 Item, that the Capitaine by discretion shall from time to time disship any artificer or English seruingman or appentice out of the Primrose into any of the other three shippes, and in lieu of benefite of the companie.

11 Item, that great respect be had to the gunners and rookes roomes, that all danger and perill of powder and fire may be eschewed and auoyded.

12 Item, that singular care & respect be had to the ports of the ship, as well in nauigation as in 13 Special foresight is to be had, that at the Wardhouse no treacherie, inuasion, or other perill of molestation be done or procured to be attempted to our ships by any kings, princes or companies, that do mislike this newe found trade by seas to Russia, or would let and hinder the same, wherof no small doubt hath bene made: which giueth occasion of more circumspection and diligence.

The first voyage made by Master Anthony Ienkinson, from the Citie of London, toward the land of Russia, begonne the twelfth day of Maye, in the yeere, 1557.

It is by the grace of God, the day and yere aboue mentioned, I departed from the said Citie, and the same day at Grauesend embarked my selfe in a good shippe, named the Primrose, being appointed, although vnto my selfe, chiefe captaine of the same, and also of the other three good shippes, to say, the John E-uangelist, the Anne, and the Trinitie, hauing also the conduct of the Emperour of Russia, his ambassadour, named Osep Nepea Gregorewich, who passed with his companie in the said Primrose. And thus our foure tall shippes being well appointed, as well in men and victuals, as other necessarie furniture, the said twelfth day of the moneth of Maye, we heyes our anchors, and departed from the said Grauesende, in the after noone, and plyng toward the Thames, the wind being Easterly, and faire weather, the 13. day we came a ground with the Primrose, vpon a sand called the Blarke talle, where we stode fast vntill the 14. day in the morning, and then God be praised, she came off: and that day we plyed downe as farre as out Lane Holland, and there came to an anker, the wind being Easterly, and there remained vntill the 20. day: then we heyes and went out at Goldmonger gate, and from thence in at Balsey Slawe, and in into Orwel wandes, where we came to an anker: but as we came out at the said Goldmonger gate, the Trinitie came on ground on certaine rockes, that lye to the Northward of the said gate, and was like to be bilged and lost. But by the aide of God, at the last she came off againe, being very leake: and the 21. day the Primrose remaining at an anker in the wandes, the other three shippes bare into Orwel hauen, where I caused the said Trinitie to be grounded, searched, and repaired. So we remained in the said hauen, vntill the 28. day: and then the winde being westerly, the three shippes that were in the hauen, heyes and came forth, and in comynge forth, the the John Evangelist came on ground upon a sand, called the Andros, where she remained one tide, and the next full sea she came off againe, without any great hurt, God be praised,

The 29. day in the morning, all foure ships were in the Islands, and that tide went as fast as Orfordcote, where we came to an anchor, because the wind was northerly: And about five of the clocke at night, the wind beere to the South-west, and we weped anchor, and bare cleare of the reef, and then set our course north east, and by north, untill midnight, being then cleare of Yarmouth sands. Then we winded North and by West, and North north-west, untill the first of June at noone, then it waied calme, and continued so, untill the second day at noone: then the winde came at North-west, with a tempest, and much raine, and we lay close by, and caped North North-east, and North-east, and by North, as the winde shifted, and so continued untill the third day at noone: then the winde beere Westly againe, and we went North our right course, and so continued our way untill the fourth day, at three of the clocke in the afternoone, at which time the winde beere to the North-west againe, and blewe a fresh gale, and so continued untill the seventh day in the morning, we lying with all our shippes close by, and capping to the Northwards; and then the winde came more Northerly, we were forced to put roome to the coast of England againe, and fell our- thwarte Howe castel, but went not into the haven, & so plyed upon the coast the eight day & the ninth.

The tenth day, the winde came to the North North-west, and we were to beare roome to Flamborow head, where we came to an anchor, and there remained untill the seuenteenth day. Then the winde came fair, and we weped, and set our course North and by East, and so continued the same with a meary winde, untill the 21. at noone, at which time we tooke the Sunne, and had the latitude in 60. degrees. Then we shifted our course, and went North North-east, and North east, and by north, untill the 25. day. Then we discovered certaine Islands, called Heilick Islands, lying from us north-east, being in the latitude of 66. degrees, 40. minutes. Then we went north, and by West, because we would not come too nigh the land, and running that course 4. houres, we discovered, and had sight of Rost Islands, lying to the maine land of Finmarke. Here the Sunne continueth in sight above the horizon, almost 2. moneths together, day and night. Thus continuing our course along the coast of Norway, and Finland, the 27. day we tooke the Sunne, being as far shot as Loofoote, and had the latitude in 69. degrees. And the same day in the afternoone appeared over our heads a raine bowe, like a semicircle, with both ends upward. Note that there is betwixt the said Rost Islands, and Loofoote, a whirle poole, called Malestrand, which from halfe ebbe, untill halfe flood, maketh such a terrible noise, that it shaketh the rings in the doores of the inhabitants of the said Islands, ten miles off. Also if there commeth any Whale within the current of the same, they make a pitifull cry. Moreover, if great trees be carried into it by force of streames, & after with the ebbe be cast out againe, the ends & boughes of them have bene so beaten, that they are like the stalkes of hemp that is husht. Note, that all the coast of Finmarke is high mountains, and hills, being covered all the yeere with snowe. And hard about the shoare of this coast, there is 100. or 150. fadoms of water in depth. Thus proceeding and sailing forward, we fell with an Island, called Zenam, being in latitude of 70. degrees. About this Island, we saw many Whales, very monstrous, about our shippes, some by estimation of 60. foote long: and being the impending time, they roared and cried terribly. From thence we fell with an Island, called Kettelwicke. This coast from Rost unto Loofoote, lieth north & south, and from Loofoote to Zenam, north-east & south-west, and from Zenam to Kettelwicke, east north-east, & west south-west. From the said Kettelwicke we sailed east & by north 10. leagues, & fell with a land, called Inger sound, where we stither, being becalmed, & tooke great plenty of Cods. Thus plying along the coast, we fell with a Cape, called the North Cape, which is the northermost land that we passe in our voyage to S. Nicholas, and is in the latitude of 71. degrees, & 10. minutes, and is from Inger sound East, and to the northwards 15. leagues. And being at this North Cape the 2. day of July, we had the sunne at north 4. degrees above the Horizon. The 3. day we came to Wardhouse, having such mists that we could not see the land. This Wardhouse is a Cattle standing in an Island 2. miles from the maine of Finland, subject to the king of Denmarke, & the Eastermost land that he hath. There are 2. other Islands next adjoining unto that, whereon the Cattle of Wardhouse standeth. The inhabitants of those 3. Islands live onely by fishing, & make much Stockfish, which they dry with frost: their most feeding is fish-bread, and drinke they have none, but such as is brought them from other places. They have small hope of cattell, which are also few with us. From Wardhouse we sailed south fourteenth leagues, & fell with a Cape of land called Keger, the northermost part of the land of Lappia. And betwixt Wardhouse, & the said Cape, is a great Bay, called Dommes haff, in the south part whereof is a Monastrie of Monkens, of the Russes religion, called Peechinchow. Thus proceeding forward, and sailing along the coast of the same land of Lappia, following South-east, the tenth day, though great mists and dar knes, we lost the companie of the other three shippes, and met not with them againe, untill the 7. day, when we fell with a Cape of headland, called Succinose, which is the entering into the Bay of S. Nicholas. At this Cape lieth a great Stone, to the which the barks that passe thereby, were wont to make offerings of butter, meale, and other victuals, thinking that unless they did so, their barks or vessels shoulde there perish, as it hath bene oftentimes seen: and there it is very darke & mistie. Note, that the 6. day we passed by the place where Sir Hugh Willoughbie, with all his companie perished, which is called Arzina reca, that is to say, the river Arzina. The land of Lappia is an high land, having Snow lying on it commonly all the yere. The people of the Countrey are halfe Gentiles: they lue in the summer time neere the Sea Shore, and use to take fish, of the which they make bread, and in the winter they remove up into the Countrey into the woods, where they use hunting, and kill Deere, Beares, Woolues, Foxes, and other beastes, with whose flesh they be nourished, and with their skimes apparelled in such strange fashion, that there is nothing seeme of them bare, but their eyes. They have none other habitation, but onely in tents, removing from place to place, according to the season of the yere.

 They know no arte nor facultie, but onely shooting, which they exercise daily, as well men, as women, and kill such beastes as strue them for their foode. Thus proceeding along the coast, from Succinose aloft, the 9. day of July, we came to Cape Grace, being in the latitude of 66. degrees, and 45. minutes, and is at the entering in of the Bay of S. Nicholas. About this land, there is 20. or 30. fadoms water, and sundry grounds good to anker in. The current at this Cape runneth South-west, and North-east. From this Cape we proceeded along, untill we came to Croffe Island, which is seven leagues from the said Cape South-west: and from this Island, we ste over to the other side of the Baye, and went south south-west, and fell with an headland, called Socrnose, which is from the said Island 25. leagues. The entering of this Baye from Croffe Island to the nearest land on the other side is seven leagues our. From Socrnose proceeding forward the twelfth day of the said month of July, all our four shippes arrived in safetie at the roabe of Saint Nicholas, in the land of Russia, where we anchored, and had sapled from London unto the sayde roabe seven hundred and fiftie leagues. The Russian Ambassadour and his companie with great joy gotte to shope, and our shippes here forthwith discharged themselves: and being taken againe, and having a faire winde, departed towarde England the first of August. The third of the sayde month I with other of my companie came unto the cite of Colmogro, being an hundred verles from the Bay of Saint Nicholas, and in the latitude of 64. degrees, 25. minutes. I carried at the sayd Colmogro untill the fiftenth day: and then I departed in a litle boate by the great river of Dwina, which runneth very swiftly, and the selfe same day passed by the mouth of a river called Pinego, leaving it on our left hand betwene verles from Colmogro. On both sides of the mouth of this river Pinego is high land, great rocks of Alabastr, great woods, and Pyne-aples lying along within the ground, which by report have lyeu there since Noes flood. And thus proceeding forward the nineteenth day in the morning, I came into a towne called Ycimps, an hundred verles from Colmogro. All this way along they make much tarre, pitch and ashes of Aspen trees. From thence I came to a place called Vltiug, an ancient cite the last day of August. At this cite meete two rivers: the one called Iug, and the other Succana, both which fall into the aforesaid river of Dwina. The river of Iug hath his spring in the land of the Tartars called Chereimich, toping to the countrey of Permia: and Succana hath his head from a lake not farre from the cite of Vologhda. Thus departing from Vltiug, & passing by the river Succana, we came to a towne called Toerna. About this place the water is very shallow, and stonie, & trouble some for Barks and boates of that countrey, which they call Nassades, and Dolneckes, to passe the way: wherein marchandise are transported from the aforesaid Colmogro to the cite of Vo-loghda. These vessels called Nassades, are very long builded, hwoade made, and close above, flate bottoned, and have not above foure foote water, and will carrie two hundred tunnes: they have none yron appertaining to them but all of timber, and when the winde ferueth, they are made to sape. Other wise they have many men, some to hale and dyane by the neckes with long small ropes made fast to the fatter boates, and some set with long poles. There are many of these Barks upon the river of Dwina: And the most part of them be longerth unto the cite of Vologhda: for there dwell many marchants, and they occupie the sayde boates with carrying of sale from the Sea Shore unto the sayde Vologhda. The twentieth of September I came unto Vologhda, which is a great cite, and the river passeth through the midst of the same. The houses are builded with wood of f fire trees, joyned one within another, and round without: the houses are foure square without any yron or stone work, covered with birch Barkes, and wood over the same: Their Churches are all of wood, two for every parish, one to be heared for Winter, and the other for Sommer.

On the toppes of their houses they laye much earth, for feare of burning: for they are here plagued with fire. This Vologhda is in 59. degrees, 11. minutes, and is from Colmogro, 1000. versts.

Good counsell for travellers.

All the way I neuer came in house, but lodged in the wilderness, by the rivers side, and carried provision for the way. And he that will travell those waies, must carry with him an hatchet, a tinder boxe, and a kettle, to make fire, and seeke meate, when he hath it: for there is small succour in those parts, unless it be in towne.

December,

The first day of December, I departed from Vologhda, in posse in a sled, as the manner is in Winter. And the way to Moscua is as followeth. From Vologhda to Commelski, 27. versts, to Olmor 25. versts, to Teloytske, 20. versts, to Vo 30. versts, to Volhansko, 30. versts, then to Yerallau, 30. versts, which standeth upon the great riuer Volga, so to Rollov, 50. versts, then to Rogarin, 30. versts, so to Perallau, 10. versts, which is a great towne, standing hard by a faire lake. From thence to Dowbnaye, 30. versts, so to Godoroke, 30. versts, so to Owchay, 30. versts, and last to the Musko, 25. versts, where I arrived the first day of December.

There are 14. posts, called Yannes, betwene Vologhda, and Musko, which are accomped 500. versts asunder.

The 10. day of December, I was sent for to the Emperours Castle, by the saide Emperour, and delivered my letters vnto the Secretarie, who talked with me of diuers matters, by the commandement of the Emperour. And after that my letters were translated, I was answered that I was welcome, and that the Emperour would giue me that I desired.

The 25. day, being the day of the natiuitie, I came into the Emperours presence, and kisse his hande, who sat aloft in a goodly chaire of estate, hauing on his heade a crowne most richly bekket, and a staffe of golde in his hande, all apparelled with golde, and garnished with precious stones.

There sat distant from him about two partes his brother, and next vnto him a boye of such peeres of age, who was inheritor to the Emperour of Casan, conquered by this Emperour 8. yeeres past. Then sat his nobilitie round about him, richly apparelled with golde, and stone. And after I had done obeisance to the Emperour, he with his owne mouth calling me by my name, bade me to dinner, and so I departed to my lodging, till dinner time, which was at fixe of the clocke, by candle light.

The Emperour dined in a faire great Hall, in the middell whereof was a pillar four square, very artificially made, about which were diuers tables set, and at the hypermost part of the Hall, sat the Emperour himselfe, & at his table sat his brother, his Uncles sonne, the Spersopolitane, the young Emperour of Casan, and diuers of his noble men, all of one side. There were diuers Ambassadors, & other strangers, as well Christians, as Heathens, diuersly apparelled, to the number of 600. men, which dined in the said hal, besides 2000. Tartars, men of war, which were newly come to render themselves to the Emperour, and were appointed to serue him in his warres, against the Lysslanders, but they dined in other hals. I was set at a litle table, hauing no strange with me, directly before the Emperours face. Being thus set, and placed, the Emperour sent me diuers boles of wine, and meade, & many dishes of meate from his owne hand, which were brought me by a Duke, and my table serued all in golde, and siluer, and so like wise on other tables, there were set boles of golde, set with stone, worth by estimation 400. pounds sterling one cup, besides the plate which serued the tables.

There was also a Cupboard of plate, most sumptuous, and rich, which was not used: among the which, was a peece of golde, of two partes long, wrought in the toppe with Towers, and Dragons heades, also diuers barrels of golde, and siluer, with Castles on the bunges, richly, and artificially made. The Emperour, and all the Hall throughout, was serued with Dukets: and when dinner was ended, the Emperour called mee by name, and gaue mee drinke with his owne hande, and so I departed to my lodging.

Note, that when the Emperour drinkech, all the companie stande by, and at every time, he drinkech or tasteth of a sibe of meate, he blessing himselfe. Many other things I sawe that day, not here noted.

his sones, & costly surtes, with a crowne upon his head, of the Tartarian fashion, went to the Church in procession, with the Metropolitan, and diuers bishops, and priests. That day I was before the Emperour again, in Russe apparel, and the Emperour asked if that were not I, and his Chancelor answered yea. Then he bade me to dinner: then came he out of the Church, and went with the procession upon the river, being all frozen, and there standing bare headed, with all his Nobles, there was a hole made in the ice, and the Metropolitan halloved the water with great solemnitie, and seruice, and did cast of the said water upon the Emperours sone, and the Nobilitie. That done, the people with great thumping filled pots of the said water, to carry home to their houses, and diuers children were shoven in, and sicke people, and plucked out quickly againe, and diuers Tartars christened: all which the Emperour beheld. Also there were brought the Emperours best horses, to drinke at the said halloved water. All this being ended, he returned to his palace againe, and went to dinner by candle light, and sat in a wooden house, very fairely gilt. There dined in the place, aboue 300. strangers, and I sat alone as I did before, directly before the Emperour, and had my meat, bread, and drinke sent me from the Emperour.

The citie of Musko is great, the houses for the most part of wood, and some of stone, with windows of yon, which serue for summer time. There are many faire Churches of stone, but moze of wood, which are made hot in the winter time. The Emperours lodging is in a faire, and large castle, welled foure square of bricke, high, and thicke, situated vpon a hill, two miles about, and the river on the South-west side of it, and is hath 16. gates in the walls, and as many bulwarks. His palace is separated from the rest of the Castle, by a long wall going north and south, to the river side. In his palace are Churches, some of stone, and some of wood, with round towers, fairely gilted. In the Church doores, and within the Churches, are images of golde: the chiefe markets for all things, are within the faide Castle, and for sundry things, sundry markets, and euery science by it self. Also in the winter there is a great market without the Castle, vpon the river being frozen, and there is sold corne, earthen pots, tubs, sleds, &c. The Castle is in circuite 2900. paces.

The countie is full of marsh ground, and plaine, in woods and rivers abundant, but it bringeth forth good plenty of corne. This Emperour is of great power: for he hath conquered much, as well the Lyflanders, Poles, Lettos, and Swethens, as also of the Tartars, and Gentiles, called Samoydes, hauing thereby much enlarged his dominions. He keepeth his people in great subiection: all matters passe his iudgement, be they neuer so small. The lawe is sharpe for all offenders.

The Metropolitan dealeth in matters of religion, as himselfe liueth, whome the Emperour greatly honoureth. They vse the ceremonies, and orders of the Greeke Church. They worship many images, painted on tables, and specially the image of S. Nicholas. Their Priests be married, but their wives being dead, they may not marrie the second time, and so become Spouzes, whereof there are a great number in the land.

They haue foure Lentis in the yere, and the weeke before Wholside, they call the Winter weeke, &c.

They haue many sortes of meates and drinkes, when they banquet, and delight in eating of grasse meates, and stinking fishe. Before they drinke, they vse to blowe in the cup: their greatest kindness is in drin king: they are great talkers, & liers, without any faith or trust in their words, flatters, and dissimblers. The women be there very obedient to their husbands, and are kept straight from going abroad, but at some seasons.

As my being there, I heard of men, and women, that drunke away their children, and all their goods, at the Emperours tauerne, and not being able to pay, hauing impaired himselfe, the Tauerne bringeth him out to the high way, and beates him vpon the legges: then they that pass by, knowing the cause, and hauing peraduenture compassion vpon him, giueth the moule, and so he is ransomed.

In every good towne, there is a drunken Tauerne, called a Cursemay, which the Emperour sometime leaueh out to farms, & sometimes bestoweth for a yere or two on some Duke or Gentleman, in recompence of his seruice: and for that time he is Lord of all the Towne, robbing and spoiling, and doing what pleaseth him: and then he being growen ricke, is taken by the Emperour, and sent to the warres againe, where he shall spend all that which he hath gotten by all meanes: so that the Emperour in his warres is little charged, but all the burden lieth vpon the poore people.

They vse tables made of wood and tinnes, with the tree gilded w darsafke wood, and the seats covered with cloth, sometimes of golde, and the rest Saphian leather, well sturched. They vse little dynners at their table bowes, by the sound whereof, their horses vse to runne more swiftly.

The Russe is apparelled in this manner: his upper garment is of cloth of golde, silke, or cloth, long, to come to the foot, and buttoned with great buttons of silver, or els laces of silke, set on with brooches, byooches, the sleeves thereof very long, which he weareth on his arme, ruffed by. Under that he hath another long garment, buttoned with silke buttons, with a high collar standing up of some colour, and that garment is made straight. Then his shirt is very fine, and wrought with red silke, or some gold, with a collar of pearle. Under his shirt he hath linnen breeches, upon his legges, a paire of hose without feet, & his bootes of red or yellow leather. On his head he weareth a white Colepecke, with buttons of silver, gold, pearle, or none, and under it a blacke Foxe cap, turned by very broad.

When he rideth on horse backe to the warres, or any journey, he hath a sword of the Turkish fashion, and his bowe and arrowes of the same manner. In the colde he weareth no weapon, but one or two or three paire of knives, having the hatts of the tooth of a fish, called the Horse.

In the Winter time, the people trauell with sleds, in Colvne and Countrey, the way being hard, and smooth with snow: the waters and riuers are all frozen, and one horse with a sled, will carry a man upon it 400. miles, in three daies: but in the Summer time, the way is deepe with mire, and traueilling is very ill.

The Russe, if he be a man of any abilitie, neuer goeth out of his house in the Winter, but upon his sled, and in Summer upon his horse: and in his sled he lies upon a carpet, or a white Beares skinne: the sled is drawn with a horse well decked, with many Foxes and Woodues tailed at his necke, & is conducted by a little boy upon his backe: his seruants stand upon the tail of the sled, &c.

The voyage, wherein Osepp Napea the Moscouite Ambassadour, returned home into his Countrey with his entertainment at his arriuall, at Colmogro: and a large description of the manners of the Countrey.

Twelth of Maye, in the yeere of our Lorde, 1567. there departed from Grauesende, foure good shippes well appointed for Marchants, which were presently bound into the Baye of S. Nicholas in Russia, with which shippes was transported, or carried home, one Osepp Gregoriwiche Napea, who had sent Messenger from the Emperour, and Great Duke of Moscouia. The four shippes were these, whose names followe, viz.

The Primerose Admirall,

The John Euangelist Admirall,

The Anne, and the Trinitie Attendants.

The 13. of July, the foresaide foure shippes came to an anchor in the Baye of S. Nicholas, before an Abbey, called the Abbey of S. Nicholas, whereas the saide Messenger, Osepp Gregoriwiche Napea, went a shore, and as many English men as came to serue the Emperour, trained with him at the Abbey for the space of five daies, until he had gotten all his chings a shore, and laden the same in Barkes, to goe by the riuer Dwina, vnto Vologhda, which is by water 1000. verstes, and euery verste is about three quarters of an English mile.

These beets in Russia, are all for the most part of beets alone.

The 30. of July, we departed from S. Nicholas, and the 24. of the same, we came to Colmogro, where we remained eight daies: and the saide Messenger was there of all his acquaintance welcommed home, and had presents innumerable sent vnto him, but it was nothing but meate and drinke. Some sent white bread, some rye bread, and some buttered bread and pancakes, beefe, mutton, bacon, egges, butter, fishes, swannes, geese, ducks, hennes, and all manner of victuals, both fish, and flesh, in the best manner, that the rude people could deuise: for among them, these presents are highly esteemed.

The 29. of July, we departed from Colmogro, and the 14. of August we came to Vlioug, where we remained one day, and changed our barkes, or boates.

The 27. of August, we came to Vologhda, where we remained foure daies, loading the barkes, and lading our cheders and chings in small waggons, with one horse in a peere, which in their tongue are called Telegos, and with these Telegoes, they carried our stuffe from Vologhda vnto the Musko, which is 700. verstes: and we were upon the same way 24. daies: for we went no faster then the Telegoes.

The cities of Boghara.

There are three great townes betwene the Musko, and Vologhda, that is to say, Yrehsae, Rostae, & Pereslaue. Upon one side of Yrehsaue, runneth a famous riuer, which is called Volga. It runneth into the Caspian sea, and it deuiderh it selfe, before it come into the Mare Caspian, in 50. parts, or more, and nere vnto the same sea, there stands a great Citie, called Boghara, the inhabitants of the which, are called by the same name.

Spices,

buy in Siberia comming towards the Mosko, the said people are of the sect of Phahom.

The 12. of September we came vnto the citie of Mosko, where we were brought by Napea, <sup>They arrive</sup> and two of the Emperours gentlemen vnto a large house, where euery one of vs had his chamber <sup>at Mosko.</sup> appointed.

The 14. of September we were commanded to come vnto the Emperour, and immediately after our comming we were brought into his presence, vnto whom each of vs did his dutie accordingly, and with his right hand, his maiestie sitting in his chaire of estate, with his crowne on his head, and a staffe of goldsmiths worke in his left hand well garnished with rich and costly stones, and when we had all kised his hand and done our duties, his maiestie did declare by his interpreter that we were all welcome vnto him, and vnto his countrey, and thereupon tolled vs to dine with him: that day we gave thanks vnto his maiestie, and so departed vntill the dinner was ready.

When dinner time approached, we were brought againe into the Emperours dining chamber, where we were set on one side of a table that stood ouer against the Emperours table, to the ende that he might well behold vs all: and when we came into the foze said chamber, we found there rearrested their tables following.

First at the upper end of one table were set the Emperour his maiestie, his brother, and the Em-perour of Cassan, which is prisoner. About two yardes lower sate the Emperour of Cassan his son, being a child of five yeres of age, and beneath him sate the most part of the Emperours noble men.

And at another table neere vnto the Emperours table, there was set a monke all alone, which was in all points as well serued as the Emperour. At another table sate another kind of people called Chirkalles, which the Emperour entertained for men of warre to serue against his enemies. Of which people one of their countrey, I will hereafter make mention.

All the tables aforesaid were couered onely with salt and bread, and after that we had streen a white, the Emperour sent vnto euery one of vs a peece of bread, which were given, and deliuered vnto euery man seuerally by these words: The Emperour and great Duke giueth thee bread this day, and in like manner thye or foure times before dinner was ended, hee sent vnto euery man meade, which was giuen by these words. The Emperour and great Duke giueth thee to drinke.
All the tables aforesaid were serued in vessels of pure and fine golde, as well basons and chens, platters, dishes and saucers, as also of great pots, with an innumerable sort of small drinking potes of diuers fashions, whereof a great number were set with stone. As for costly meates I haue many times serued better: but for change of wines, and diuers sortes of meads, it was won-derfull: for there was not left at any time so much voyd roume on the table, that one cuppe more might haue bene set, and as farre as I could perceiue, all the rest were in the like manner serued.

In the dinner time there came in the Singers which stood in the midst of the chamber, and their faces towards the Emperour, who sang there before dinner was ended thye seuerall times, whose songs of votes delighted our eares little or nothing.

The Emperour neuer putteth morsell of meate in his mouth, but he first blessed it himselfe, and in like manner as often as he drinketh, for after his manner he is very religious, and he esteemeth his religion precious above his noble men.

This dinner continued about the space of five houers, which being ended, and the tables taken up, we came into the midst of the chamber, where we did reuerence vnto the Emperours maiestie, and then he deliuered vnto euery one of vs with his owne handes a cup of mead, which when euery man had receiued and drunke a quantitie thereof, we were licenced to depart, and so ended that dinner. And because the Emperour would haue vs to be merry, hee sent to our lodging the same Cu- ning, barrels of mead of sundry sortes, of the quantitie in all of one hoghead.

The 16. day of September the Emperour sent home vnto our lodging for euery of vs a Carpet horse to ride from place to place as we had occasion, for that the streets of Mosko are very narrowe and mirie in the Summer.

The 18. of September there were giuen vnto master Shandeth doctor in Physike, and the rest of our men of our occupations, severall furred gounes of branches befox and golde, and some of red Damask, of which master Doctors gowne was furred with Shables, and the rest were furred some with white Ermine, and some with gray squirrel, and all faced and edged round about with blacke beauer.

The 1. of October in the morning we were commanded to come vnto the Emperours court, & whil-le we came thither, we were brought vnto the Emperour vnto whome we did our duties accordingly, when upon he tolled vs to dine with him that day, & so with thanks vnto his maiestie, we departed vntill dinner time, at which time we came and found the tables covered with bread and salt as at the first: and after that we were all set upon one side of the table, the Emperours maieitie according to his accustomed maner sent vnto euery man of vs a peece of bread by some of the Dukes which attended on his highnesse.

And whereas the 14. of September we were serued in vessels of gold, we were now serued in vessels of silver, and yet not so abundantly as was the first of gold: they brought drinke vnto the table in silver beles which contained at the least five gallons a peece, and euery man had a small silver cuppe to drinke in, and another to dip of to take his drinke out of the great boll withall: the dinner being ended, the Emperour gaue vnto euery one of vs a cup with mead, which when we had receiued, we gaue thanks and departed.

Howeuer, whensoeuer the Emperours pleasure is that any stranger shall dine with him, hee doth send for them in the morning, and when they come before him, hee with his owne mouth biddeth them to dinner, and this order he alwayes obserueth.

The 10. of October the Emperour gaue vnto Ph. Scamoth 70. rubbles in money, and to the rest of our men of occupations, 30. rubbles a peece.

The 3. of Nouember we dined againe with the Emperour, where we were serued as before.

The 6. of December being S. Nicholas day, wee dined againe at the Emperours, for that is one of the principall feasts which the Moscowites hold: we were serued in silver vessels, and spones in all points as before, and it was past 7. of the clocke at night before dinner was ended.

long dinners.

The Emperours maieitie vseth euery yeere in the month of December, to haue all his ordinance that is in the cite of Mosko carried into the fields which is without the suburbs of the cite, and there to haue it planted and bent vpon two houses of Wood filled with bin which, each a gainst which two houses, there were two faire white markes set vp, at which markes they discharge all their ordinance, to the ende the Emperour may see what his Gunners can doe. They haue faire ordinance of blasse of all sortes, balles, maultrons, minions, sakers, culuerings, rammes double and single, ballistikes long and large, they haue five great pieres whose shot is a yard or more, which shot a man may easilly discernie as they see: they haue also a great many of moxer peeces or pooguns, out of which pieres they shoot wild fire.

in pretty triumph.

The 12. of December the Emperours maieitie and all his nobilitie came into the field on horsebacke, in most goodly order, hauing very fine Perimers & Turkie horses garnished with gold & silver abundantly. The Emperours maieitie hauing on him a gorro of rich tulle, & a cap of feathers on his head, set not only with pearles, but also with a great number of rich and costly stones, his noble men were all in gorroes of cloth of gold, which was ride before him in good order by 3. & 3. and before them there went 5000. barquebuzers, which went by 5. and 5. in a ranke in very good order, euery of them carrying his gunne vpon his left shoulder, and his march in his right hand, and in this order they marched into the field where as the foze and ordinance was planted.

And before the Emperours maieitie came into the field, there was a certaine stage made of small poles which was a quarter of a mile long, and about three foye paces off from the stage of poles were certaine pieces of ice of two foote thicke, and five foote high set vp, which ranke of ice was as long as the stage of poles, and as soone as the Emperours maieitie came into the field, the barquebuzers went vpon the stage of poles where they setled themselves in order. And when the Emperours maieitie was setled where he would be, and where he might see all the ordinance discharged and shot of the barquebuzers began to shoot of at the banke of ice, as though it had been in any skermish of battel, who ceased not shooting, until they had beaten all the ice flat on the ground.

After the barquebuzers they shot of their wild fire vp into the aire, which was a goodly sight to behold. And after this, they began to discharge the small pieces of blasse, beginning with the smallest and so orderly bigger and bigger, until the last and biggest. When they had shot them all of, they began to charge them againe, and so shot them all of 3. times after the first order, beginning with the smallest, and ending with the greatest. And note that before they had ended their shooting, the 2. house a that they shot vnto, were beaten in pieces, and yet they were very strongly made of Wood and filled with earth, being at the least 30. foote thicke. This triumph being ended, the Emperour departed and rode home in the same order that he came forth into the field. The ordinance is discharged euery yeere in the month of December, according to the order before mentioned.

On Christmas day we were all bidden to dine with the Emperours maieitie, where for us, meat and drinke, we were serued as at other times before: but for goodly and rich place, we were set in the like of so much before. There dined that day in the Emperours presence, about 500. strangers, and two hundred Russes, and all they were serued in vessels of gold, and that as much as could stand one by another vpon the tables. Besides this there were foure rapsoops garnished with goodly through the cite of Moskouia, after this maner.

First, they make a square hole in the ice about 3. fadoms large euery way, which is trimmed a bout the sides and edges with white hoopcs, Then about 9. of the clocke they come out of the church with procession towards the riuer in this wise.

First and foremost there goe certaine yong men with Waxe tapers burning, and one carrying a great lantern: then follow certaine baimers, then the crosse, then the images of our Ladi-e, of S. Nicholas, and of other Saints, which images men carrie vpon their shoulders: after the images follow certaine pyeists to the number of 100. more: after them the Metropolitan who is betwene two pyeists, and after the Metropolitan came the Emperour with his crowne vpon his head, and after his maeticke all his noble men orderly. Thus they followe the procession vnto the water, & when they came vnto the hole that was made, the pyeists set themselves in order round about it. And at one side of the same poole there was a scaffold of hoopcs made, vpon which stood a faire chaire in which the Metropolitan was set, but the Emperours maeticke stood vpon the ice.

After this the pyeists began to sing, to blisse and to senie, and did their seruice, and so by that time that they had done, the water was holy, which being sanctified, the Metropolitan toke a litle thereof in his handes, and call it on the Emperour, likewise vpon certaine of the Dukes, and then they returned againe to the church with the pyeists that saie about the water: but y<sup>e</sup> pyeist that there was about the water when the Emperour was gone, was wonderful to behold, for there came about 5000. pots to be filled of that water: for that Spouse which hath no part of that water, thinks himselfe unhappy.

And very many went naked into the water, both men and women and children: after the p<sup>r</sup>ese was a litle gone, the Emperours Tenets and hoyses were brought to drinke of the same water, and likewise many other men brought their hoyses thither to drinke, and by that means they make their hoyses as holy as themselves.

All these ceremonies being ended, we went to the Emperour to dinner, where we were serued in vessels of silver, and in all other points as we had bene before time.

The Russes begin their Lent alwaies 8. weekes before Easter: the first weeke they eate egges, milk, cheere & butter, and make great cheare with pancakes and such other things, one friend visiting another, & from the same Sunday until our Shyoflunday, there are but few Russes sober, but they are drunke day by day, and it is accounted for no reproch or shame among them.

The next weeke being our first weeke of Lent, or our cleansing weeke, beginning our Shyoflunday, they make and keepe a great fast. It is reported, and the people doe verily beleue, that the Metropolitan neether eatech no drinke any maner of thing for the space of seuen dayes, and they say that there are many religious men which do the like.

The Emperours maeticke eatech but one morsell of bread, and drinkech but one draught of drinke once in the day during that weeke, and all men that are of any reputation come not out of their houses during that time, so that the streets are almost void of company, sauing a few poore folkes which wander to and fro. The other six weeke they keepe as we do ours, but not one of them will eate either butter, cheere, egges or milke.

On Palme Sunday they haue a very solemne procession in this maner following.

First, they haue a tree of a good bignesse which is made fast vpon two trees, as though it were growing there, and it is banded with apples, raisins, figs and dates, and with many other frutes abundantly. In the midst of the same tree stand 7. hoyses in white vestures, which sing in the tree before the procession: after this there followed certaine yong men with waxe tapers in their hands burning, and a great lantern that all the light should not goe out: after them followed two with long baimers, and 6. with round plates set vpon long staves: the plates were of copper very full of holes and thimber then followed 6. carrying painted images vpon their shoulders, after the images follow certaine pyeists to the number of 100. more, with goodly vestures, where of 10. or 12. are of white waxe, set and imbrodered round about with faire and orient pearles, as great as pease, and among them certaine Sophites and other stones. After them followed the one halfe of the Empeours noble men: then commeth the Emperours maeticke and the Metropolitan, after this maner.

First there is a horse covered with white linnen cloth down to the ground, his eares being made long with the same cloth like to an asses eares. Vpon this horse the Metropolitan sitteth sitting the a woman in his lappe lieth a faire booke, with a crucifix of Goldsmiths worke vpon the cover, which he holdeth fast with his left hand, and in his right hand he hath a crosse of gold, with which crosse he ceaseth not to bless the people as he rideth.

There are to the number of 30. men which spread abroad their garments before the horse, and as soone as the horse is past ouer any of them, they take them vp againe and run before, and spread them againe, so that the horse doth alway go on some of them. They which spread the garments are all pyests somes, and for their labours, the Emperour giueth vnto them new garments.

One of the Emperours noble men leadeth the horse by the head, but the Emperour himselfe goyng on foote, leadeth the horse by the ende of the reine of his bydle with one of his hands, and in the other of his handes he had a bryanch of a Palme tree: after this followed the rest of the Emperours Noble men and Gentlemen, with a great number of other people. In this order they went from one church to another within the castle, about the distaunce of two sightes shot: and so returned agayne to the Emperours Church, where they made an end of their seruice. Which being done, the Emperours maiestie and certaine of his noble men, went to the Pteropolitane his house to dimer, where of delicate fishes and good wyne there was no lacke.

The rest of this weeke vntill Easter day they keepe very solemnely, continuing in their houses for the most part, and vpon Sunday or Thursday the Emperour doth alwayes vse to receiue the Sacrament, and so doth most parte of his nobles.

Vpon good Friday they continue all the day in contemplation and prayers, and they vse euery yeere on good Friday to let loose a prisoner in the stead of Barrabas. The night folowing they go to the church where they sleepe vntil the next morning, & at Easter they haue the resurrection, and after euery of the Lentes they eate flesh, the next weeke folowing Friday, Saturday and all.

They haue an order at Easter which they alwayes obserue, and that is this: euery yeere against Easter to dye of colour red with Byzell a great number of egges, of which euery man and woman giueth one vnto the pyest of their Parish vpon Easter day in the morning. And moreover the common people vse to carrie in their hands one of these red egges, not onely vpon Easter day, but also thre or foure dayes after, and Gentlemen and Gentlewomen haue egges gilded which they carrie in like maner. They vse it as they say for a great loue, and in token of the resurrection, whereof they reioyce. For when two friends meete during the Easter holydayes, they come and take one another by the hand: the one of them saith, the Lord, or Christ is risen, the other answereth, it is so of a crueth, and then they kisse and exchange their egges both men and women, continuing in kissing 4. dayes together.

The 12. of Aprill being Tuesday in the Easter weeke, master Jenkinson and master Gray, and certaine other of vs Englishmen dined with the Emperour, where we were secured as we haue bene before time. And after dimer the Emperours maiestie gaue vnto master Jenkinson and vnto M. Gray, and so openly vnto euery one of vs a cuppe of meate, according to his accustomed maner, which when euery man had receiued and giuen thanks, M. Jenkinson stepped into the middle of the chamber before the Emperours maiestie, and gaue thanks to his highnes for his goodnesse vnto him extended, desiring his grace to licence him for to depart, and in like maner did M. Gray. His maiestie did not onely licence them to depart, but also graunted vnto M. Jenkinson his letters vnder his great seale, vnto all princes throughe whose dominions M. Jenkinson should haue occasion to pass, that he might the sooner & quietlier passe by meanes thereof. Which being graunted, M. Jenkinson and Gray lowly submitted themselves, thanking his maiestie. So the Emperour gaue vnto eicher of them a cup of meate to drinke, and willed them to depart at their pleasure in Gods peace.

The 14. of Aprill in the morning when M. Gray and I were ready to depart towards England, the Chancellours sent vnto vs, and willed vs to come to their office in the Chancerie, where at our comming they showed vs a great number of the Emperours ietwels, and rich robes, willing vs to marke and behold them well, to the ende that at our arriual into England, we might make report what we had seene there.

The chiefest was his maiesties crowne, being close vnder the top very faire wrought: in mine opinion, the workmanship of so much gold few men can amend. It was adorned and decked with rich and precious stones aboundantly, among the which one was a rubie, which stood a handfull higher then the top of the crowne vpon a small tier, it was as big as a good beane: the same crowne was lined with a faire blacke Sable, worth by report 40. rubbies.

We saw all his maiesties robes which were very richly set with stones, they showed vs many of the great stones of diuers kinds, but the most parte of the were breuen, in maner as they came out of the wycke, for they do moxe esteeme the greatnes of stones, then they do the proportion of them.

We sawe two goodly gowmes which were as beaute as a man could easily carrie, all set with pearles ouer & ouer the gardes of hodyers round about them were garnished with sapphires and other

When he had sufficiently perused all these things, they willed master Gray at his arrivall in

So we tooke our leaue the same time, and departed towards Vologda immediately.

The maners, vsages, and ceremonies of the Russes.

Of the Emperour.

The Emperours name in their tongue is Euan Vasiluich, that is as much to say, as John the sonne of Vasilie, and by his princely state he is called Orefara, as his predecessors haue bene before, which to interpret, is a king, that giueth not tribute to any man. And this word Orefara his maiesties interpreters, haue of late dayes interpreted to be an Emperour, so that now he is called Emperour & great Duke of all Russia, &c. Before his father they were neither called Emperours nor kings but ouely Ruesse Velike, that is to say, great Duke. And as this Emperour which now is Euan Vasiluich, doeth exceed his predecessors in name, that is, from a Duke to an Emperour, euen so much by report he doeth exceed them in stout-nes of courage and valiantnesse, and a great deale moze: for he is no moze afraid of his enemies which are not few, then the Dobbie of the larkes.

His enemies with whom he hath warres for the most part are these: Litto, Poland, Sweden, Denmarke, Lisland, the Crimmes, Nagaians, and the whole nation of the Tartarians, which are a frowe and a hardie people as any vnder the Sunne.

This Emperour is very great familiaritie, as well vnto all his nobles and Subiects, as also vnto strangers which serue him either in his warres, or in occupations: for his pleasure is that they shall dine oftentimes in the yeere in his presence, and besides that he is oftentimes abroad, eicher at one church or another, and walking with his noble men abroad. And by this meanes he is not onely beloued of his nobles and commons, but also had in great dread and feare through all his dominions, so that I thinke no prince in Christendome is moze feared of his owne then he is, nor yet better beloued. For if he bid any of his Dukes goe, they will runne, if he giue any cuill or angry word to any of them, the partie will not come into his maiesties presence againe of a long time if he woe sent for, but will saime him to be very sick, and will let the haire of his head grow very long, without eicher cutting or shauing, which is an euident token that hee is in the Emperours displeasure: for when they be in their prosperitie, they account it a shame to weare long haire, in consideration whereof, they vse to haue their heads shauen.

His maiestie heareth all complaines himselfe, and with his owne mouth giueth sentence and iudgement of all matters, and that with expedition: but religious matters he medleth not withall, but referreth them wholly vnto the Metropolitane.

His maiestie retaineth and well rewardeth all strangers that come to serue him, and especially men of warre.

Hee delighteth not greatly in hauking, hunting, or any other pastime, nor in hearing instruments or musike, but delighteth all his whole delight vpon two things. First, to serue God, as vndoubtedly he is very deuout in his religion, and the second, how to subdue and conquere his enemies.

He hath abundance of gold and siluer in his owne handes or treasure: but the most part of his treasure is a reuolue from a counter, nor gold from copper, they are so much combined therewithall, and he that is worth 2. 3. or 4. grotes, is a rich man.

Of their Religious men.

The Metropolitane is next vnto God, our Labie and S. Nicholas, accepted: for the Emperours maiestie iudgeth and affirmeth him to be of higher dignitie then himselfe: for that saith he, he is Gods spirituall officer, and I the Emperour am his temporall officer, and therefore his maiestie subiecteth himselfe vnto him in many things concerning religious matters, as in leading the Metropolitans hoste vpon Idaline Sunday, and giuing him leaue so sit in a chaire upon the 12. day, when the river Mosko was in blessing, and his maiestie standing on the ice.

All matters of religion are reformed by the Metropolitan, he heareth the causes and giueth sentence as himselfe listeth, and is authoriz'd so to doe, whether it be to whip, hang, or burne, his will must needs be fulfilled.

They haue both monkes, friers and nunnes, with a great number of great and rich monasteries, they keepe great hospitalitie, and doe relieue much pooze people day by day. I haue bene in one of the monasteries called Troietes, which is walled about with bricke very strongly like a castle, and much ordinaunce of brasse upon the walls of the same. They told me themselves that there are seuen hundred brethren of them which belong vnto that house. The most part of the lands, townes, and villages which are within fortye miles of it, belong vnto the same. They shew'd me the church, wherein were as many images as could hang about, or vpon the walls of the church round about, & euen the rooffe of the church was painted full of images. The chiefe image was of our Lady, which was garnished with gold, rubies, sapphires and other rich stones abundantly. In the middle of the church stood 12. waue capers of two parts long, and a fashome about in height, there stands a kettle full of waue with about 100. waights, wherein there is alwayes the bricke of a candle burning, as it were a lampe which goeth not out day nor night.

They shew'd mee a coffin couered with cloch of gold which stode vpon one side within the church, in which they told me lay a holy man, who neuer eate nor drinke, and yet that he liued. And they told me (supposing that I had beleued them) that hee healeth many diseases, and giueth the blind their sight, with many other miracles, but I was hard of beliefte because I saw him wrought no miracle whilest I was there.

After this they brought me into their cellers, and made me taste of diuers kinds of drinckes, both wine and beere, mead and qualle, of sundry colours and kinds, such abundance of drinke as they haue in their cellers, I doe suppose few princes haue moze, or so much at once.

Their barrels or vessels are of an vnrmeasureable bigness and size: some of them are 3. yards long and moze, and 2. yards & moze broad in their heads: they containe 6. or 7. runnes a piece: they haue none in their cellers of their owne making that are lesse then a tunne. They haue 9. or 10. great boutes which are full of those barrels which are seldeome remoued: for they haue crunckes which come downe through the rooffe of the boutes in sundry places, through which they poture the drinke downe, hauing the calke right vnder it to receiue the same, for it should be a great trouble to bring it all downe the staires.

The hospitalitie of their monasteries.

They giue bread, meat and drinke vnto all men that come to them, not onely while they are in their abbey, but also when they depart, to serue them by the way.

There are a great number of such monasteries in the realme, and the Emperours maiestie is both oftentimes from one to another of them, and lieth at them 3. or 4. dayes together.

The same monkes are as great merchants as any in the land of Russia, and doe or crupe buying and selling as much as any other men, and haue boates which passe too and fro in the rivers with merchandize from place to place where any other of their countrey doe traffique.

They eate no flesh during their liues as it is reported, but vpon Sunday, Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday, it is lawfull for them to eate egges, butter, cheese and milke, and at all times to eate fish, and after this they lead their liues.

Idolatry of the great image of the church.

They haue no preachers nor not one in all the land to instruct the people, so that there are many of the most part of the pooze in the countrey, who if one aske them how many gods there be, they will say a great many, meaning that every image which they haue is a god: for all the countrey and the Emperours maiestie himselfe, will blesse and bowe, and knocke their heads before their images, in so much that they will Erie earnestly vnto their images to helpe them to the things which they need. All men are bound by their law to haue those images in their houses, and ouer every gate in all their townes and cities are images set vp, vnto which the people bowe and bend, and knocke their heads against the ground before them: as often as they come by any church or cross they do in like manner. And when they come to any house, they blesse themselves 3. or 4. times before they will salute any man in the house.

They reckon and hold it for great sinne to touch or handle any of their images within the circle of the boord where the painting is, but they keepe them very daintely, & rich men decke them out and about, with gold, silver and stones, and hang them ouer and about with cloch of gold.

The priests are married as other men are, and weare all their garments as other men doe, except their night-cappes, which is cloch of some sadde colour, being rounde, and reaching vnto the will permit, so that it hangeth beneath their eares vpon their shoulers: their beards they neuer

They minister the Communion with bread and wine, after our order, but he breaketh the bread, and putteth it into the cuppe vnto the wine, and commonly some are partakers with them: & they take the bread out againe with a spoone together with part of the wine, and so take it themselves, and give it to others that receiue with them after the same maner.

Their ceremonies are all as they say, according to the Greeke church vled at this present day, and they allow no other religion but the Greeks, and the y: owne: and will not permit any nation but the Greeks to be buried in their sacred burialls, or churchyards.

All their churches are full of images, vnto the which the people when they assemble, doe bow and kicke their heads, as I haue before said, that some will haue knobbes vpon their foxe heads with knocking, as great as egges.

All their seruice is in the Russe tongue, and they and the common people haue no other papers but this, Ghospodi Iesus Christos esine voze ponuloi nashe. That is to say, O Lord Iesus Christ, haue of God haue mercy vpon vs: and this is their prayer, so that the most part of the learned know neither Pater noster, nor the Beliefe, nor Ten commandments, nor scarcely vnder-stand the one halfe of the seruice which is read in their churches.

Of their Baptisme.

When any child is borne, it is not baptised vntill the next Sunday, and if it chance that it be not baptised then, it must tary vntill the second Sunday after the birth, and it is lawfull for them to take as many Godfathers and Godmothers as they will, the more the better.

When they go to the Church, the midwife goeth foremost, carrying the child, and the Godfathers and Godmothers follow into the midst of the Church, where there is a small table ready set, and on it an earthen pot full of warme water, about the which the Godfathers and Godmothers, with the childe, sette themselves: then the clerke giueth vnto euery of them a small waxe candle burning, then connecth the pyell, and becometh to say certaine words, which the Godfathers and Godmothers must answer word for word, among which one is, that the child shall forsake the deuil, and as that name is pronounced, they must all spit at the word as often as it is repeated. Then he bles-seth the water which is in the pot, and doth breath ouer it: then he taketh all the candles which the gallies haue, and holding them all in one hand leeteth part of them droppe into the water, and then gathery euery one his candle againe, and when the water is sanctified, he taketh the child and holdeth it in a small tubbe, and one of the Godfathers taketh the pot with warme water, and pouereth it all vpon the childes head.

After this he hath many more ceremonies, as anointing eares and eyes with spittle, and making certaine crosses with oyle vpon the backe, head, and byests of the child: then taking the child in his armes, carrieth it to the images of S. Nicholas, and our Lady, or, ant speaketh vnto the images, desiring them to take charge of the child, that he may liue, and beleuee as a Christian man or woman ought to doe, with many other words. Then comming backe from the images, he taketh a paye of lberres and clippeth the yooing and tender hayres of the childes head, in three
